Court and Spark/Joni Mitchell Asylum

Well folks, the little lady has done it again. Elite production and all, she still comes through pure and strong. Court and Spark, the latest from Joni Mitchell, is one of the best phonograph records you'll buy this year. Joni has words for everyone, from songs about love, and from those indiscreet glimpses of the world in which she has lived. Her life has been difficult, having started work as a folk singer with her husband, the lesser half of the duo. As Joni's career began to take form, the marriage began to dissipate. Early in her bid as a singer, she played an underscored role to such popular entertainers as Judy Collins and Joan Baez, headliners whose dominance of the music scene is impossible to dispute. Court and Spark is an autobiographical statement, and will grab the old ears right by the lobes, keeping them glued until the last vibration has tingled the speaker coils.

Joni's guests include Cheech & Chong, David Crosby, Graham Nash, Robbie Robertson, and Larry Carlton, to name a few. The efforts of all blast through eleven numbers, of which all but one are original re-emphasizing prominence as a singer-songwriter, modern poet who of words is classic song "Free Man In I

PLANET WAVES

Dylan's first album of new material in over three years poses a bit of a problem: the music hardly elicits any response at all from me. I'll admit I didn't like it at first, so I took it slow, hoping it would grow on me. I gave it more chances when I heard good things of it, but I honestly can't see what those people are talking about. I knew something was wrong when I had to force myself to listen to it when all else failed; I didn't look forward to hearing more of it and I still don't. A more dangerous sign I've never known about any record by anyone.

What I sense more than anything else in Dylan's new songs is strain, often verging on desperation. Tension plays a large part in the creation of any art, but the kind of tension I hear in the fragmented "Dirge" is forced and unnatural. "Going Going Gone" is much like it, as its urgency is only discomforting; if, as Bob says, he's "gotta cut loose" he doesn't show it here or anywhere else on Planet Waves.

And perhaps that's the key. Dylan's great songs came out of a compulsion to say something – he had to get it out of his system, so we got pieces like "Desolation Row" and "Ballad of a Thin Man." He may now feel he has something to say, but that's not the same a it, so we g "Tough Mama" two of unmemorable heard in this

1973, Crazy Crow Music...J. Mitchell

Joni's affection for ripping apart her own industry has long been evident in her work. She hates commercialism, and yet finds her own products the subject of that dread disease, with the results often appearing as schizophrenia on record.

Despite her own restraint in dealing with her importance as an artist, she has outweighed the importance of both Judy Collins and Joan Baez, with little or no effort whatsoever. Joni was the last to arrive on the recording scene, but was the first to stress her own importance with meaty, original compositions. Only recently have either Collins or Baez performed a bulk of original effort. Joni picked up on the enthusiasm when the stand-bys were groping for a second wind. The combination of her performing and writing talents have provided listeners with an intellectuall of the recording industry, who may still be taken on a gut level, as well. The music is layered, and open to exploration on a variety of magnitudes, much in the tradition of the Shakespearian plays. Something for everyone.

The best from the album include "Help Me," "Free Man In Paris," "Raised On Robbery," "People's Parties," "Car On A Hill," "Just Like This Train," and "Trouble Child." This new album is from an artist...a Picasso of word portraiture and emotion. It may not be an album that will make you smile, but it will certainly 'court and spark' those intimacies within your heart, and give them life.

Hot Cakes/Carly Simon
Elektra

The influence of James Taylor's music on his wife, Carly Simon, is undeniably present in Hot Cakes. Carly started out as the revolutionary little daughter of publishing king Simon, of Simon and Schuster. Her lyricism and approach had all the impact of an earlier folk spokeswoman, Janis Ian. Carly's work followed many of the guidelines of Ian's sole hit single, "Society's Child." Carly's first commercial attempt, "That's Not The Way It's Supposed To Be" was a primary attack on a splitting family structure, through the eyes of a daughter in love.

Since that beginning, Carly's work has drifted farther and farther from the hard reality of a troubled world. Her newer numbers are compromising that early sentiment with a temperament geared to marriage, babies, and growing old. From this point of view, the music is a bit stuffy.

From another point of view, this is Carly's best work. It hasn't been molded into a pattern of commercialism, which easily could have resulted in the aftermath of "You're So Vain." The music is tight, boasts fine musicians (including James Taylor), and takes on a low-key nonchalance which is comfortable and sincere. There are some fun numbers, such as her duet with Jim on "Mockingbird", some cute numbers, such as her own thoughts recorded in "Think I'm Gonna Have A Baby," and some background numbers, represented best by "Older Sister." Producer Richard Perry is at the helm, again, and if you like Carly Simon, you'll love Hot Cakes. Eat 'em up!!

'... Best Of Boston Boogie ...'

This Sunday at 9 p.m. in MAT dining hall, the UVM Lacrosse Club will feature "some of the best of Boston Boogie" at the "Saint Paddy's Day Rock and Rolling Lacrosse Ball." In concert the night before, the Dead End Kids will travel from Keene, New Hampshire, to set feet flying at UVM. Then, it's back to Boston for more club dates while they wait for Sha-Na-Na to hit New England in April. The Dead End Kids are scheduled to open most of the New England shows on Sha-Na-Na's national tour.

The Kids have also played with James Montgomery, and although it seems they're doing a little too well for a first year band (formed in January, 1973) the Dead End Kids promise not to be a flash-in-the-pan sensation. It's taken them six solid years to carve their niche in the world of rock and roll, and depth and experience like that doesn't die quickly.

The foursome started out six years ago as a six-some (the Dawn Breakers) playing entirely original material for high school dances. Their unique hornsy style would have certainly developed into a recording contract had they turned a deaf ear to their paying public who clamored for the "AM hits." Unfortunately, the group's individualism could not cater to public demand and the band split apart during the attempt.

However, three members of the original six, Glen Moran, Steve Satter and Bob O'Donnell soon locked in with five other artists and formed "Park Street Under." Again, horns were featured in the new group's high energy music, and with the "Dawn Breakers" magic of Moran, Satter, and O'Donnell, "Park Street Under" ripped apart the Boston clubs and coffee houses. It wasn't long before Lordly and Dame – Boston's largest talent agency – offered to promote the promising band and began booking them on the road as opening acts for the big name bands. Before "Park Street Under" dissolved in January of '73, they played with Edgar Winter, J. Geils, the Doobie Brothers, the James Gang, Canned Heat, Spirit, Dreams, the Rascals, Sha-Na-Na and James Montgomery.

When the band finally broke up, the organ player went with the Chambers Brothers, and everyone else went for the good money in the recording studios, accompanying recording artists who needed strong musical back-up for their albums. Needless to say, their list of album credits is impressive. However, the undying trio of Moran, Satter and O'Donnell couldn't stay away from the stage for long. They picked up a bass guitarist – Steve Genereaux – and the Dead End Kids were born.

Album Review:
Dylan's Planet Waves Lacks Emotional Drive

by Doug Collette

PLANET WAVES

Dylan's first album of new material in over three years poses a bit of a problem: the music hardly elicits any response at all from me. I'll admit I didn't like it at first, so I took it slow, hoping it would grow on me. I gave it more chances when I heard good things of it, but I honestly can't see what those people are talking about. I know something was wrong when I had to force myself to listen to it when all else failed. I didn't look forward to hearing more of it and I still don't. A more dangerous sign I've never known about any record by anyone.

What I sense more than anything else in Dylan's new songs is strain, often verging on desperation. Tension plays a large part in the creation of any art, but the kind of tension I hear in the fragmented "Dirge" is forced and unnatural. "Going Going Gone" is much like it, as its urgency is only discomforting; if, as Bob says, he's "gotta cut loose" he doesn't show it here or anywhere else on Planet Waves.

And perhaps that's the key. Dylan's great songs came out of a compulsion to say something – he had to get it out of his system, so we got pieces like "Desolation Row" and "Ballad of a Thin Man." He may now feel he has something to say, but that's not the same as having to say it, so we get things like "Tough Mama" and "Hazel," two of the most unmemorable songs I've heard in this still-young year.

I don't mean any of this as a comparative analysis of Dylan's compositions and I'm not using his earlier songs as standards because I've got my own standards. I don't adjust them for the particular artist I'm discussing, something which I'm afraid too many will do for Dylan. I'm not prepared to do that because that would be doing both him and me a disservice.

It's no secret that Dylan leads a fairly serene life. Nashville Skyline was ample testimony to that, as was much of New Morning and if Dylan flirted with cliche in songs like "To Be Alone With You" or "If Not For You," it sounded refreshing coming from the same man who regurgitated "Sad-Eyed Lady of the Lowlands," a colossus that, even though it threatened to collapse under its own weight, still managed to be cohesive.

I for one don't need to be convinced that Dylan loves his wife, but the despairing way he performs "Wedding Song" hints that he's nearly at a loss to get across how much she means to him, an admirable sentiment that also takes shape in the folksy "On A Night Like This" (which sounds like a minor Robbie Robertson tune) and the ever-so-staid "You Angel You." Dylan's said about all that needs to be said on that subject – we do not need, of all things, another John Lennon or even a reasonable facsimile.

I don't believe how faceless the Band sounds as they accompany Dylan. It could be they were intimidated, consciously or unconsciously, by Dylan's presence and overcompensated to make sure that Bob was the one in focus. In any case, there's none of the appetizing playing that graced nearly all of Dylan's earlier lp's. And the singing? God, it sounds like Dylan's clumsily fighting to stay in the right register and he ends up creating a ghastly parody of the unorthodox style he once made so expressive.

I'm especially disappointed that Dylan and the Band didn't put more time and effort into making this album. It's bad enough to include something as soporific as "Forever Young," but two versions? The uptempo one sounds like a representation of that stage when the musicians hadn't quite settled on a definite arrangement and, in fact, most of Planet Waves sounds similarly transient. There's magic involved in cutting tunes spontaneously, but if the spirit's not there – and it's not here except in flashes – it falls flat.

Dylan said in his recent Rolling Stone interview that he "still gets that spark" and I'll grant him that because I heard him blaze his way through a two-hour performance on his recent tour. But a truly vital composer can't rely so heavily on material six or eight years old to kindle the spark into flame. If Bob Dylan is to remain a provocative figure in more than the nominal sense and for more than what he's done in the past he's going to have to produce music that moves us as well as him. Planet Waves, as emotionally diffuse and lacking in impact as it is, is not that kind of music.

S.A. Poll Policy Criticized

by Bruce Maddern

At Tuesday's S. A. Senate meeting, a financial policy for the S. A. was adopted. The new policy is a written organization of criteria and regulations from which the Financial Committee can work. Previously, there was a great deal of question as to exactly what the actual financial policy was.

Other highlights of the meeting were a discussion of a new University Forum and of the presidential elections, especially in relation to flaws the senators noticed in the election procedure.

Following the taking of attendance, Sig Heller, S. A. president, informed the Senate of a letter he received from Dr. Roth of the Faculty Senate. It concerned the formation of a University Forum. Heller said it would be an area where all segments of the university could get together to discuss problems such as the philosophy four or the four-day week. It would "present the flow of ideas that is needed," according to Heller, between faculty, students, employees and administration. No action was taken.

A "Student Survival Handbook" is going to be printed according to Evelyn Liberty of the Communications Committee. It would include the Green Pages, university rules and regulations as well as services on and off campus open to students. At present they are looking for workers to help assemble the book.

Discussion about the presidential election started arguments about the procedure used for this and other elections. The question arose when Chris Milanesi, secretary for elections, said he had to pay the students in order to man the polls Tuesday. Heller claimed he would not pay the workers because he thought it was "ridiculous." Arguments were raised concerning Heller's jurisdiction and it was quickly voted on that the workers should be paid and that Heller's position was unjustified.

Other problems were found with the election. No accurate means of providing legal voting were instituted. Cross-checking of names and the possibility of a student voting more than once were the two chief factors mentioned. Dick Cassidy, a candidate, stated, "it's too late now to do anything" and "let's not tell the whole world." Several senators said they wouldn't blame candidates for contesting the election.

At this point, amid argument and rhetoric, a student addressed the Senate and remmented that "this Senate is really disgusting." She made no other comment.

Among other less explosive business was the recognition of the Wildlife Society and the tabling of recognition of the Table Tennis Club and Hunter Collegiate Council of Nursing.

Following the meeting, Heller commented that the Senate wasn't disgusting. He followed by saying that the senators have "a lack of interest."

The Rathskeller:

Frozen Mousse – Tsk, Tsk

by Peter Campbell

Last Saturday we dined at the Rathskeller, a well-known eatery downtown. A "rathskeller," according to our friend, Mr. Webstan, was a restaurant, traditionally located below the town halls in Germany. There, the local burghers would gather to discuss the day's business over their favorite brew.

This rathskeller apparently maintains that bourgeois atmosphere; and we are told that it is a favorite lunch-stop for the local businessmen. Although (Puritan mores being what they are) it is not in the basement of Burlington's town hall, the Rathskeller is just west, across the park on the corner of St. Paul St. and College St. in back of Plantasia.

You walk down a charming brick lane to the front of what looks like nothing more than a functional brick building. One would never guess a restaurant lay inside, but it does.

At the top of the stairs the owner's son woodenly but amiably took our coats, and we descended to a dark, simply decorated brick-walled interior – a real basement – where we were graciously seated.

We decided to have wine immediately. The list was almost entirely Taylor New York wines at about $3.50 a bottle, as well as a few more expensive French wines. We tried a Taylor rose, and found it acceptable.

Sipping, we looked around to see what sort of crowd comes to the Rathskeller on a Saturday night, and found mostly small families and middle-aged couples. Only one other table had college students. They were all spruced up – on a very crucial and nervous night out, we decided. The atmosphere was, on the whole, reserved. Again, we took note of the sparse decor, sparse when compared to many other Burlington restaurants of which many lean toward a fin de siecle French boudoir, with a lot of plastic underneath. The Rathskeller was a refreshing change in that aspect.

The service was so smooth and efficient that we hardly noticed our waitress, a lady of indeterminate age. But she was always there when we needed her.

The meal was leisurely. The food was as unpretentious as the atmosphere, but it could have been better. We were presented with eight or nine meat and seafood entrees, from roast duck at $4.95 to the sirloin for $7.95. With an eye for the unusual, we chose two seafood dishes, Boston stuffed shrimp at $5.95 and lobster Newburgh for a dollar more.

The list of appetizers was generous. The sauteed mushrooms and the onion soup which we chose were both delicious. (We also glanced longingly at our neighbors' table, where some tasty-looking shrimp cocktails were being served.)

The main fare was slightly disappointing. The size of the portions just barely justified their place at the heart of the meal. The lobster Newburgh was acceptable but a little bland, while the stuffed shrimp was begging for more sherry to bring out the flavor. The mixed vegetables, served with a potato or fries (rice would have been more appropriate), were excellent, as were the salad and bread.

The desserts were close to a fiasco. From a choice of cakes and puddings we selected the cheesecake and chocolate mousse. The cheesecake was decent, but that frozen blog of chocolate they tried to pass off for mousse looked and tasted more like one of those chemical frozen pies from the supermarket. The "cream" on top was clearly artificial. And – tsk, tsk, – real mousse should be chilled, not frozen.

We decided, that on a scale of none to five, the Rathskellar would get a three point rating. They were weak on the seafood, but that is not unusual in Vermont. We hear their meat is fine. The mousse alone unforgivable! – accounted for one point less. However, the service and atmosphere were good and the price moderate, about twenty dollars with wine for two – minus the tip.

The Rathskeller is open for lunch at 11:30 to 2, and open for dinner from 4:30 to 9. An excellent bar is open from 11:30 in the morning on.

College-Business Symposium Open To All

Attention upper classmen: the Greater Vermont Association in conjunction with the UVM Business Administration Department is sponsoring its second college-business symposium. What is a college-business symposium? Is it an opportunity for college students to exchange ideas with people of the business community, not only business people from Vermont but representatives from national organizations.

This year's program will be held Wednesday April 17 at the Ramada Inn, South Burlington. The program will consist of a morning series of short presentations, consisting of the following: 1) Dr. John T. Fey, President of the National Life Insurance Co. of Vermont and past president of UVM will discuss "What Role Does Profit Play in Our Economy?", 2) Louis Reder, Vermont General Manager of New England Telephone Company, will speak on the topic of "What Does Business Expect of Today's College Graduate?" and 3) John Hunter, Jr., President of Vermont National Bank will discuss "Economic Growth and Environmental Quality," a hot issue in Vermont. Following these short presentations, student participants will form discussion groups where they will have the opportunity to ask and answer questions. Luncheon will be followed by a key note speaker and a panel discussion on "The Energy Crisis and the Oil Industry." The panel will be made up of persons representing a cross-section of views on the energy crisis and the oil industry. The list of panelists is not yet complete, but the possibilities include Congressman Richard Mallary, Ned Pettengill, a local independent oil and gas distributor and dealer, a representative from a major international oil company, and a major manufacturing figure.

This is a free event. However, because space is limited and students from all Vermont colleges will be invited, the number able to attend from UVM is limited. Interested students should contact the Business Administration Department, Room 301 Votey or 656-4015, Tuesday through Friday 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. by Tuesday, March 19, to make reservations which will be filled on a first-come, first-served basis.

Elms

The drawing announcing the winners of the Dutch Elm Raffle will be held at Billings on Friday, March 15 at 1:30 p.m.

Winners will be able to pick up their prizes at the drawing.

Chile Experiences...

mines antagonized the United States. The US had been the largest investor and loaner. Loans decreased from 250 million dollars to 20 million a year and were no longer interest-free after Allende was elected. The US also used its influence to discourage investors or loaners from investing in Chile. The military was the only aid that increased. Chilean's economy was in a chaotic situation. About 40 per cent of the budget was spent just for the interest on foreign debts!

The trucker's strike brought the economic situation to a head when the military came in and took over. When asked the number of people he thought were killed, Plankey said it probably ranged from 5-2500 and about 5-2000 interned. The discussion then got off Chile and into religion where Plankey then related "The socialist system has more Christian values than the capitalist system."

Ray Plankey is now living in Burlington giving talks on Chile and also on Church unification.

We challenge you.

Our Officer Selection Officers are looking for a few good college men—maybe 3 out of 100—who will make good Marine officers. If you're one of them, we'll give you a chance to prove it during summer training at Quantico, Virginia.

Our program is Platoon Leaders Class, PLC. With ground, air and law options. You might even qualify for up to $2,700 to help you through college. But if money is all you're looking for, don't waste your time.

The challenge is leadership. If you want it, work for it. If you've got it, show us. It's one hell of a challenge. But we're looking for one hell of a man.

Dr. Maxwell McCormack

Fraterniti

Editor's Note: There will be an opposing viewpoint next week.

by Margo Howland

"Fraternities are an important component of the University from an educational and a practical standpoint," declared Dr. Maxwell McCormack in a recent Cynic interview.

Dr. McCormack, Associate Professor of Forestry, is the advisor to Fraternity Forum and a brother of Sigma Nu, University of Maine.

"Why should a fraternity be here? From a practical standpoint, it's the idea that the students are directly involved in managing the entire physical plant. They have the ultimate responsibility up to the last breaking point; that you don't get renting an apartment or living in the residence halls.

"You the students make the decision. You handle the budgets; you handle at least in the fraternity houses things like ordering the food, planning the menus along with the cook; simple little things like repairing a broken window the maintenance of the entire physical plant."

"The house officers get a practical type of experience that involves management and public relations and handling people that you can't get in a club, you can't get in a dorm, you can't get anywhere else. So from a getting a maximum return on your educational investment, there's something in a fraternity that you're not going to get anywhere else in the university."

Educational Value

"Fraternities provide educational benefits and the only place where local business people, community leaders, alumni of the University, parents, students, faculty and administration can all come together for 'common-level' communication. These high-value educational gatherings can be informal and often occur spontaneously."

Dr. McCormack mentioned the relations of fraternities with alumni. "Another question you can ask is at Homecoming. This is an essential part of the operation of a university. Without alumni and alumni support, where are we? How many alumni come back at Homecoming and go back to their old dorm sections? It's even a financial value to the university, because this could be an important part of the securing of funding from interested alumni to support the university."

Dr. McCormack feels that fraternities are too often being taken for granted:

"It's almost like the forest resources which our society takes for granted. I don't think they recognize the educational values; the things they're going to gain by living in a fraternity house that they're not going to get any other way. So why in the world don't they want to get more for their money?"

Many students aren't aware of this, Dr. McCormack pointed out: "If you asked a guy in a fraternity why he was in it, in many cases he would not be able to give you a direct answer. The best test of a fraternity man is that he can go out and one-to-one basis someone that [illegible] house will be while I'm not one in the mysticisms of brotherhood or sis do see a fraternal opportunity for a people with simila to live together."

The main fare was slightly disappointing. The size of the portions just barely justified their place at the heart of the meal. The lobster Newburgh was acceptable but a little bland, while the stuffed shrimp was begging for more sherry to bring out the flavor. The mixed vegetables, served with a potato or rice (rice would have been more appropriate), were excellent, as were the salad and bread.

The desserts were close to a fiasco. From a choice of cakes and puddings we selected the cheesecake and chocolate mousse. The cheesecake was decent, but that frozen blog of chocolate they tried to pass off for mousse looked and tasted more like one of those chemical frozen pies from the supermarket. The "cream" on top was clearly artificial. And tsk, tsk, real mousse should be chilled, not frozen.

We decided, that on a scale of none to five, the Rathskellar would get a three point rating. They were weak on the seafood but that is not unusual in Vermont. We hear their meat is fine. The mousse, alone unforgiveable!, accounted for one point less. However, the service and atmosphere were good and the price moderate, about twenty dollars with wine for two minus the tip.

The discussion then got off Chile and into religion where Plankey then related "The socialist system has more Christian values than the capitalist system."

Ray Plankey is now living in Burlington giving talks on Chile and also on Church unification.

Fraternities Play A Vital Role In The University

Editor's Note: There will be an opposing viewpoint next week.

by Margo Howland

"Fraternities are an important component of the University — from an educational and a practical standpoint," declared Dr. Maxwell McCormack in a recent Cynic interview.

Dr. McCormack, Associate Professor of Forestry, is the advisor to Fraternity Forum and a brother of Sigma Nu, University of Maine.

"Why should a fraternity be here? From a practical standpoint, it's the idea that the students are directly involved in managing the entire physical plant. They have the ultimate responsibility up to the last breaking point, that you don't get renting an apartment or living in the residence halls.

"You the students make the decision. You handle the budgets; you handle at least in the fraternity houses things like ordering the food, planning the menus along with the cook; simple little things like repairing a broken window the maintenance of the entire physical plant."

"The house officers get a practical type of experience that involves management and public relations and handling people that you can't get in a club, you can't get in a dorm, you can't get anywhere else. So from a getting a maximum return on your educational investment, there's something in a fraternity that you're not going to get anywhere else in the university."

Educational Value

"Fraternities provide educational benefits and the only place where local business people, community leaders, alumni of the University, parents, students, faculty and administration can all come together for 'common-level' communication. These high-value educational gatherings can be informal and often occur spontaneously."

Dr. McCormack mentioned the relations of fraternities with alumni. "Another question you can ask is at Homecoming. This is an essential part of the operation of a university. Without alumni and alumni support, where are we? How many alumni come back at Homecoming and go back to their old dorm sections? It's even a financial value to the university, because this could be an important part of the securing of funding from interested alumni to support the university."

Dr. McCormack feels that fraternities are too often being taken for granted:

"It's almost like the forest resources which our society takes for granted. I don't think they recognize the educational values; the things they're going to gain by living in a fraternity house that they're not going to get any other way. So why in the world don't they want to get more for their money?"

The best test of a fraternity man is that he can go out and in a one-to-one basis convince someone that living in the house will be worth while. I'm not one to believe in the mysticisms of the great brotherhood or sisterhood. I do see a fraternity as an opportunity for a group of people with similar interests to live together."

Problems and Challenges

Fraternities provide not only some of the practical aspects of running the house, and the educational aspects of the experience, but also that of teaching pledges and newer brothers, according to McCormack.

"The basic problem is that we've had this break in continuity somewhere along the way. And, the people who are involved in the system don't know what to do. They don't know what they're there for, and if they do begin to recognize a function they're not sure how to operate. But, here is a living opportunity and educational experience for students to participate in solving a problem. Where else can you get better experience in education than by being directly involved in this thing?

"There are some challenges here that are the same challenges that you're going to have to face up to — all through life. I really get very concerned about this because I think that it's something that's here as an educational experience that we can't afford to lose."

Faculty-Fraternity Relations Strained

Some of the fraternities at the University of Vermont can claim a brother among the faculty and staff members of the University of Vermont, whether or not they were from the chapter here. President Andrews is a Phi Delta Theta. Dr. McCormack, as already mentioned, is a Sigma Nu, Chaplain Odie is a Kappa Sigma. Others, like Bill Root, director of Student Activities, come from a fraternity not among those at UVM. But there are a number of faculty who are fraternity members, yet avoid contact with fraternities as much as possible. Dr. McCormack was asked to comment.

"I don't understand this. I don't hesitate to identify with it, because I figure if I thought I was ever going to be ashamed of it I wouldn't have joined in the first place!" he replied.

In speculating on the fraternity-faculty estrangement, Dr. McCormack stated:

"I think that some of the administrators are a little afraid to openly identify because they don't want to be accused by some other identifiable group in the university community: this other group might accuse them of showing favoritism to their fraternity or to fraternities in general." He thought that the fear of an anti-fraternity backlash was real to some of the members of the administration, and gave an example of why this might be so:

"One of the strongest fraternity members I've ever known, who happened to be the Dean of Men at the University of Maine when I was there, was a brother from our chapter. And everyone would always say, 'Boy, you guys have got it made. You'll never be on social probation or anything else because you've got the Dean of Men, a brother from your house.' And that wasn't so, because he was consequently harder on us than on 'any' other house!"

He also attributed the problem to what was commonly referred to as the "generation gap." "I've been told by other faculty members that I have no business going down to a fraternity house, and certainly should not go through the door unless I was invited or was previously announced! This idea of not going to a fraternity house unless you've been announced or invited doesn't fit in with my philosophies. It is my opinion that we have a relatively low percentage of faculty members who were ever fraternity members or at least active fraternity members. This is part of the problem," he added.

Improving Student-Faculty Relations

Dr. McCormack stressed a need for better communication and for a coordinator of fraternity affairs.

"We need somebody like Dean Gribbons or Bill Root who has a definite committment of time and is knowledgeable in coordinating fraternity affairs.

He cited the recent all-Greek student-faculty social as one step towards improvement of student-faculty relations. Another idea was that of holding class discussions in the home-like atmosphere of fraternity and sorority houses.

Filling a Campus Need

Fraternities serve as an outlet for other needs on campus as well. Dr. McCormack believes. Fraternities could concentrate on positive projects that relate to the University. A well-known example is that of the fraternity men on Rescue. The broomball tourney at Fiji and the keg parties are also seen as fulfilling a need.

The Future of Fraternities

Dr. McCormack is optimistic about the condition of UVM's fraternities. He cited manpower shortages as the outstanding immediate problem.

In conclusion, he summed up the necessary goals for the continuation of fraternities and their importance:

"I think if you're going to have the full educational experience available here at the University of Vermont, we have to retain the fraternities. It has to be done by the men inside. I think we need an expression of support from the University and we need to alleviate the fears of faculty identifying with fraternities.

"I think we have to destroy this idea that it's a mysterious goings-on behind closed doors. I think that there's a lot of good going on that people don't realize, and we have to own up to it, and let people know that we are making positive contributions. Some of the best experiences I had as a student were because I was an active fraternity member, and some of the very best experiences I've had as a faculty member are because I'm still involved with fraternities."

As some of these inequities of being part of Vermont hockey are viewed it is important to remember that the team is a championship team. The students have continually supported this championship effort. As the season closes one can only hope for the best in the N.I.H.T. and in the initial attempt to forge to the top of Division I next year.

should be the last way for funding anything," even though "it is the easiest." Furthermore, in the past raises in tuition have never been accompanied with substantial explanations. One of the union's priorities is an unveiling of the mysteries surrounding budgetary procedure. However, this lack of communication between the administration and the faculty should not cause a rift between this latter group and students.

"Students and faculty are the primary components of a university," Joffee said. An institution of higher education should focus on building and improving this relationship, thereby raising the quality of education.

UVM Graduate Talks On Experiences In Chile

by Randy Jensen

Ray Plankey, a Marykoll missionary to Chile, presented his talk, Experiences in Chile to a rather small audience recently in the MAT Lounge. The lecture was part of the ACE (Alternative Center of Education) series that Paul Stonely (area coordinator) has instituted at MAT.

A 1953 UVM graduate, Ray Plankey has spent the last 11 years as a lay missionary helping the poor of Chile to achieve a better lifestyle and more political freedom. He left Chile a month before the present military junta took over in the coup of 1971.

A film was shown with a discussion immediately afterward. The film dealt with a campemento, a slum area and its experiment with socialism. The campemento, (Ranquil), began when 30 homeless families squatted on church land. Hundreds of families later joined them in this experiment. A new community was being raised, based on the principles of Castro's government. Major decisions were made by the workers or a director elected by them. Provisions like food and housing would be based on need rather than ability to pay.

The political force behind Ranquil was MIR. MIR was, and still is, a militant far left political group, who desired a socialist government in Chile. Though they supported Allende, they were not part of the leftist coalition which formed Allende's government.

The film followed Ranquil through a year of progress. Ranquil became a community run by the workers for the benefit of the workers. Among the accomplishments achieved were a school, a free clinic, a police force, and other necessary institutions important to a community's survival.

It was shown that a community could be run by people whom others thought to be inept in running their own affairs. The workers were so successful that they were constant participants in demonstrations for the poor in downtown Santiago.

After the showing of the film, a general discussion on Chile followed. The downfall of Allende was prominent in the discussion and Ray Plankey gave his thoughts on this topic.

Plankey felt that Allende's socialist policy was one of the primary reasons for the coup, because of its alienation of some important people. The "alienated" were largely of the middle and upper classes who had a lot to lose under Allende. Companies with large holdings in Chile and the US government also felt slighted.

Before Allende came to power, 15 large companies controlled over 100 other companies and a large percentage of the purchasing power. These companies manufactured goods mainly for a luxury market. The poor were forced to go without basic commodities because the modes of production were for the rich rather than a wide market including the poor. Profits were gained by only a few people while the general populace was still living in squalid poverty.

Allende also broke up the large landowners' holdings, giving the land to the peasants for their own benefit. He nationalized many companies and redirected their goals toward people rather than profits. The economic priorities were rearranged from a capitalist view to a more socialist one.

One of the large foreign companies that Allende nationalized was the US owned copper mines (Caracop). Under a complicated nationalization plan included in the Chilean constitution, no compensation was given. (The Chilean plan figured the value of the companies and subtracted any excess profits (over 12 per cent over the past 15 years.) It was calculated that Conscop would owe Chile 400 million dollars according to this plan. Chile, therefore felt justified for not giving any compensation.

The consequences of Allende's actions were fatal to his government and its socialist programs. Opponents to Allende (and there were many) did everything in their power to thwart Allende. Participation in the black market was probably the most harmful aspect of their opposition. The black market drove prices to uncontrollable inflationary limits. Shortages of basic commodities were the direct result of the black market.

Plankey added that there were several other reasons for the economic problems and the subsequent coup. When Allende came into power, he raised wages, but controlled high prices. Production couldn't keep up with the increased consumption (due to the increased purchasing power of the working class). Shortages became even more prevalent.

According to Plankey, nationalization was disastrous to Chile's economy. Foreign investors avoided Chile fearing that their holdings might be taken over by the Chilean government. More importantly, the nationalization of the copper application is reviewed.

Vermont Resident ....

Residency is another complex matter that out-of-staters find confusing. According to Dean Powers "residency requirements are different for different things." For instance, a student can become a resident and vote after only three months in Vermont, but to be a Vermonter for educational purposes it takes a year. This is probably the most misunderstood thing by students when applying for in-state residency.

Admissions must constantly keep the Vermont taxpayer and student in mind. The state will provide about 11½ million dollars for UVM, and a main function of that money is to make it cheaper for Vermont residents to go to UVM. "The moral issue," says Dean Powers, "is not to rip off the Vermont taxpayer."

Requirements for in-state residency have been relaxed over the years. Not too long ago it was "once an out-of-stater, always an out-of-stater" in terms of student quahfication. Now that has changed and many out-of-state students apply for in-state residency.

A significant change in eligibility was the lowering of the age of majority to 18 in 1971. Many more students were eligible and applications rose slightly, but not dramatically. Dean Powers related "We didn't know what to expect in terms of applications. The first year there was a large hunk of students who were all at once eligible. This increase is now beginning to level off."

About 600-700 applications were processed a year, but no figures are available in how many were accepted. It is unlikely that regulations for residency will be relaxed in the future. UVM and other colleges are reluctant to broaden the number of applicants accepted. The main reasoning behind this is that out-of-state tuitions funds are important in keeping colleges (especially UVM) afloat financially. However, residency laws have been challenged in the courts and continued modifications will have to be made in light of court decisions.

VISTA-Peace Corps

The recruiting team for VISTA and the Peace Corps will once again be on campus on March 20 and 21. The visit once again will be an informational one. Interviews will be held in the placement office at Mansfield House and while these are occurring, there will also be a display in Billings.

The Billings Center Governing Board will sponsor its second Billings Bedlam on Friday night April 5.

Photography Contest

The Cynic announces the "Fourth Annual Cynic Photography Contest." The rules are as follows:

1. The contest is open to all students of the University of Vermont who are amateurs. (Amateurs will be considered those people who do not support themselves by taking pictures.)
2. The pictures will be divided into the three following categories: faces, landscaping, and other subjects. The category of other subjects will include any picture not included in the categories of faces and landscapes.
3. All photographs will be black and white and will be approximately 8 by 10 inches. There is no limit to the number of photographs that each photographer may submit.
4. The pictures submitted will be the property of the Vermont Cynic which will have the consent of the photographer to publish them in the newspaper.

6. The pictures may have been taken at any time, past or present.
7. Pictures entered in the Fourth Annual Cynic Photography Contest could not have been entered in any other photography contest sponsored by the Cynic.
8. Photographs will be judged on print quality and composition by a board of judges.
9. The board of judges will consist of Wynn Gold of the Student Photography Service, Mike Hill of the University Photo Service, and Gene Peroni of the Living and Learning Center. The judges will be ineligible to enter the contest.

14. The winner in each category will receive $25.00.
15. All questions should be referred directly to the Cynic office in Billings, 658-4911.

UVM's Psychology Club Revitalized

For the past few years UVM's Psychology Club has led an inconspicuous life on the lines of a faded charter. Last Thursday, however, an enthusiastic group of students began planning a series of programs to revitalize the organization. The meeting was informal and a broad range of activities were discussed. Eventually the club hopes to involve the more than 500 psych majors on campus. For those who missed the meeting the following is a short recap of what took place:

Both the students and faculty at John Dewey Hall have been aware of the need for greater student feedback on curriculum formulation; with this in mind Liz James was elected to serve on the Psych Undergraduate Studies Committee. Students with any suggestions or gripes are encouraged to get in touch with her. Liz will be working closely with Mark Kessler, Linda Rodd, and Bruce Kapp in reviewing curriculum changes for next year. They can work effectively only if students make their wishes known. Also, Paul Mazanson and Barbara Nash were elected to serve on the Dean's Advisory Committee. Feel free to contact any of these people.

Many Psych majors are saying that they are not aware of all the many different activities going at John Dewey Hall. It is here that the Psych Club has a special responsibility to its members. As an academic forum it will bring together students whose interests and experiences differ widely. The Club hopes to provide the wine and cheese, if the students will provide the lively conversation. Extending this same theme, efforts are underway to establish a symposium on "the Jungians vs. the Behaviorists." The presentations promise to be interesting and exciting. Also students are encouraged to present papers on any research that might be of special interest to the group. Such an exchange of ideas should prove to be both enjoyable and enlightening.

Still in the planning stage is the suggestion that the club provide information on summer job and graduate opportunities to all psych majors. This may be done through a newsletter. If you're interested in knowing more about these activities, take a couple of hours off from the books and come over to 314 John Dewey Hall, tonight, March 14, at 7:30. All psych majors are encouraged to attend.

What's it like being twenty-two and devoting all your time to one thing? To Bobbie Levitt, figure skating pro, the rewards are great. She spends days, nights, and weekends teaching skating to hundreds of people. She rushes from UVM to St. Albans to Essex to Leddy Park and yet manages to give each student the feeling that she has not spread herself too thin. How does she do it?

"I love skating, I love teaching, and I love kids." This is apparent to anyone who has had her as a teacher. It is obvious also to anyone who has watched her on the ice with a student, devoting herself completely to each turn of the hip and blade. Each person learns in his or her own way. Skating is very technical. A lot of thought goes into each move. And because everyone's mind and body coordination is different, I have to gauge each lesson according to the individual. Salzberg Analyzes Cat Basketball Season And Sees Positive Signs For The Future

by Mike Schwartz

The basketball season has ended but for Coach Peter Salzberg the season is never over. Recruiting and scheduling are among the many things that keep the coach busy year round. But Coach Salzberg had the time to discuss the results of the past season with this reporter.

An overall view shows that the 1973–1974 UVM basketball program was full of many surprises. It was the first year extensive recruiting of top freshmen talent was shown to pay off on the basketball floor. The team played four games down South that have done much to bolster the program. The Cats defeated St. Mike's for the first time in a long while. And finally an effort was made to develop off-campus interest through fund raising activities such as the UVM Basketball Club. These were among the many subjects discussed with Mr. Salzberg.

The coach believes that a "skeptical" attitude toward the program has changed into one of "curiosity." People are finding out that "something is happening" to UVM basketball. The season was one of ups and downs but at the end the players knew they could beat their opposition.

Although the second season of Salzberg's reign produced another 9–17 record, tremendous improvement was seen. The players realized that the first half of the schedule was perhaps the most difficult in UVM history. When they started to win in the end, they knew they could go in and play a good game against all competition. The coach points out that in the first year UVM lost to UConn by 30 and 40 points. This year they lost by only seven and 13. The only times they were blown off the court were against UMass and the Southern teams. In the second half of the season the high point was reached with victories over BU and St. Mike's. In the latter game the experience of playing in front of large hostile crowds of 13,000 down South payed off in the close 77–72 game against the Purple Knights in the Ross Center. With this in mind the coach says "the players look ahead with excitement to next year's action."

In regard to scheduling Salzberg points out that "when playing in a conference you can't be content to have those games as your toughest contests of the season." This is part of the reason why the non-conference schedule is being built up. The Southern trip gave the team valuable experience which has payed off. Such experience together with the prestige for recruiting improves the quality of UVM basketball. It provides exposure in the N.Y., N.J., and Pennsylvania metropolitan areas which traditionally provide the talent for the UVM team. Salzberg points out that teams such as UConn, UMass and even UNH have played better in the Yankee Conference due to outside conference play. This is starting to be seen with UVM's schedule which includes the South and even college division playoff teams such as St. Mike's, Siena, and Brandeis.

As for team play, Coach Salzberg was quite pleased with the performance of the freshmen Warren Prehmus, Charlie Trapani, Ron Gottschalk, Jim Hargrave, and Dave Drazin. Gottschalk and Trapani provided the rebounding that took the pressure off of Green, Greco, and Palmer. They provided "a new frame of mind for the team and a belief that the team will win." Prehmus was the top foulshooter in New England and impressed the coach by stepping into college ball and scoring 24 points in his first game. Gottschalk had the adjustment of converting from a defensive orientation in high school to becoming involved in offensive action. Everyone has been pleased with his improvement and intensity in playing. As for Trapani, he showed the touch around the foul line and many offensive plays were set up to take advantage of his talents at the high post. It also allowed Gottschalk to work effectively at the low post. The coach was able to try different combinations as the situation demanded. Greco, Green, and Palmer were able to concentrate on other facets of their play. Though these freshmen still need to develop defensive skills as they continue their development for their return next year, the recruits for the coming year, and the returning juniors make the excitement for 1974–1975 season even more intense.

The outside fund raising and the Southern trips allowed the team to buy new uniforms and helped in the recruiting. Says Salzberg, "the team could not exist without such public response." Now the future will hopefully show the improvement of facilities both for students and the team. That new gym facilities have not been built "shortchanges the student."

Salzberg has to kick students off the court when varsity practice begins. The coach also referred to the need for better locker room facilities for the home and visiting teams. Perhaps an eventual expansion of Patrick is needed. The facilities built ten years ago are not adequate for the much greater present student population and the recreational needs of a student today.

To sum things up Salzberg shows the gradual building of the program into a team of overall strength in the Yankee Conference. The team has "more confidence, more experience, more strength and a better attitude." This provides the most accurate comment as UVM basketball continues the rebuilding process.

Bobbie Levitt, Skater And Teacher

by Melanie Choukas

What's it like being twenty-two and devoting all your time to one thing? To Bobbie Levitt, figure skating pro, the rewards are great. She spends days, nights, and weekends teaching skating to hundreds of people. She rushes from UVM to St. Albans to Essex to Leddy Park and yet manages to give each student the feeling that she has not spread herself too thin. How does she do it?

"I love skating, I love teaching, and I love kids." This is apparent to anyone who has had her as a teacher. It is obvious also to anyone who has watched her on the ice with a student, devoting herself completely to each turn of the hip and blade. Each person learns in his or her own way. Skating is very technical. A lot of thought goes into each move. And because everyone's mind and body coordination is different, I have to gauge each lesson according to the individual. What worked for one doesn't work for everyone else."

This is where Bobbie Levitt is unique. Her technique and style are excellent. She holds her gold medal in figures and is one dance away from her gold dance medal. But her unusual ability to teach so many people successfully is due to her sensitivity and ability in responding to individual needs.

Figure skating is an excellent metaphor for life. Performing in shows and tests is a highly emotional experience. In order to reach a level of competence in performance one needs extreme discipline and the ability to overcome disappointment. Skating is very technical and is based on form, but when a figure skater is good, he or she exudes an air of effortlessness and natural grace. When Ms. Levitt is working with her students she is dealing with this metaphor. She knows that many skaters are extremely competitive, and prone to jealousy. She deals with intense human emotions, especially in young children, and feels responsible for the way skating affects the young skater's personality.

"Kids like being in the limelight," she says, "and this is good for their confidence and self-control. But this can get out of hand and I have to tone my students down and instill in them a love for skating for skating's sake."

Ms. Levitt teaches all the UVM figure skating classes, and has literally hundreds of other students in private and group lessons. She has almost no free time. But she doesn't feel she has deprived herself. She is a gifted teacher and a highly talented artist. As a woman she finds her occupation extremely fulfilling. "Skating is graceful and feminine and I love kids."

Skiers Place Third In NCAAs

In surprising fashion, the University of Vermont ski team finished third in the NCAA Championships held in Jackson Hole, Wyoming this past weekend. Colorado finished first with 176 points with Wyoming second based on its 162 points. The Cats were third with 98 points. The Cats finished ahead of Dartmouth and Middlebury who had finished first and second ahead of Vermont in the Eastern Championships. For Vermont they have now finished third for the second time in a row in the NCAA's.

The surprise of the meet was that Vermont scored points in the slalom races rather than in the jumping events. Petter Kongsli and Tom Lantz both fell in the jumping event and left the pressure on Trygve Roiseth. Roiseth finished fifth behind three Colorado jumpers. Of course, it could have been expected that Kongsli and Lantz would have added more points to the UVM score had they not fallen.

The Alpine events provided many points for UVM. Dick Erdman finished second in the Alpine combined and was named a first team All–American. Erdman placed sixth in the slalom and eighth in the downhill. Bill Rathbone placed fifth in the slalom and Brian Suslin was fifteenth. Rathbone finished twentieth in the downhill. He and Erdmann were the only Eastern skiers to score in that event. Most surprising was that UVM's best downhill skier, Chris Brown, was not effective due to an injured ankle suffered in practice. But he raced and was able to let the other skiers know about the conditions. Indeed this was an important factor in Erdmann's and Rathbone's impressive performances. Because of the poorer showing in the jumping events, the Alpine skiers proved to be the most important factor in UVM's third place finish.

In the cross country competition Vermont had only two entries. They were Stan Dunklee who finished thirteenth and Morten Garude who placed fourteenth. Dunklee could have finished much higher but he broke a ski and lost a minute of time. In the Nordic Combined competition, Dave Lantz of Middlebury finished a strong third.

The final team standing behind the top three were: Dartmouth, Northern Michigan, Denver, Montana State, Middlebury, Weber State, New England College, Boise State, Utah, Fort Lewis, Nevada, and Oregon. For the third place Catamounts, the weekend trip out west was a very impressive and satisfying experience.

games. St. Louis won the fifth contest in the C.C.H.A. championship.

The other teams, St. Louis and Minnesota–Duluth, are nationally ranked. St. Louis, who split a pair of exciting games with UVM, has a 27–11 record. In recent games they have been extremely tough. Minnesota–Duluth is really the host team as they played their home games in the arena that is the site of the tournament. Their record in these games was 16–4 which seems to make them the team to beat in the tournament. The Duluth team won 13 of its last 20 games.

The other news of interest to UVM was the selection of the All-New-England team. Willie MacKinnon, Tim O'Connell, and John Murphy were all named to the first team. Ted Child and Ted Castle were named to the second team. Honorable Mention honors went to John Kiely, Ken Yeates and Roger Mallette. Indeed eight All-New-England performers on one team is the ultimate recognition for an excellent hockey team. The first team goalie in Division II happened to be Bill Cantwell, of Norwich, a most deserving hockey player for that honor.

The rest of the first team included Mike Gavin, a forward from St. Anselm's, and Rich Lamby, a freshman defenseman from Salem State.

Swimmers Do Well In New England's

The Vermont Aquacats turned in some outstanding performances this past weekend in the New England Championships held at Brown University. The team finished eighth in a field of 27 schools.

The best individual finish was turned in by Mike Jacobs. He finished second in the 100 yard backstroke with a time of 56.4 seconds. Jacobs also finished fourth in the 50 yard freestyle with a time of 22.2 with Mike Delaney eighth in that event with a 22.5 time. Delaney's time was a Vermont freshman record. Delaney also finished eighth in the 100 yard freestyle with another freshman record of 50.2 seconds.

Kevin Delaney finished eighth in the 100 yard breaststroke and Mike Kurt was eighth in the 200 yard freestyle. Butterfly competition saw John Mahoney place twelfth and Paul Jones sixth. This seems to break the trend of eighth place finishes by some other Vermonters.

In relays, the 400 yard medley team placed third and the 400 yard freestyle finished second. Indeed these results were a refreshing end to a most successful swim

Vermont Wins Division II For Second Straight Year

UVM Beats Merrimack 6-2

by Rick Steinberg

The University of Vermont ice hockey team successfully defended their Division II Championship with a 6-2 victory over Merrimack College. Behind the brilliant goaltending of senior John Kiely the Cats were able to come away with a victory despite being outplayed for the majority of the first two periods.

Following an early goal by Merrimack Captain Brian Cleary, Kiely was unbeatable until the Cats had an insurmountable 6 – 1 lead. Throughout the game the Warriors had numerous close range shots at Kiely, but the UVM goaltender would not yield.

For his outstanding performance, Kiely was named the game's most valuable player. He made 41 saves to only 18 for Merrimack netminder Bill Pieri.

In downing Merrimack the Cats avenged a 3-2 overtime loss to the Warriors earlier this season. The loss is UVM's lone defeat in Division II, in which their final record was 18–1–0. Over the past two seasons the Cats have compiled an unprecedented 37–1–0 record.

The game itself was a fast-skating hard-hitting contest with the Warriors gaining the early territorial edge. At 5:21 of the opening period, Merrimack took the lead when Cleary beat Kiely with a hard slap shot from the right side. Cleary had taken a pass at the blue line from Tom Monahan and was unguarded.

The Cats came back three minutes later as Ted Curtis scored his first goal of the season on a power play. John Murphy controlled the puck in the Merrimack zone and fed Curtis with a cross-ice pass. Curtis took a low slap shot that slid under Pieri, who may have been partially screened by a host of players in front of the net.

Two minutes later the Cats scored on a picture-perfect goal. Center Tom O'Connell received a pass from defenseman Ken Yeates and skated across the Merrimack blue line. He then stopped and hit Bill Koch with a perfect pass right in front of Pieri. Koch flipped the puck into the unguarded right side.

Following Koch's goal, the Cats were penalized twice and were down a man for four straight minutes. UVM had trouble controlling the pesky Warriors but Kiely was able to hold off the Merrimack attack.

The final goal of the period was scored by Captain Ted Castle who was forced to sit out the final stanza after re-injuring his shoulder. Assists went to Spence and MacKinnon.

Despite their sloppy play and being outshot 14-8, the Cats were able to finish off their plays better than the Warriors and skate off with a 3-1 lead.

The first half of the second period was an exact replica of the first. The Warriors territorially dominated the play and held the Cats to two shots on goal in the first ten minutes. But both shots on net were goals as the Cats moved out to a 5-1 lead.

Koch got his second goal of the game at 5:09 of the second period. Assists went to O'Connell and Mallette, as Koch scored on a well-executed backhand shot from in close.

Senior defenseman Ted Child gave the Cats a 5-1 lead at 10:47. Once again Koch was involved. After picking up the puck to Pieri's left, Koch fed Child who scored on an excellent shot that rebounded in off the crossbar.

At this point it was pretty clear that the Cats would once again reign as the Division II champs. They had a four goal lead and Kiely was not to be beaten.

The Cats' final goal came with approximately seven minutes gone in the final period. Michel Lebeau took a pass from Chris Miller and beat Pieri to the short side. This put the game completely out of reach.

But the Warriors never gave up With 15:41 remaining in the contest, Merrimack pulled Pieri and used six skaters. The move payed off as Vic Babal beat Kiely on the same type shot that Cleary had. A hard slap shot from the right beat Kiely to the left hand corner—the Warriors continued to pepper Kiely but were unable to close the gap.

Although not at their best, and out-shot 43–24, the Cats were still able to overwhelm the second best team in the Division. This was the Cats' third championship making UVM the first team to achieve this feat.

The Cats next head out to Duluth, Minnesota, to compete in the NHITD. Other competing teams are St. Louis, Minesota–Duluth, and Lake Superior. The matchups find Lake Superior playing UVM on Thursday night and St. Louis playing Minnesota—Duluth on Friday. The championship game is on Saturday.

SCHWARTZ ON SPORTS

Except for the N.I.H.T., the greatest season in the history of Vermont hockey has ended in striking fashion. The Cats reign victorious in Division II for the second straight year. They now head out to Minnesota with the best collegiate record. Whatever the results, they will not take away from the tremendous achievements of the 1973-1974 season.

The team record is 27 – 4 including 13 victories in a row. In this period of 13 wins they have outscored the oppositon by 81 – 25. Team and individual accomplishments are many. For instance, John Kiely has set a new record for saves in a season and goals against average. As a credit to him, there were only three games all year in which more than four goals were allowed. His performance against Merrimack was particularly impressive. Despite the score, Merrimack proved to be a good skating team that in many situations controlled the flow of the game. Vermont made the beautiful passes and took advantage of the opportunities. Merrimack outshot Vermont but the qualities of a winning team were evident in the Cat's play.

The Vermont team is a team with consistency and strength. All players on the first two lines have scored over 30 points. Michel Lebeau on the third line is also over 30 points. On defense, Ken Yeates and John Murphy have as many assists as many of the forwards. Besides playing defensive hockey, these players possess the capability of rushing the puck and setting up plays.

The Vermont team is deep. Players such as Pete Brady, Eli Tubbs, Dana Hooper, Whit Watts, Todd Brown, and others have the tools to star on most teams. When called into action they perform with the rest of the team without any loss of strength. Jack Clifford has come through whether on the first line when Willie MacKinnon was injured, the third line, or the fourth. Ted Curtis has also played well filling in for John Glynne who could be the defensive star of the future. Curtis finished the season by scoring his first goal of the season, the first of six Catamount goals of the night.

But the player who deserves special recognition is Willie MacKinnon. MacKinnon after playing in the shadow of Patty Wright last year has constantly shown his hockey prowess. He has come back twice from injuries to perform strikingly. After his second comeback, he scored eight goals in three games. MacKinnon has impressed this reporter in his skating and passing ability. His ability to make pinpoint passes and fake out opposing defensemen has been uncanny. Though being injured he finished the season with the highest point per game average on the team.

Now that the year has ended with Vermont demonstrating hockey excellence and winning the Division II crown, the Cats can look ahead to next year's Division I debut. This should also be the time that Gutterson Fieldhouse should be a number one facility for players and fans. A determined effort should be made to improve the viewing ability for the fan who sits along the sides of the arena. This would end the fight for end seats, long lines, and possible injury. It would also end the eight and-nine saved seats at a time. Also a plan should be made to give the students the first priority for seats. With the team's success the big wheels of the Vermont legislature and business gobble up complimentary tickets. Although the city of Burlington has demonstrated tremendous support for the team (in many ways as a substitute for a professional sports team) it is easier for these people to dish out ticket book money than it is for a student. I was amazed at comparing the ratio of students to adults in the stands on Saturday night. At one point I noticed a couple virtually dressed up for the country club ball sitting down in the general admission section in some seats people saved for them. Surely such people can buy reserved seats and leave the cheaper seats for the students who support the team and

by Fred Coombs

The Cats took it easy last Wednesday night in semi-final action in the Division II playoffs against UMass at the Gutterson Fieldhouse. The final score of 4 – 3 made it appear that the Cats played lousy. They might have played lousy but they still outshot the Minutemen 43 – 24.

Willie MacKinnon got the Cats off on the right paw at 6:42 of the first period. Ted Castle passed to John Murphy along the boards on the right side. Murphy hit MacKinnon ten feet in front of the net. MacKinnon promptly tipped the puck in the twine past UMass goalie Charlie Renault's stick side.

If the rest of the first period was full of anything, it wasn't scoring. The Cats led 1 – 0 until Tim O'Connell skated around two defensemen and rung the ropes from 15 feet at 5:22 of the second period. Bill Koch and Roger Mallette received the assists.

Minuteman Mike Merchant took a pass at the UVM crease and beat John Kiely to his glove side at 8:00 to end the scoring in the second period.

It took only 13 seconds for the Cats to score in the third period. Murphy passed behind the UMass net to O'Connell who passed to Koch in front. Koch banged in a backhander from ten feet out.

The Minutemen stepped in at 10:35. UMass carried the puck into the UVM zone. Murphy blocked the initial shot but the puck dribbled through to Bill Harris who backhanded it past Kiely's stick side.

MacKinnon got the game winner on a pass from Castle from behind the net. MacKinnon put it past Rheault from five feet out at 11:33. Bill Spence also assisted on the play. UMass made it close when John Muse beat Kiely to his glove side from 10 feet out at 17:50.

The Cats played just well enough to win and by winning they moved on to win against Merrimack for the championship. Ken Yeates gets the frustration award for his two thwarted shots on the empty UMass goal at the end of the game. The stars of the game were MacKinnon, Kiely, and Murphy.

Cats To Play Lake Superior In N.I.H.T. Tonight

With the end of the Division II playoffs the UVM hockey team remains in the spotlight of UVM sports. On Monday the rest of the draw for the National Invitational Hockey Tournament in Duluth, Minnesota was announced. The Division II–III All-New-England Collegiate Hockey team was also announced. This team is selected by the New England Hockey Writers Association.

In the Duluth tournament the Cats will play Lake Superior State College in the opening round tonight. After some eastern teams declined invitations, Lake Superior was chosen. Superior is the winner of the Central Collegiate Hockey Association and has a 22–14–1 record. They lost the championship playoff for that division this past weekend by losing to St. Louis 8–3. Lake Superior is also the N.A.I.A. champs as they defeated Bemidji State 4–1. Because UVM and Lake Superior had both played St. Louis this season the tournament committee decided to pair the two colleges in the opening round. The other game pits St. Louis against Minnesota–Duluth. Lake Superior is noted to be a tough physical team but its goalies have allowed more than three goals a game. Their leading player Tom Davies had 59 points this season and has 153 in his career. The team has tremendous offensive potential. They played St. Louis four times this season and split the

by Barbara Frankel

For a long time, women have been saying they are discriminated against when applying for jobs. Until now, no one in the state of Vermont has proven this. On Monday, March 18, representatives of VPIRG (Vermont Public Interest Research Group) presented a documented report which conclusively proves that sex discrimination exists in employment opportunities in Vermont.

At a press conference in Montpelier, Caroline Nickerson, VPIRG's legal counsel, Scott Skinner and Sharon Frink, presented the report. Frink, a UVA volunteer, was project director for this research report.

This report proves that sex discrimination exists in both private employment agencies, and Vermont state employment agencies. Two VPIRG workers one male and one female, called various agencies and asked for available employment. Both callers gave the same qualifications and background. They claimed to be 23 years old, single, in excellent health with a B.A. from the University of Vermont, 3.0 average (both callers gave the same major and minor course of study).

The male applicant called first and the female called within two hours of the first call. According to VPIRG's report, "All of the nine private employment agencies called were in blatant violation of both the letter and spirit of the law.... Many of the agencies were clearly discriminatory in their handling of the male and female caller. In other cases a difference in emphasis seems to suggest that there are different job opportunities for men and women." Sharon Frink commented that almost all of the female callers were offered only clerical jobs, while male callers were offered management training positions.

A typical example is the Richard P. Rite Personnel Services of Rutland. When contacted by the two callers, the report states, "The male was told that available jobs were "mostly professional in nature" and was given examples in manufacturing-plant and design-engineering, mentioning that the "majority of openings in Vermont were such that a degree (in that field) was needed." The female caller was told that most openings were in the areas of secretarial and general office work, although there were some in professions and manufacturing, and as "unlikely" public relations job."

$550,000 Proposed Tunnel To Funnel UVM Students Across Main Street

by John Van Hoesen

UVM will build a $550,000 underpass for students to cross Main Street if the legislature approves the university request during this legislative session.

Director of Administrative Support Services, Proctor Lovell, reported that student safety is a prime consideration in building the tunnel. However, according to Lovell, the underpass is being considered because of a stipulation by the District Environmental Commission No. 4.

The commission stipulates that the University "shall provide two pedestrian crossings across Main Street, one of which shall be an underpass." The University has until April to comply with the commission's requirement.

Lovell, commenting on the high cost of the tunnel said "One life is worth more than that."

If the underpass is built, a student walking from Redstone would enter the underpass just east of the Fringle Herbarium. The student would see sunlight again south-east of the home economics building.

The tunnel would be lit 24 hours each day; security would have an office at the south end of the tunnel, and they would monitor the passageway day and night.

One walking through the tunnel would be guaranteed safety until he or she reached the other end, Lovell stated.

The preliminary plans, which were drawn up by Webster-Martin Inc., show the proposed tunnel to be accessible to the handicapped and bicyclers. The underpass would have elevators and ramps.

Whether or not students would use a tunnel is a question which has been raised by many students. Lovell contends that students would use the alternative to darting between cars because the University would construct huge mounds of landscaped dirt across from Living/Learning. Lovell maintained that this would deter students from crossing at random. Lovell also said that security would attempt to funnel students through the underpass.

Some students feel they would still cross over the road rather than under it, and they conclude that the tunnel is a waste of money.

Two alternatives were considered. Lovell stated both: "We considered just what we have, two traffic lights. We had considered overpasses, but they had to be 18 feet high. The ramp to the overpass would have to be several hundred feet long."

Would an overpass be as expensive as an underpass? "I doubt it," Lovell admitted, but he added that the aesthetics of an overpass were criticized.

The underpass was first considered two years ago when there was no jug-handle and cars were backed up to the Redstone path area several times a day. The original plan included an underground shopping mall and rented office spaces. The legislature did not approve this plan.

The current proposal is in the House Appropriations Committee. The University will know early in April whether or not they can spend $550,000 for students to cross Main Street.

Should the legislature approve the proposed tunnel, Lovell anticipated that construction would be completed in September 1975.

Bottle Ban Bill Causes Confrontation

by Scott Bauer

On Tuesday night there was an interesting confrontation between Scott Skinner, proponent of the Bottle Bill and James Finneran, lobbyist against the bill. The bill in its present form bans all "flip top cans" and allows the state to certify refillable bottles which could be used by more than one company. At press time the bill is before the Senate Natural Resource Committee. They are expected to take action on the bill Thursday or Friday of this week.

Mr. Skinner expressed his views first and touched on four important reasons for the Bottle Bill. First, the economic factor. The consumer pays for the cost of the container and should not pay for the cost of disposal. Throwaways cost about five cents per bottle while refillables cost ten cents initially. However, the higher cost of refillables is distributed over the number of times they are reused. A bottle may be reused on the average from 15 to 40 times.

Mr. Skinner's second topic was energy. He gave figures on the number of Kilowatt hours of electricity used to produce throwaways and compared this to the amount used for refillables. He also mentioned litter and gave figures stating that presently 7 per cent of Vermont's solid waste is in the form of beverage bottles and cans. A substantial proportion of this solid waste would be removed if the reusable container law goes into effect.

Finally, Mr. Skinner moved away from quantitative analysis to some social reasons. He strongly stated that disposable bottles are a symbol of today's wasteful society.

The second speaker of the debate, Mr. Finneran, introduced himself as a representative of the beer distributors of Vermont only. He termed the controversy over the bottle issue an "emotional, political issue." He claimed that while the present law needs revision, there is no possible solution that will satisfy all the people involved. He stated that no one has the answer and "people with firmly fixed positions are fixed in ignorance."

Mr. Finneran cited that during the past year there was less roadside litter from beverages. He ended his talk contending that for us to try to impose our will on such a large industry for "cosmetic reasons" would be a "pirate victory" at best.

Mr. Skinner questioned whether "cosmetic reasons" were the real issue of the bill. He again warned about the potential danger of resources wasted as a result of the bottle industry's unwillingness to reuse its products. Mr. Skinner contradicted Mr. Finneran's concern over the possible glass shortage by identifying the vast amounts of glass used in throwaway bottles today. The refillable bottles are thicker and need more glass initially, however, the inherent advantage of their reusability curtails wasteful production.

Mr. Skinner then asserted that the technology is available to produce refillables because they are appearing in bars. However, the distributors are not promoting them actively for large retail outlets.

Mr. Skinner felt strongly that since the technology does exist for the production of refillables, the larger beer companies such as Budweiser and Schlitz should agree to take the initiative to use them.

Illegal Sex Discrimination Proved By VPIRG Report

by Barbara Frankel

For a long time, women have been saying they are discriminated against when applying for jobs. Until now, no one in the state of Vermont has proven this. On Monday, March 18, representatives of VPIRG (Vermont Public Interest Research Group) presented a documented report which conclusively proves that sex discrimination exists in employment opportunities in Vermont.

At a press conference in Montpelier, Caroline Nickerson, VPIRG's legal counsel, Scott Skinner and Sharon Frink, presented the report. Frink, a UVA volunteer, was project director for this research report.

This report proves that sex discrimination exists in both private employment agencies, and Vermont state employment agencies. Two VPIRG workers one male and one female, called various agencies and asked for available employment. Both callers gave the same qualifications and background. They claimed to be 23 years old, single, in excellent health with a B.A. from the University of Vermont, 3.0 average (both callers gave the same major and minor course of study).

The male applicant called first and the female called within two hours of the first call. According to VPIRG's report, "All of the nine private employment agencies called were in blatant violation of both the letter and spirit of the law.... Many of the agencies were clearly discriminatory in their handling of the male and female caller. In other cases a difference in emphasis seems to suggest that there are different job opportunities for men and women." Sharon Frink commented that almost all of the female callers were offered only clerical jobs, while male callers were offered management training positions.

A typical example is the Richard P. Rita Personnel Services of Rutland. When contacted by the two callers, the report states, "The male was told that available jobs were "mostly professional in nature" and was given examples in manufacturing-plant and design-engineering, mentioning that the "majority of openings in Vermont were such that a degree (in that field) was needed." The female caller was told that most openings were in the areas of secretarial and general office work, although there were some in professions and manufacturing, and an "unlikely" public relations job."

A great deal of discrimination was also found in state employment services. Nine out of twelve state employment agencies were surveyed. As with the private agencies, both a male surveyor and a female surveyor called, with the same background and qualifications. According to the VPIRG report, "Most of the agencies called were found to discriminate between the male and female caller. Eight agencies suggested manual labor to the male caller, while only three did so to the female caller. At the same time, six of the agencies discussed clerical-secretarial positions with the female caller compared to only four who did so with the male caller."

"There would seem to be little hope for effective state action to end sex discrimination in private employment as long as the state fails to ensure that its own employment agencies comply with state and federal law."

The VPIRG workers also found sex discrimination in classified advertising. Although the Burlington Free Press discontinued "Help Wanted: Male" and "Help Wanted: Female" columns in October, 1973, many of the present advertisements are still discriminatory. These advertisements, which specify certain types of employment for women, are illegal.

As a conclusion, the VPIRG workers recommended that the attorney general of Vermont act when the law is being violated. They feel it should be the "immediate duty of the state's chief law officer to see that the state's own employment offices do not discriminate. The attorney general should also initiate an investigation to determine why the law has gone so completely unenforced for so long." VPIRG also recommended that the Human Rights Commission be given more power to end sex discrimination in Vermont.

Opening Of New Theatre Spurs Arts Presentation

by Lisa Charles

Along with the opening dedication and the presentation of The Contrast, last week, the new Royall Tyler Theatre hosted a UVM Briefing on "The State of the Arts Today." Sponsored by UVM campus publication, This Week, the briefing was held last Friday afternoon in the upstairs lobby of the theatre.

"I think the theatre is a smashing achievement over the basement of Fleming Museum," Professor William Metcalfe commented. "I am delighted by the mere fact of its existence," he said. Professor Metcalfe, acting chairperson of the Music department, was one of the six panel members representing the arts at UVM.

Other professors included Alan Broughton, from the English department, George Bryan, assistant professor of Communication and theatre, Edward Feidner, director of Drama, Edwin Owre, assistant professor of Art, and Jack Trevithick, director of the UVM Lane Series.

During the two hour briefing, the six men engaged in an open discussion with press representatives from all over the state of Vermont.

"And what is exactly the state of the arts at UVM, today?" asked one reporter from Woodstock's Vermont Standard. The question was never answered directly. Instead the panel digressed in directions which covered everything from the possibility of a Fine Arts degree at UVM, to the quantity and quality of newspaper coverage of the arts. Regarding the latter topic, it was agreed by both panel and press members that the arts in Vermont, and at UVM specifically, are receiving poor coverage. In addition, it was also decided that the quality of coverage, or the actual knowledge of a reviewer's subject, is often limited and inadequate.

"There should be a distinction made between review and criticism," declared one representative from the White River Valley Herald. A great deal of time was devoted to this controversial issue in the media. Many reporters felt that in a town the size of Burlington, where theatrical performances are usually a "one shot deal," a preview which informs the audience about the upcoming presentation is more valuable than a review which discusses a performance that may never appear again. Nevertheless, the majority of people at the briefing supported subjective criticism of a "one shot deal," provided the reviewer is versatile and very knowledgeable in the subject. This is in keeping with the universal information-entertainment standards in media coverage.

"What I would like to see," Professor Metcalfe said, "is some kind of newspaper column which covers what is happening in the media day by day – done in a straight news fashion." Presently, however, the suggestion is only being considered by the local press, while radio is just beginning to implement the idea.

In addition to media coverage, the proposition of a community arts center was discussed at length. It seems that the primary obstacle, which has prevented the construction of such a center for years, is financial donation and support.

"There are some things like medical and correctional centers which must be supported by the community," Ed Feidner remarked. "The arts need this kind of support. The University has always provided the community with theatrical entertainment, but the community does nothing to support or promote the arts off-campus. There's no way we can pay for a white elephant," he commented.

Many other ideas were tossed around and discussed at the briefing. For the most part the questions and comments centered around the development and support of the arts at UVM. After the briefing, the panel and press members reassembled at the president's home for cocktails. Later that evening at a private dinner, Professor Feidner addressed the group with a few concluding words before leaving for the opening of The Contrast. "To answer the original question: the state of the arts today is, and has always been, like the state of the world, chaotic..."

Plant Snatching Plagues Greenhouse

by Margo Howland

In the past year, over $5,00 worth of plants and shrubs have been stolen from the UVM Greenhouse. The cash value of the plants is not the primary concern of greenhouse manager Curt Kellar; rather it is the loss suffered by the University as a whole.

The displays in the Conservatory, open to the public for a number of years, have been cut short because of the theft. It is impossible to measure in monetary value the amount of time and care given to these plants by dedicated faculty and students. In addition, many of these plants are irreplaceable.

One particularly distressing example, Kellar noted, was the theft of a bonsai tree. "The professor had raised the tree from a seed, and had worked on that tree for twelve years. It was like a son or daughter to him—he was heartbroken."

While the occasional stealing of plants from the Greenhouse has gone on for quite some time, it has blossomed into a problem of crisis proportions as recently as last month. The increasing fascination that college students have with trees and plants and the whole back-to-nature kick is seen as an influencing factor.

Most of the stealing occurs during the weekends, when the buildings are closed, Kellar says. "All the doors have locks and the locks are going to be changed. Campus Security is very concerned with the problem and has increased their patrol of the area on weekends." Apparently there has been no sign of forcing locks to obtain entry.

Kellar believes that the building is entered one of two ways: either the individual has unauthorized possession of a key, or else gets in when the doors are left unlocked through carelessness. While the building is regularly locked after hours (it is open 8 – 4:30 Monday through Friday), there are graduate students who have access to the facilities on weekends.

Only last weekend, three more plants were taken: a jade plant, a banana tree, and a rubber tree.

It is important for the students to realize this is wrong, says Kellar. "A lot of students think that cuttings are free and available, and that is not true. Cuttings are available only when I personally prune the plants. Even then they are not available to just anybody."

The UVM Greenhouse is a university-wide facility, containing rooms for research projects, classes, and the conservatory. Most of the problem has been in the conservatory, although students in botany and plant and soil science have had parts of projects ripped-off,

Small Turnout For IRA Elections

Bartlett Wins Presidency

by Randy Jansen

Ken Bartlett was elected the IRA president by a margin of about 175 votes last Wednesday, March 13. Matt Jones and Rich Warner, also candidates, were close for second place, in a poorly attended election in which less than 1000 students voted.

Ken Bartlett's largest objective is to publicize IRA and make it a more well-known organization on campus. He feels that the students have little or no knowledge on what IRA is or of its accomplishments. Bartlett proposes the IRA publish weekly articles in the Cynic and have more student-senator contact.

A breakdown in campus isolation and a more cohesive spirit on campus is also desired by the new president. "UVM's best moments are at events like the hockey games when the campus acts as a whole, rather than a member of MAT or Living/Learning." Bartlett would encourage more campus-wide social events. A bluegrass festival on Redstone Campus is Bartlett's special project which he would like to see occur. More social events in the dorms will also be emphasized.

Bartlett wants a larger role for IRA: "IRA is going to become more involved in a lot more things..." Bartlett hopes to see S.A. generate more momentum for concerts and more popular films. He also hopes to work with S.A. on the possibility of a campus pub. "One thing I think IRA can accomplish is to get S.A. and IRA to work together."

Bartlett will strive to put lights on the outside tennis courts this spring vacation. Bartlett is not yet familiar with IRA funds, so funds might not be available for this project.

Bartlett's view of IRA is that "IRA was formed to look at and work with the feelings of students in the residence halls. It is a medium for students to express their desires and complaints and basically a representative of the students' demands in residence halls." The new president emphasizes strongly that "IRA is here to serve the students."

In addition to innumerable details on houses in the Burlington area, Wittekind is responsible for the woodcarving in the old Burlington Post Office, Hotel Vermont, the Governor Smith Mansion, and St. Stephen's Church in Winooski. One of Wittekind's masterpieces of carving and an early example of his work in Burlington, can be seen on the Edward Wells House (now Delta Psi Fraternity) at 61 Summit St.

The Fleming's exhibition is the work of Lillian Baker Carlisle, a Burlington historian who wrote the booklet for the show, and Louise Roomet.

A number of special events are scheduled in conjunction with the show: Tonight, March 21, Lillian Carlisle will discuss the life and work of Albert Wittekind at 8 p.m. in the Museum; on Tuesday, March 26, Louise Roomet will give a talk entitled "The Queen Anne Style and The Shingle Style in Burlington Housing" at 8 p.m. in the Museum; Sunday, March 31, at 2 p.m., Lillian Carlisle and Louise Roomet will lead a walking tour of Wittekind's carving beginning in Billings Center; and on Tuesday, April 2, Richard Janson, Museum Director, will speak on "H. The Champlain She

by Rick Steinberg

The Champlain She... ed Workshop is an organization for the evaluation, training and sheltered employment of the mentally retarded. Last May, the workshop finally opened after a six year struggle.

Under the direction of Jack Mack the workshop has expanded tremendously since its initiation. Originally the program started with one student. With the aid of private donations and volunteers from the Burlington area, facilities were expanded to now accomodate thirty-five students.

The activities of the workshop are generally divided into five areas: 1) contract work projects; 2) internal work projects; 3) shop product work projects; 4) individual growth and broadening projects; 5) testing and evaluation work projects.

A contract work project is where the student is assigned to perform a specified task which is part of a contract given to the workshop. Examples are installing eyes in wooden toy animals, sorting brochures for collating, and other similar activities.

The internal work project involves such items as janitorial work at the shop, cooking or clean-up of the daily hot lunch program and repair of shop facilities.

A shop product work project involves the student in accomplishing an assigned task which involves the fabrication of a product to be marketed and sold in the shop.

The Champlain Sheltered Workshop Expands

by Rick Steinberg

The Champlain Shel...ed Workshop is an organization for the evaluation, training, and sheltered employment of the mentally retarded. Last May, the workshop finally opened after a six year struggle.

Under the direction of Jack Mack the workshop has expanded tremendously since its initiation. Originally, the program started with one student. With the aid of private donations and volunteers from the Burlington area, facilities were expanded to now accomodate thirty-five students.

The activities of the workshop are generally divided into five areas: 1) contract work projects, 2) internal work projects, 3) shop product work projects, 4) individual growth and broadening projects, 5) testing and evaluation work projects.

A contract work project is where the student is assigned to perform a specified task, which is part of a contract given to the workshop. Examples are installing eyes in wooden toy animals, sorting brochures for collating, and other similar activities.

The internal work project involves such items as janitorial work at the shop, cooking or clean-up of the daily hot lunch program and repair of shop facilities.

A shop product work project involves the student in accomplishing an assigned task which involves the fabrication of a product to be marketed and sold by the shop.

The individual growth and broadening projects include such areas as cooking, measuring, safety, time telling, and personal hygene.

Testing and evaluation work projects involve assignment to tasks involving assembly, disassembly, sanding, gluing, painting and related activities. This may or may not be what is commonly referred to as "busy work." Such tasks are assigned to test and evaluate the student in such areas as gross coordination, fine motor skills, cooperation, eye skills, concentration, etc.

A major objective of the workshop is to keep mentally handicapped adults in the Burlington area and give them a purpose. Besides the Brandon Institute, there is very little in-state help for these individuals after completing public school.

The Champlain program provides the mentally handicapped with a sense of belonging to the community. The workshop would like to help him/her become a contributor instead of a total dependent.

"The mentally retarded can be a productive element," stated Joe Mullen, a UVM student volunteer. "They are useful and responsible and should not be ashamed."

Funds and volunteers are still greatly needed. The workshop would like to expand the program and needs more funds for professional help. Presently, there are two full-time employees from the Office of Economic Opportunity.

Jack Mack

The Workshop is looking toward the university for two things. First they hope to find volunteers. Secondly, they would like to receive ideas and suggestions from the university community for possible fund-raising activities. Several ideas that are being looked into are a telethon, a carnival, or a crash door-to-door campaign.

Further information on the program may be obtained by contacting the Champlain Sheltered Workshop in Winooski.

The Bar Review: An Alcoholic Trilogy

Fillmores West, East, and Now... North (Winooski)

Franklin Pierce's predecessor in the White House was a remarkable man, so remarkable in fact that he is mostly ignored by the historical profession and the fashions of popular historical interest. Few care about Millard Fillmore. For most, the mention of his name evokes a feeling similar to that of many ethnic jokes.

There is a fringe group in the New York area known as the Millard Fillmore Society dedicated to the perpetuation of whatever spirit the man contributed to the American Dream. However, one of the most fitting memorials to the thirteenth president is the bar bearing his name on North Winooski Avenue. It is to Fillmore what a medium is to Cleopatra, a method is to Socrates, a stove is to Franklin, and a skyway is to Pulaski. Despite the place's size competing with a telephone booth, it is an awesome monument to something.

The Philard Mahoney (as it is referred to by several known impudent mooks) is located in the same block containing Sundance (of leather fame), the Pipe Rack (of tobacco fame), Fire and Metal (of jewelry fame), Kitchen Korner (of utensil fame), Hargreave's Market (of outrageous munchie fame), and Domino's (of cholesterol and theory fame). In short, it is the perfect bar to go into to lament spending too much money on material gratification.

The Fillmore is essentially a neighborhood bar. It has a very loyal and regular clientele; don't look for people you know in there – people you know don't frequent the place.

Opinion of the Fillmore varies considerably. The same person who ecstatically praises the sandwiches for their content and price will bitterly complain about the taste of his drink. The Fillmore Tequila Sunrise is the best in town, according to another informant reputed to be a Sunrise connoisseur. Others like the place but find themselves uncomfortable in the company of the Fillmore's loyal following.

We've visited the Fillmore several times to drink and take notes. It impressed us; the place is the best-decorated and most imaginatively decorated low-budget bar in Burlington. The bar's patrons are regulars, mostly unknown to us, and seem very loyal to the place. Fillmore faces are rarely seen in other bars.

Drink is cheap, at least beer is. We've not tried anything else. (The columnists are financially embarrassed lately, and contrary to popular opinion, the Cynic does not underwrite the considerable cost of Bar Review research).

In summary, the Fillmore is a highly individual bar with either a latent or overt undercurrent of madness about it (depending upon when it is being observed). The Millard Fillmore stands out from Burlington's best graffatied men's room to the old Life magazine-papered wall upstairs. The best way to enjoy it is to become an accepted regular customer-things will be alot easier for you.

The Sirloin Saloon – Burned At the Steak?

At the commencement of our first restaurant review, we must admit that we are unqualified to rate restaurants in the style of reviewers like Craig Claiborne, Gael Greene, and the Guide Michelin. Our palates are relatively immature; we could not tell the difference between hollandaise sauce made with Blue Bonnet margarine and one made with real butter. In another sense, we are more qualified than the hoggers regularly passing judgement on name eateries. We mentioned before that we are presently financially embarrassed – this is a frequent complaint. Therefore, when TBR hits the restaurant circuit, knowing the possibility of dropping ten, twenty, or thirty bucks on a meal, that meal better come perfection.

The Sirloin Saloon is located several miles south of Grandway on Shelburne Road. Walking from your parked car, you are instantly confronted with what looks like a misplaced refugee from Frontiertown. The place doesn't look like a restaurant, it looks like something you take your little cousin to for the purpose of watching an exciting feigned Wild West Shootout.

Once inside, you will either be directed to the bar or else immediately seated depending on crowd conditions. Crowded nights are hell, for customers and staff alike. The cocktail lounge is a late Victorian airline terminal the day before Thanksgiving. You will be jammed into the Jello Bordello– decorated bar with several hundred others, each one dying for the steak. Waiters and waitresses look like bandanna commuters running for the 5:30 train at 5:29:30. Sometimes you can wait for an hour and a half to get a table. On your fourth Jack Daniels, you begin to wonder why you didn't do Hamburger Helper instead. Suddenly, the overloud Muzak is interrupted by the proverbial call to the table; "Mr. Fine–table for nine." Overfilled with Jack Daniels and pretzels, you and yours push through the crowd to be seated. You've made it.

You order; you line up for salad with the invariable roquefort dressing; you eat the salad; your steak arrives; you eat the steak; the waiter takes the plates away; you have coffee with rum raisin ice cream or 800 calories-worth of cheese cake; you pay the bill and leave, arriving home in time to watch Mary Tyler Moore.

Despite having great steaks, good but expensive drinks, outstanding service made up of mostly UVM grads, and an expensive atmosphere, the Sirloin Saloon is the highway fast–food outlet gone social climbing. You drink–you eat–you leave. You realize halfway through your meal that you are depriving some hungry person at the bar of a seat.

We're not going to stop anyone from going to the Saloon. We'll probably return there some night when the place is a little less crowded. However, a restaurant to us, is an unhurried meal away from the worries outside. You can't eat leisurely in a gilt pressure cooker.

THE BETTER BARTENDER

Anyone paid to deal with other people is endangered by tiring of them. Often *p*involved in seeing others as mirror images of self, our hypothetical professional falls into cynicism and highly prejudiced perceptions of the faces in the crowd. Probably one of the most dangerous professions susceptible to this cynicism is bartending. Here, the faces in the crowd don't often reflect the joy of the company of

UYA Currently Recruiting For September

University Year for Action is presently recruiting UVM students for September placements in the full-time volunteer program. Administered through the Office of Volunteer Programs and sponsored by the ACTION agency, UYA is a program which provides UVM students with the opportunity to learn while doing by coordinating their academic learning program with a job in a specific poverty area in Vermont.

Overall guidelines for the forthcoming volunteers remain the same as for the two previous years. Committment to UYA is for a full calendar year in order to provide full-time service to low-income communities. UYA volunteers are asked to live in the communities they are serving. A subsistence allowance is provided for volunteers.

There are currently 53 UYA volunteers from a variety of academic backgrounds including the College of Arts and Sciences, College of Agriculture, College of Education, and School of Home Economics.

Most volunteers see their involvement with University Year for Action from one or more of three learning contexts: (a) as supplemental field experience to their academic major; (b) as pre-professional or vocational training experience; (c) as an existential learning experience apart from or in addition to one's professed academic interests.

UVM UYA students are able to earn credit under three general auspices. First, they can sign up for courses relating to their projects, but contract with individual faculty members to fulfill requirements for those classes in non-classroom ways. Second, through an adjunct faculty arrangement with the College of Education, UYA supervisors are able to grant some credit to UYA volunteers for the field experience itself. Third, it sometimes happens that a UYA volunteer has to take a course in regular fashion. He is permitted to do so if the course would not appreciably interfere with his project commitment.

Projects are developed in eight key areas. They are: Administration of Justice, Consumer Protection, Economic Development, Education, Environmental Protection, Health, Housing and Social Services.

UYA catalogues describing specific jobs available for September placement are available in the Office of Volunteer Programs, Mansfield House. Initial interviews are currently being conducted for UYA. Appointments can be made by calling 656-2062.

Election Procedures

Last week a new S.A. president was elected. We wish him luck in the coming year and hope he will fare better than his predecessors have.

Unfortunately for Peter MacAusland, his election has been clouded by the voting procedures. On Tuesday, the first day of voting, student's I.D.'s were not marked. Instead, the student's name was checked in a student directory at the booth where he or she voted. This enabled students to vote as many as five times, since there were five voting booths.

Apparently, only a few students voted more than once. At least we have an honest student body. We do not, however, have a student organization which commands any respect.

Steve Rollins lost this election by only 36 votes. He is not contesting the election because he feels this would destroy the S.A.'s credibility. Hasn't it already been destroyed?

The S.A. secretary of elections was overworked and understaffed. That is not enough of an excuse, however for a poorly run, disorganized election. He is presently rewriting elections procedures so that next year, hopefully, these slip-ups will not occur.

MacAusland, through no fault of his own, is off to a rather embarrassing start. Let's hope he can rectify others' mistakes by giving us something different in an S.A. president.

Letters To The Editor

Rebuttal From TBR

To the Editor:

The Cynic has received some recent criticism for publishing the Bar Review. The serious intent of this criticism compels a reply by the two columnists responsible for this weekly feature.

The criticism is comprised of mostly taking the Cynic to task for not emphasizing the activities of the Office of Volunteer Programs, University Year in Action, and the Vermont Public Interest Research Group. Apparently, the Bar Review takes up valuable editorial space that could be better put to use by these groups; the Bar Review is irrelevant. It seems that the Bar Review should step aside so one of the social action groups can get 12 more column inches of space a week.

One of the columnists here has fairly extensive experience with social action groups and has some personal (and pointed) opinions of such activities and their effectiveness. You won't see these opinions here; our reply is based on our personal view of the function of journalism. We have the view of journalism (in this case, the Vermont Cynic) as responsible for reporting and criticizing, and reflecting the spectrum of activity and opinion found in a community whether it be found in Waterman, Billings, Gutterson, a Williston Road gas station, the Pearl St. DSW office, or the Chickenbone.

While bars don't appear always to be a positive area of human activity, they are a legitimate area of human concern. Bars are as much a legitimate area of human concern as a dirty North St. apartment with frozen plumbing. The tragedy of a lonely nineteen-year old from a wealthy Boston suburb on his first drunk may be more temporary than the tragedy of a ten-year old Vermonter who has never seen a dentist; the difference in the duration of the tragedy does not rule out a concern with both.

Very simply, you find people in bars. The irony is that they are people often escaping from other people who find themselves in the midst of other people. People being people, they are often guarded in their day-to-day revelations of themselves; unfortunately, drink is often the only way this personal guardedness can be reduced. Too often, drinking is the only way you and me are free to be you and me.

You might try going to a bar soon to look at what it's all about.

S.A. Elections

To the Editor:

Without elaborating at length, I would like to make a few comments regarding the recent S.A. Presidential elections. The process through which these elections were run was not only ineffective, but detrimental to the entire Student Association.

The election of an S.A. President should be the most important and opportune time for students to express their attitudes towards campus issues through exercising their right to vote. However, when only twenty percent of UVM students take advantage of this opportunity, there is definitely something lacking.

Lack of communication, throughout the campus is the major fault of this process. How many of UVM's 7,000 undergraduate students actually knew who the candidates were, or what their issues were? The blame lies almost directly on two large student organizations – the Student Association and the Cynic.

The S.A. should make an organized, concerted effort to publicize these elections long before they occur. Few students were even aware that campaigns were taking place during the last month. S.A. Senators might make an effort to get back to their constituencies in an attempt to announce and encourage participation in the elections. Dates for Presidential Forums and elections should be widely publicized on and off campus. Finally, the election itself should be handled with much more care. This year, it would have been possible for students to vote as many as four times without being noticed!

Secondly, the Cynic failed to communicate to the campus until it was too late. The Cynic is probably UVM's best means of communication; a great number of students read this weekly publication. However, when the Cynic fails to publish candidacy announcements until the week prior to the elections, they are not fulfilling their obligation to the students or the candidates. In my opinion, it is the responsibility of the Cynic to begin coverage of this all-important election at least a month before it takes place. Maybe then students will make a more concerted effort to become informed and involved in the campaign.

I am well aware that this communication process is not a simple one. It requires a lot of time and effort from both the S.A. and the Cynic. However, in order to establish a more effective Senate, we need more student involvement. This can only be achieved by better outreach to the campus.

May I express my sincere respect to all four candidates for the hard work they contributed to the campaign, especially in their attempts to create an awareness among the student population. I hope that in the future, these efforts will not go to waste.

Sincerely,
Tony Blake

Student Union?

by Scott Bauer

A few people around the university are starting to push the idea of getting a Student Union Building on campus. Personally, I think it's a pretty poor idea.

Some people believe that Billings Center is inadequate. I've heard complaints that there are just too many people there. There isn't enough office space, not a big enough room for lectures and performances, and there are no lockers for off-campus students. I realize there are probably more arguments for a new building but these are the ones I've heard the most and would like to comment on.

It's true, there isn't enough office space. Many new student organizations are applying for offices at Billings. Solution? Wander around upper Billings (where the offices are) any time, any day, and see for yourself how many of them are being used. Perhaps we could consolidate many of the offices into one.

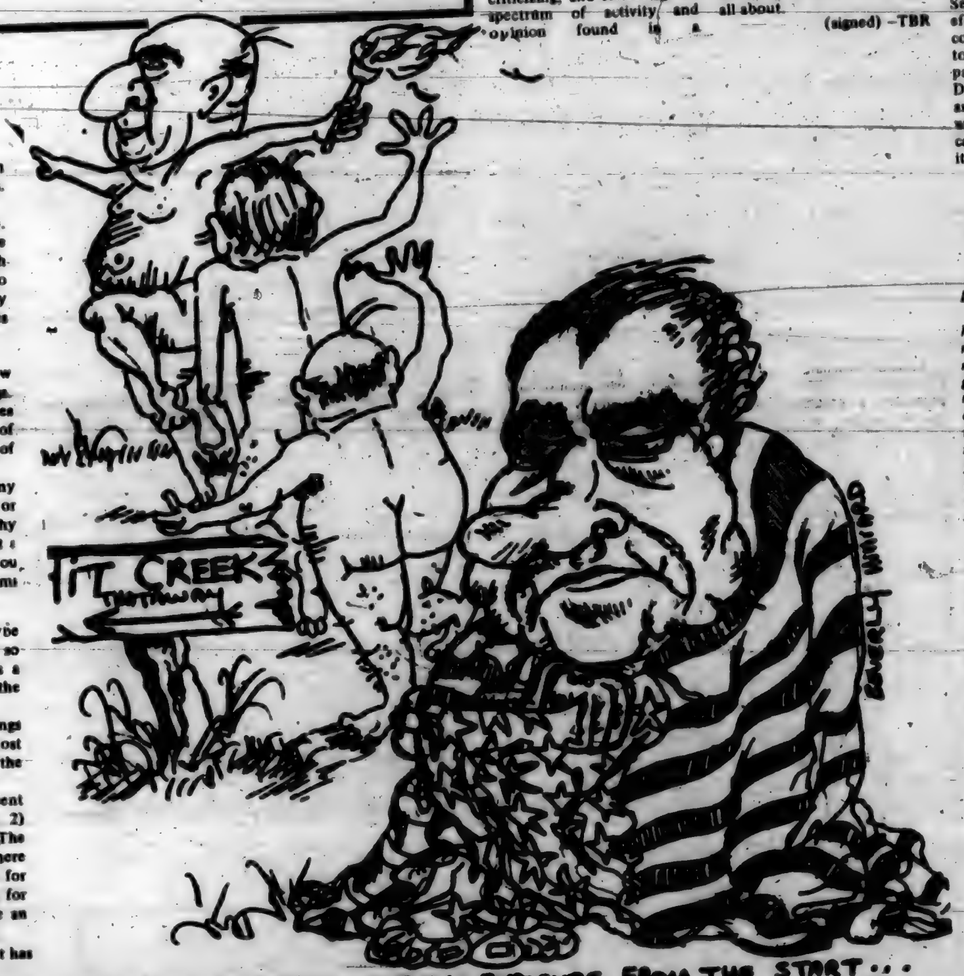
No big room for lectures and other stuff? How many times have you been in a full house in the North Lounge or Marsh Lounge? When Billings does plan something big why not try to work with the rest of the university and get a larger lecture hall. Sure, they're used a lot too, but if you just plan ahead and request the room early, no problems should arise.

Pity the poor off-campus student! No lockers. Maybe they should organize themselves a bit and not bring so much worthless material with them. If a student has a major project going on, he can get hold of someone in the faculty to let him use a little office space.

Too many people is a problem. Just walk into Billings during class changing time and the place is a zoo. Most people are heading to the Den for a snack. The apts and the lounges stay relatively quiet so people can study.

I think Billings has three functions as a student center–1) student organizations, offices and affairs, 2) study area during the day, 3) place to meet friends. The first one I talked about but the next two are areas where Billings is unique. The beauty of the building is ideal for studying if the library bothers you and also just right for meeting friends between classes. I think it would be an impossible task to create a new building on campus that has the personality that Billings does.

A closing thought–where would we build this student union? Why not tear down the fountain in the middle of the green and put up a ten-story condominium facing Waterman.



Restore Credit For ROTC Courses

by Tom E. McCormick, '75

Occasionally, a furor even stronger than the drive for more money grabs the faculty of this lowly university and forces them out of the shelter of the ivory tower. At times, the impulse to be socially aware is overpowering and they rush to join the tide of public opinion. In 1969, at the peak of the anti-war movement's popular appeal, the faculty of the college of Arts and Sciences symbolically snubbed the military by denying ROTC academic credit. Then they went home righteously indignant, glowing with social conscience, and tenured. Their action was about as daring as ordering the criminal on the TV screen to cease and desist, and about as self-sacrificing as giving someone else's money away. But they had demonstrated their concern.

Unfortunately, a number of students have been the victims of their teachers' social zeal. They were refused credit because of a faddish anti-militarism. It's evident that the profs acted hastily and under the impetus of public opinion, but few would admit it. (Professors are nothing if not independent thinkers, as we all know.) Why, it's just a coincidence that ROTC was denied academic credit at the time of a roaring anti-war movement.

Even though streaking has replaced Vietnam as the central concern of our times, the College of Arts and Sciences still won't grant academic credit to military studies courses. A few weak reasons have been presented, justifying this anachronism. First, it's said that ROTC isn't academically worthy of credit. Now that sounds nice (well, plausible), but it's preposterous. You see, the very same college extends credit to students involved in University Year for Action—a program in which students work (with minimal studying) in various social action projects for academic credit. Secondly, groping a bit, it's suggested that the college teaches liberal arts, and therefore it shouldn't offer vocational training in a military career. It's interesting, however, that the College of Arts and Sciences accepts up to eight courses from other colleges which are professional schools offering, presumably, professional training. Finally, it's said that the Army has too much control over the program. But a special report (whose title, in case you're interested, is: Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Military Studies to the Faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences) states that "the revision of the Army–UVM contract is satisfactory in regard to control [of the program], and academic freedom exists in these courses."

Perhaps the question of credit jurisdiction (i.e., does the faculty senate or the college decide which courses get credit?) will provide the next excuse for refusing academic credit. However, academic freedom insists that students be allowed to take the courses they desire. And justice demands that students not pay for the political whims of their professors. So let's hope that the College of Arts and Sciences graciously allows the faculty senate directive of 1965 (granting credit) to supersede the college's resolution of 1969 (removing credit).

And it would only be fair if the college acted just as quickly to restore credit to ROTC as it did to remove it.

The Cynic welcomes letters and columns from students, faculty, or any other readers. Materials for publication must be signed, but names will be withheld upon request.

Student Rights Abused

To the Editor:

In my opinion, the campus security guard who ordered WRUV to close down was abusing the rights of the students. It is true that a possibility of violence did exist but this of itself does not warrant such extreme action. If the security guard would have taken the trouble to explain the situation to Tim Lewis, the station manager, I'm sure that Tim would have been more than willing to cooperate. Once Tim would have been made aware that certain individuals intended to harm the streakers, WRUV could have stopped giving the whereabouts of the streakers and the station would have remained open.

The Education One?

To the Editor:

It has recently come to my attention, that a teacher from the Education department will not be rehired for the coming year. I am not fully aware of the reasons that brought this decision about, however, I am certain the resolution was not made in the interest of the students.

Kirk Avery, a member of the education department for the past few years, has more than proved himself to be valuable to the students of UVM. He dedicates unlimited time to his students in helping them on a individual, as well as a group basis. Mr. Avery continuously is providing every opportunity to gain experience in a students field of interest. Perhaps these attributes are too easily overlooked by those more concerned with the problems of politics and publication. Where should the priorities lie?

My concern is deep, not only for myself, but for future students who will not have the opportunity to take advantage of such a concerned and capable man as Kirk Avery.

Sincerely,
Jill Bishop

Living/Learning Directors

Dear Student:

While you were gone we had to enter your room to remove a settee which does not belong to you. You were given the opportunity to return it yourself and you chose not to. We have, therefore, had to pay someone to carry the furniture back to its proper place for you. You will receive a bill for this service in the near future.

Dear Brian, Nick, and whoever else is involved in this mess:

You people expect (5, 6, 7) persons to live in a suite that is furnished with one settee, one cube table, one round table, one directors chair and two lamps. Well I have news for you!!! You are all out of your minds!

First of all, it is impossible for five people to sit on one settee or in one directors chair.

Secondly, all the suites did not have all of the furnishings. This is not because other suites had extras, it is because there just wasn't enough furniture to go around. YOU BLEW IT!

Our suite was furnished with one settee and one director's chair. We were forced to "liberate" another settee. Then you generous people supplied us with a cube table. Thank you ever so much!

Our suite is not the only one that is so deprived. There are many others. But, the thing that takes the prize is that you have the nerve, the gall to charge us with the removal of this extra furniture!!! Well, I think you people owe us some money.

We have lived in the poorly constructed, cheaply furnished and haphazardly run complex. We've lived without necessary furnishings (lamps for the rooms, desk chairs, closets and bookcases). We've lived in rooms that have two inches of ice coating the windows and "The Hawk" coming through the sliding doors. We've also lived with bad plumbing and faulty electrical facilities.

In addition, you look up everything in the complex that is supposed to be for the students' use. You also run down a whole bunch of rhetoric when we try to get something new into the center.

I am sick and tired of all of this garbage that is printed in the newspaper about all the "nice little things" that go on in the Living/Learning Center. I think it's time you and everyone else associated with the center opened your eyes and saw what it's really like to live in a multimillion dollar mess like this one.

Now that you are aware of the conditions under which we have lived ... PAY ME ... and while you're at it pay the rest of us for the inconvenience and the poor study conditions caused by your bubble-brain efficiency.

Sincerely,
Cynthia Murphy

P.S. There are many other students living in these five buildings that feel the same way.

According To SAGA

by Randy Jansen

Standing in line for a meal, a question commonly comes to the student's mind. "How much profit is SAGA reaping?" According to Fred Smith, Head of SAGA operations at UVM, the profits of SAGA are very small.

Mr. Smith says that in the present contract, SAGA has a profit limitation of 10 per cent. According to Smith, SAGA, however, came nowhere near that amount.

Profits are figured by subtracting total expenses from total income. Based on this formula, SAGA made a 7.9 per cent profit. This was before taxes. After paying federal and state taxes, SAGA made a 3.7 per cent profit. Taxes took over 55 percent of the gross profit. UVM's SAGA did do better than the SAGA Corporation as a whole did. Use of The Office of Career Planning and Placement (at UVM) has doubled since the 71-72 academic year, and it is expected that 50 per cent of the class of '74 will be formally registered at the Office.

Larry Simmons, director of the office pointed out that the encouraging job market has increased student optimism about getting a job related to their field.

Simmons program for Career planning focused on students familiarizing themselves with the needs and demands of the job market. Simmons felt students illprepared near upon entering the job market was a serious problem. He pointed out the need for students to address themselves to the market before their senior year. Simmons explained that students with a variety of interests do not maximize their time and energy and course hours in a particular field for they are not sure what they want to do. It is these students, with diplomas in hand who float from one job to another for they have spread themselves too thin during college.

In order to remedy this situation, Simmons has polled the class of 1973 to find out where they are and what they are doing. The results are not yet known but they will be published when they are available. Simmons hopes to make the poll an annual practice that would help considerably in career counseling.

Exorcism Discus At ACE Lecture

by Pamela Hogarth

One of the most popular ACE lectures was held last Tuesday. The subject was exorcism and the speakers were the Rev. Omer Dufault, a minister at the Cunningham Newman Center and Ted Stronach campus minister.

The lecture began with Father Dufault discussing why "The Exorcist" should have such popular appeal. For a great part this was due to the advertising campaigns and as he pointed out, "money and power can turn a country on and off and they are both corrupters." Father Dufault felt that some people take the devil too seriously and that some deny that he exists: both extremes are bad. If a person thinks of bad things long enough he will begin to act negatively. What annoyed Father Dufault was that most people based their fear on the movie instead of delving further into what theologians have written on the subject of the devil, evil, and exorcism.

Ted Stronach felt that the whole topic was trivial. A great reason for "The Exorcist's" popularity was the power of mass media. He felt that people who worried about demon possession should not lose too much sleep over it as the probability is so remote. In the entire history of the United States only three or four cases of demon possession have been documented.

The movie deals with the conflict between good and devil. Mr Stronach stated that it is unfortunate that people see de as a strong ex there are othe such as alienation, more powerf Problems ex which are f and frighte devil, he said, After th spoken, th questions. According To SAGA, Profits Well Below Ceiling

by Randy Jansen

Standing in line for a meal, a question commonly comes to the student's mind, "How much profit is SAGA reaping?" According to Fred Smith, Head of SAGA operations at UVM, the profits of SAGA are very small.

Mr. Smith says that in the present contract, SAGA has a profit limitation of 10 per cent. According to Smith, SAGA, however, came nowhere near that amount.

Profits are figured by subtracting total expenses from total income. Based on this formula, SAGA made a 7.9 per cent profit. This was before taxes. After paying federal and state taxes, SAGA made a 3.7 per cent profit. Taxes took over 55 percent of the gross profit. UVM's SAGA did do better than the SAGA Corporation as a whole did. The corporation made only about 1.5 per cent to 2.5 per cent profit, a modest profit for a large scale corporation.

There are a couple of factors that will influence SAGA's profits this year. Most important is the rise in the cost of food. This year's rise in food costs was 25 per cent. However, SAGA was unable to raise costs to the school. Another factor in lower profits for SAGA is the perennial problem of pilferage. This year SAGA lost over $25,000 worth of utensils pilfered from the dining halls. A rise in the Vermont minimum wage will also cut into SAGA's profit margin.

Of all the money that is charged to each student for board about $120 goes to housing. The money is used solely for the maintainance and overhead for the dining halls. (UVM owns the facilities, SAGA does not.) Keith Miner, director of residence halls explains why this expenditure is placed under board instead of room: "Off-campus students use the dining hall facilities and it is only fair that they should help pay for the upkeep."

Another common question related to profits is wages to students. Why does SAGA pay only minimum wage or a little more to the student workers? Basically, explains Fred Smith, is that SAGA does not want to compete with the University for workers by paying more for its workers. "I'm never happy with the wages we pay anybody," says Mr. Smith. There is a bill now in the Vermont legislature to raise the minimum wage to $2.00 and is expected to be passed this July. This raise will cost SAGA $65,000 next year, if the increase is passed.

SAGA feels that with the rise in food costs, SAGA has been able to keep some features that other food services have been forced to drop. These include unlimited seconds, orange juice at breakfast, (rather than TANG or other artificial drinks) and ice-cream at every meal. Naturally some services have been cut back. SAGA no longer serves meat at breakfast, steak every Saturday or more solid meats at lunches.

SAGA's three-year contract is up for renewal this year. They have presented a radical new food program for next year. Housing is now negotiating this contract and agreement is expected this spring vacation.

Office Of Career Planning Doubled Since 1971-2

by Andy Morse

Use of The Office of Career Planning and Placement (at UVM) has doubled since the 71-72 academic year, and it is expected that 50 per cent of the class of '74 will be formally registered at the Office.

Larry Simmons, director of the office pointed out that the encouraging job market has increased student optimism about getting a job related to their field.

Simmons program for Career planning focused on students familiarizing themselves with the needs and demands of the job market. Simmons felt students illpreparedness upon entering the job market was a serious problem. He pointed out the need for students to address themselves to the market before their senior year. Simmons explained that students, with a variety of interests do not maximize their time and energy and course hours in a particular field for they are not sure what they want to do. It is these students, with diplomas in hand who float from one job to another for they have spread themselves too thin during college.

In order to remedy this situation, Simmons has polled the class of 1973 to find out where they are and what they are doing. The results are not yet known but they will be published when they are available. Simmons hopes to make the poll an annual practice that would help considerably in the future career counseling.

Simmons hopes the whole undergraduate student body will make use of the Office of Career Planning and Placement. He explained that students think more of what they were going to do after college and plan their courses, time and money to achieve these plans. Simmons points to a survey he conducted last semester on UVM undergraduates to exemplify students lack of direction when selecting courses. While 92 per cent of the respondents felt that one's program should prepare them for entry into a job, only 53.8 per cent used the likelihood of job opportunities after college in their academic field selection.

Another finding of the poll exemplified students lack of faith in their programs. While 92 per cent of the respondents felt that one's program should prepare them for entry into the work force, only 70.9 per cent felt their academic program would enable them to enter the market.

Simmons said that students definitely do need advisement and information. Of those answering, 82 percent felt that career information and planning is essential to landing a good position in their prefered field.

When asked what the graduates of the past years are doing Simmons could not answer. The placement office does not know how many UVM grads are working and in what field, how many are in graduate school and where. Simmons pointed out that it is indeed hard to advise future grads when the status of past graduates, and thus the effectiveness of the office, is not known.

The lecture began with Father Dufault discussing why "The Exorcist" should have such popular appeal. For a great part this was due to the advertising campaigns and as he pointed out, "money and power can turn a country on and off and they are both corrupters." Father Dufault felt that some people take the devil too seriously and that some deny that he exists: both extremes are bad. If a person thinks of bad things long enough he will begin to act negatively. What annoyed Father Dufault was that most people based their fear on the movie instead of delving further into what theologians have written on the subject of the devil, evil, and exorcism.

Ted Stronach felt that the whole topic was trivial. A great reason for "The Exorcist's" popularity was the power of mass media. He felt that people who worried about demon possession should not lose too much sleep over it as the probability is so remote. In the entire history of the United States only three or four cases of demon possession have been documented.

The movie deals with the conflict between good and devil. Mr. Stronach stated that it is unfortunate that people see demon possession as a strong example of evil as there are other means of evil, such as injustice and alienation, which is much more powerful and relevant. Problems exist in our society which are far more serious and frightening than the devil, he said.

After these men had spoken, they entertained questions. In response to a question of whether there is a real devil or if it is psychological phenomena, Mr. Stronach replied that the devil does exist but the good powers of God overcome the evil powers of the devil. As an example, Father Carras in the movie first tried to prove that the problem was a psychiatric one before turning to exorcism.

The two theologians when asked why Regan was chosen for the one to be possessed said, "for dramatic impact—a young girl is the epitome of goodness and vulnerability."

Father Dufault and Mr. Stronach were asked whether they had ever witnessed any supernatural occurrences. Thirty years ago Father Dufault was called on at midnight a few nights in a row to investigate strange noises and reports from people seeing things in a residence next door to what is now the Serendipity shop in downtown Burlington. He saw or heard nothing so he does not know how to account for reports. Ted Stronach during his work in mental hospitals has seen patients speaking in voices

Financial Matters Dominate S.A. Senate Meeting

by Scott Cahoon

Financial matters dominated the weekly meeting of the S.A. Senate last Tuesday night in Marsh Lounge. The senate voted to make all finance committee meetings and decisions open to the public, including members of the organization whose budget is being discussed.

Steve deCesznak, Finance Committee Chairperson, presented a progress report on the budget hearings. He announced that budget requests had totalled $170,000 for next year, as opposed to an expected allocation of $120,000 to all organizations.

Dick Cassidy offered the motion to open up the Finance Committee meetings, and accepted an amendment that exceptions be made when S.A. employees' salaries are being discussed.

DeCesznak protested that having members of the committee present when the budget requests are being discussed might intimidate committee members. He felt that organization members might take the committee's comments personally.

Gary Shaw, speaking in favor of Cassidy's motion, replied that committee members should not feel intimidated, but Al Spiegal, a member of the Finance Committee, said that he wanted to be able to make a decision without any kind of pressure.

Cassidy stated that the probess should be as democratic as possible. Therefore, organizations had a right to know why their budget requests were trimmed or turned down. He felt that the written report of the Finance Committee was insufficient for this.

President Sig Heller remarked that there definitely was a coercive effect when organization members sat in, while the decision was being made.

Summing up his argument, Cassidy said, "If any member of the Finance Committee feels they have to resign because of pressure, then I have the guts to sit on that committee and tell an organization that we're not going to give them any money."

The motion passed with 12 in favor, four against and three abstentions.

The Finance Committee report gave the minutes for the last five meetings, showing each organization's budget request and the committee's recommended allocations. Four organizations, WRUV, Office of Volunteer Programs, the Cynic, and S.A. Speakers, made budget requests of over $10,000. The committee's recommended allocation for OVP was $6500. The Cynic and S.A. Speakers received recommendations close to their requested amounts, while no decision was made pertaining to WRUV.

The committee also eliminated the $1000 executive honorarium for this year's president and treasurer. The Director of Student Activities withdrew a $1000 request for the repair of Billings Center furniture.

Chris Milanesi, S.A. secretary of elections, reported the results of last week's S.A. presidential election as follows: Peter MacAusland, 516; Steve Rollins, 480; Mario Macias, 351; and Dick Cassidy, 243. Write-in votes were for John Pappas, 52; Ed Pasqualin, five; Prof. Garrison Nelson, Michael Collier and Ken Bartlett, one vote each.

In old business, the senate approved four new organizations: the UVM Table Tennis Club, the Pre-Law Committee, the Student Chess Association and the Student Affairs and Student Counseling Committee of the UVM Women's Caucus. A motion to recognize the Nursing Intercollegiate Counsel was tabled indefinitely due to the absence of a representative from the organization.

Recognition of the committee of the Women's Caucus elicited the most discussion. The committee wants to deal with the transitional roles of both women and men, and to sponsor various workshops. As the statement of purpose as printed in the agenda referred only to women, the committee representatives accepted a change in wording to "women and men."

Under new business, Heller proposed a constitutional amendment designed to reduce the number of senators to 16, based on representation from dorm complexes and fraternities and sororities as a whole, and a reduced number of town senators.

Heller also asked to be reimbursed for $67.50 which former President Bill Sisco had overspent from the president's discretionary fund.

The senate suspended the rules in order to elect two new members to the finance committee.

Other motions included a proposal that the Cynic be required to carry three full-page ads per year for the S.A. at no cost, and a suggestion that the S.A. establish a reserve fund to help pay for a new ambulance for the Rescue Squad.

Decision-Making Process At Living/Learning Questionable

by Peter MacAusland and Andy Morse

Several members of the Living/Learning Center have recently questioned the effectiveness and accessibility of the Center's director, Dr. H. N. Muller III and Assistant Director Brian Lloyd. Although only in its first year of operation, the Center is experiencing activities reflecting questionable decision-making.

This winter Director Muller and Assistant Director Lloyd journeyed to Florida to purchase some tropical plants. Few, if any, students were involved in this decision. Four thousand five hundred dollars worth of plants were purchased by Muller and Lloyd, while they were away from the center for about one week. The plants are crowded into the dining hall, while several of them are ailing.

Recently, a history professor from Nova Scotia was invited to the Center through the "Scholar-in-Residence" program. A few university history professors were invited to the festivities honoring the guest. The lecture by the visiting professor was not well-attended, while part of the audience had to be recruited from a nearby class in program. Dinner, including shrimp cocktail, was reserved for select people with invitations. No students had the opportunity to benefit from the Center's guest (or the shrimp cocktail).

In C-Building, the majority of classroom, lounge, and office space is locked up. The A.P.E.X. and Early Childhood programs control the use of these areas. Yet only 18 of the 120 students living in C-Building participate in these programs. Therefore, the majority of students living there are denied access to areas within their own building.

The Living/Learning Center played host for a General Electric executive. The only reason apparent for his visit was that his son was applying to the University. The grand piano, one of the facilities of the Center, is not allowed to be used by students. It is the first year of operation of this complex, yet directed questions must be answered and problems solved if the Living/Learning Center is to fulfill its great potential.

Fraternities Promote Social-Intellectual Split

by Margo Howland

Editor's note: This is the second of a three-part series.

"Fraternities do grievous harm by splitting off the social life from whatever intellectual life goes on in the University," remarked Professor Stanley "Huck" Gutman, in a recent Cynic interview.

Gutman, an Assistant Professor of English at UVM, added that his opinions on fraternities and sororities stem from "less than satisfactory" experiences in a fraternity and from a basic philosophy about the so-called "elitist" nature of the Greek system. "I don't think I have any abnormal hatred of fraternities; I had some good experiences in one, and some not-so-good experiences," he added.

Gutman graduated from Hamilton College in New York in 1965 and at one point was a member of Gryphon, a local fraternity. "Gryphon had gone local about three years before I joined, because the national, Lambda Chi Alpha, would not permit Negroes or Jews to join," Gutman stated.

There were twelve other fraternities at Hamilton, including Delta Psi, Phi Delta Theta, and Sigma Phi, and the population of Greeks was about ninety percent of the whole college.

Gutman held no chapter office and left Gryphon after a year and a half.

"I felt there were other, more important things than a forced and fraudulent brotherhood," he explained. When asked to elaborate, Gutman went on: "There were all these people in the house that were supposed to be brothers and many of them didn't feel brotherly towards each other. It was not terribly satisfying to have all these brothers running around, not all of whom I liked."

When asked if there appeared to be a general dissatisfaction with Gryphon at the time he left, Gutman replied, "Lots of guys left; lots of people left lots of fraternities. It was a time when fraternity structure was beginning to weaken. It began to weaken because enrollment in the college expanded and enrollment was democratized. Students had a variety of backgrounds and Hamilton was no longer an elite college."

"Fraternities are elitist," Gutman charged. "They pick and choose the people they like best. They strengthen the very worst aspects of social life in America by first, choosing people on the basis of "merit, second, by forming in-groups and out-groups, and third, by creating a sense of moral superiority on the part of those who have enough money and a certain social background which is the prerequisite for joining a fraternity."

Gutman referred again to the split between social and intellectual life on the campus, saying that fraternities help "promote a split between learning experiences and enjoyment, which is detrimental to the joyous and broad learning experience, that should be fundamental to everyone's education.

"I feel that people go to fraternities to drink and to have a good time, and they go somewhere else for classes, and the two don't seem to be related. Fraternities are totally irrelevant to the academic process as I see it."

Gutman was asked if this was necessarily bad, and replied simply, "No."

In addition, Gutman admitted that he was not familiar with the Greek houses at the University of Vermont.

"There may be many things fraternities do that I don't know about, and I think that's part of the problem, Fraternities and sororities at UVM try to survive by keeping themselves as far from the faculty and academic environment as possible."

Gutman was asked if he was aware that every Greek house traditionally holds a faculty tea or cocktail party every semester. He replied, "Of all the faculty members I know, I know of only one who has ever been invited to a fraternity." He did not care to state publicly who the colleague was, and continued, "The fact is that they (Greek houses) are visible to me and my colleagues only if we drive by their houses or if we go to a hockey game and see who's having a keg party."

Gutman feels that the Greek houses must participate more actively and openly in the variety of campus experiences.

"Try inviting students to something other than a keg party. Ask the Department of Psychology the next time they have a speaker, if they can host a reception. Sponsor a non-credit course in painting taught by the Art Department. Ask someone that isn't a Greek to write an article about them, after having lived in a house for a week."

Gutman added that the Greek houses shouldn't keep to themselves as much: "It's a matter of their being so goddam secretive. And if they want to be secretive, they're going to have to put up with people's hostility."

"The Spirit Is The Proof Of The Fun"

by Melanie Donovan

Take a troop of true-blue Americans and face them off in musical confrontation with a gang of sour-grape-green Continentals and what have you got? You've got Anthony J. Stimac's adaptation of Royall Tyler's restoration comedy, The Contrast.

The musical score, written by Don Pippin and Steven Browns runs the gamut from hilarious ballads on such subjects as "Lord Chesterfield" and "Jacking up my Jill" to moving songs like "A House Full of People." All were rendered in true restoration style by a quintet of colonial instrumentalists. The singing, under the direction of Steven Freeman, and the dancing, choreographed by Ruthmary O'Brien, were delightful to hear and watch. What did it matter, if the actors sang and spoke a little too softly and the dancers were a little out of step? The end result was chuckle-filled fun.

Some very credible performances were turned in by the cast. Laurie Casey as the sentimental Maria Van Rough sang beautifully and Ed Tracey, in her father, gave a gruffly comical performance highlighted by a soft-shoe to "Keep Your Little Eye on the Main Chance, Mary." Karen Trott and Debbie Mullen giggled and primped perfectly as the two coquettes, Charlotte and Letitia. The "odious" Dimple (Craig Toth) and his foppish servant, Jeesemy (Geery Hunt) contrasted well with Paul Ugalde's patriotic, if dull, portrayal of Colonel Manley, while Keith Gaylord's clod-hopping Jonathan clumsily courted Jenny (Jane Bradbury); the Van Rough's flirtatious maid. William Shakespeare, as Frank, Charlotte's silent butler, stepped in here and there to bring in relevant messages like "The horses are ready" and bring out the audience's laughter. A tuneful chorus of Americans and rivalling Continentals completed the cast.

Under Edward Feidner's direction, UVM's production of The Contrast was as fitting an opening for the Royall Tyler Theater as "The Star Spangled Banner" is for Yankee Stadium. Mr. Feidner's direction, the rich costumes by Nancy Haynes and William Schenk's elaborate proscenium set combined with the efforts of the cast to prove the refrain of the closing number, "The Spirit is the Proof of the Fun."

The Contrast: A Marvelous Piece Of Musical Fluff

by Peter Campbell

When the cast in The Contrast shouted "Hip-hooray, We are Americans!" in their opening number last Friday night, I immediately got the sense of a contrast that went far beyond the contrast shown between the Americans and their Tory counterparts; it was between the mixed emotions we all feel about our country today and the simple patriotism voiced for America in this nearly two-hundred-year-old play. The Contrast was the first American comedy to be played professionally. But its style is heavily derived from the "comedy of manners" plays that were popular in Europe. This type always deals with the foibles of the upper classes, their love affairs, their hypocrisies and intrigues, and they usually ended with a marriage. If you have not learned the significance of Royall Tyler, who wrote The Contrast, to the University of Vermont, then I must conclude that you have been deaf, dumb, and blind these past few weeks. Suffice it to say that he was no Moliere. I doubt that I have ever read a play where less happens. Fortunately, the original script was turned into a musical two years ago by a couple of men who are interested in reviving historically important plays for our nation's approaching bi-centennial, and more fortunately for us, Ed Feidner, head of the Drama department, and The Contrast's director, had the sense to keep his production all in good fun. So, what we finally got to see was a big marvelous piece of red, white, and blue, musical fluff that was tuned to perfection.

The Contrast was well-cast. They were superb, with two minor exceptions. "Colonel Manly," played by Paul Ugalde, could have borne his patriotic mien with more vigor. "Jeesemy," played by Jerry Hunt was somewhat weak-voiced and stiff at times, though he has improved greatly since his role in Faustus last year. As for the rest, I hardly know where to begin praising. Karen Trott and Laurie Casey were both very good as "Charlotte" and "Maria," respectively. (UVM is finally getting some good female actors.) Ms. Casey had the best voice among the girls. She even gave some feeling to an otherwise insipid little number called "A House Full of People." Craig Toth, as "Dimple," a foppish dandy, was another standout. He has a fine voice, and his song, "Lord Chesterfield," was very funny. The lighter songs were the better ones, and Ed Tracy, as "Van Rough," Maria's good-natured father got the best one, "Keep Your Little Eye on the Main Chance Mary," a catchy number that sounds much like a Scottish wedding song.

Apart from the beginning and the ending, the best scenes were the two with "Jonathan," who was excellently played by Keith Gaylord. Jonathan was a gangly homespun man quite out of his element in New York. "Everything is upstairs," he kept complaining. This yankee character from the backwoods showed where the real contrast was – between himself and the rest of the characters, who still had the manners of Europe. Starting with the "Jonathan" from The Contrast, I believe that one could trace the character of the "yankee" through the following two hundred years of American theatre with meaningful results.

Jonathan's scene with little "Jenny" (played vivaciously by Jane Bradbury), where they teach each other how to dance was a joy, as was the piece where Jeesamy tries to teach Jonathan how to laugh properly – "A Hundred Thousand Different Ways."

In terms of big play production, this cast gave the most well-balanced performance I have seen at UVM. The scenery and lighting were well-constructed and well-produced, and the costumes were really fine. But credit should also go to the new theatre itself for being large enough to accomodate an extravaganza like this. It could never have been done in the old theatre.

Now for the nit-picking. First, I thought there were too many asides to the audience. This sort of cuteness – particularly Maria's "Thanks, Dad" and torch-song routine – wore on me. Secondly, I thought the play was a bit too long, even for a musical. Fortunately the pace picked up toward the last with a nice campy ending, where the cast danced and sang their way through an adaptation of "Keep Your Eye on the Main Chance, Mary" called "Keep Your Eye on the Royall Tyler."

The Contrast could not have been a more appropriate opener for the new theatre, and its performance gave testimony to the growing quality of dramatic production at UVM.

From Harlem To UVM-'P.J. Jones,' A Play

P.J. Jones, an original play, written and directed by Daryll Loyd, a senior at UVM, will be presented by the Third World Organization in April.

P. J. Jones, played by Lyle Ferguson, is a ruthless drug pusher in Harlem who has big plans of joining the syndicate. His sidekick, Joey, played by Matt Coleman, wants to stay uptown, so he has Joey killed. P.J. joins the syndicate and finds that the big-time is not so rosy after all. The police are in on the action too, and business gets merry with the cops. Harold Booth plays detective Wright, a frustrated black cop, and Mark Sherman plays a police captain who resorts to his own methods to obtain "justice."

Meanwhile, P.J. is caught in a torrid relationship with his girlfriend, Gloria, played by Denise Glasco. Apparently she is responsible for P.J.'s final nemesis. The director would only make the cryptic comment that, "behind every successful man there is a woman, and behind every destroyed man there is a woman."

Mr. Loyd, who is a social welfare major at UVM, has been writing drama and short stories since he was in junior high. He explained that by writing P.J. Jones he hoped to kill the myth that blacks enjoy taking narcotics. "I also want to show why I think there is such a longevity of drugs in the black community and why so many black children get strung out on drugs. I don't want people to come up after and say the play was good or lousy; I want to hear if they have learned anything. I want to show the 'why'," he commented. With this idea in mind, the director and his actors plan to discuss the play with the audience after the performance.

Other performers in P.J. Jones include Clarence Eldridge, who plays "Hollywood," Kent Canella, Jose Santana, Ed Tracey, and Zach Ramsey. The action (fifteen scenes in two acts) takes place in P.J.'s office, in a bar, and in an alley. "From the elite to the junkies," quipped Owen Keefe, technical director for the play.

Mr. Loyd concluded with an explicit warning to those who get easily upset by vulgar language, violence and racial slurs: "Don't come to this play...'cause it's going to hit you right in the face."

P.J. Jones will be at the Royall Tyler Theatre on April 5, 6, and 7. Tickets may be purchased at the theatre box office for $1.00 with a student I.D. and $1.50 without.

Jennifer Cover Is "A Woman Brilliant In Her Art"

by Peter Campbell

I fell in love with Jennifer Cover instantly at her one-woman show, "The Lady and the Tiger," last year. By standing on an empty stage alone and orally interpreting a story or a poem, this remarkable woman brought whole worlds to life before my eyes. She could transform herself from a teen-age girl to an old man, or from a tiger to a lady with her volatile voice, a different weight distribution of her body, and perhaps a slight widening of her eyes. It was magical; I was entranced, and I am pleased to say that after seeing her new show, "A Comic View of a Woman's World," at the new St. Paul's Cathedral Sunday night, I am still awestruck by her talent.

Jennifer Cover is a teacher of oral interpretation at UVM. Originally from Washington, D.C., she got her Ph.D. in speech at Emerson College in Boston, and came to Burlington a couple of years ago. But this information says nothing about the wide and deep understanding of literature and people she must possess in order to come across so vividly and eclectically on stage.

The same virtuosity was apparent Sunday night when she opened with "The Day the World Almost Came to an End," a modern short story by a black writer, Pearl Clayton, which was followed immediately by "To the Virgins to Make Much of Time," an Elizabethan poem by Robert Herrick. In fact, the show had a nice progression from the world view of a child to that of a young woman, to a mature woman in "Taming of the Shrew," to old age in an excerpt from the "Prologue to the Wife of Bath's Tale," to death in the "Demon Lover," and then back to youth in Robert Frost's poem, "Wild Grapes."

My favorites were (appropriately) the first, middle and last selections. As I listened to "The Day the World Almost Came to an End," I closed my eyes and tried to listen to the words cold - as I would read the story silently in my head. I realized that the story was good, but not that great. However, her interpretation made every phrase vibrant, "Speak up like and express yourself!" is still ringing in my mind.

But the flirting scene from "The Taming of the Shrew" was particularly astonishing. Here, Ms. Cover instantly changed from the overbearing Petrucio to the saucy Kate with a deftness that would make Siva envious. One of the best stage moments I have ever experienced was where she turned from the aggressive Petrucio grabbing at Kate's arm and twisting to the defiant Kate trying to break his grasp – all in one motion. She portrayed the same amazing double character role in "The Wild Grapes," where she transformed from the little boy watching to his sister clutching desperately at the branch above her. This was the second poem by Frost that Ms. Cover has "discovered" for me. Last year, she interpreted a poem of his about a farm family that kept their moronic child locked up in a cage, which haunted me for a long while after.

This brings me to my only misgivings about the show. Because all the pieces were comic we did not see another dimension Jennifer Cover has for the rendering of the serious, the sad, or the tragic. I missed that Sunday night. I also feel that the "Demon Lover," an old English ballad, at least for me, has a melancholia in the words that belies a comic interpretation, though I recognize her interpretation was a daring and masterful risk.

I am also uncertain as to whether this really was a "comic view" of the woman's world. Jennifer must have been aware that with the exception of the first work, which was more the view of a child than a girl, and possibly the "Demon Lover," all of these works were written by men. And in every selection there is a struggle where the woman is trying to come out of the man's shadow. Even Chaucer's old lady in the "Wife of Bath's Tale" who outlived five husbands is planning to wed that final husband in the sky, God. A lot of women might not think that the final message was so funny. That just may have been Jennifer Cover's point. At any rate, Jennifer is a woman brilliant in her art. Go see her if you ever have the chance -- your life may be richer for it.

S.A. Concerts will bring Ted Curson and his jazz to Ira Allen Chapel on Sunday, April 14. Tickets ($3 UVM student I.D.; $2.50 general admission) available beginning Wednesday, April 3 at the Un Store and Bailey's downtown. A free jazz workshop held in the Living/Learning fireplace commo afternoon before the concert.

Slow Dancer
Boz Scaggs
Columbia

Boz Scaggs' musicianship can't be underscored. He's been around since the word "go." The major imperfection is production in the Scaggs career, in addition to the establishment of Boz as truly polished artist. In his new album, Slow Dancer, all of these shortcomings are put to rest, in a well-layered, symphonic rendition of some of the best Scaggs material to date.

Boz Scaggs has been known primarily for his jam work with superstar personnel such as Duane Allman, and his album product has reflected a "sittin' around 'n playin'" quality since his beginnings as a solo artist. One of his best numbers of all time, "Loan Me a Dime," despite an outstanding coterie of talented hands, still comes off as a frayed bit of spontaneity that just happened in a studio. It certainly isn't a control-room number, and the discomfort of this staged on-the-spot happening is transmitted to the listener. Unlike the early numbers, the tunes from Slow Dancer are made for and from the studio, and require all the strings, horns, and chorus you can cram into Studio B.

Boz tempers his wizardry as a musician into calculated, controlled atmospheres, sounding both satisfied and at ease. The resultant "laid-back" recording puts the listener into a state of nonchalant interest... traveling the same gentle crescendoes and innuendoes as does the music. Slow Dancer is the por artist in a mellow mood, looking ba wild and rowdy, as bad, somber times collage. Slow Da important statem one of our oldest back and let the fe

Fortunately the pace picked up toward the last with a most campy ending, where the cast danced and sang their way through an adaptation of "Keep Your Eye on the Main Chance, Mary" called "Keep Your Eye on the Royall Tyler."

The Contrast could not have been a more appropriate opener for the new theatre and its performance gave testimony to the growing quality of dramatic production at UVM.

Mr. Loyd, who is a social welfare major at UVM, has been writing drama and short stories since he was in junior high. He explained that by writing P.J. Jones he hoped to kill the myth that blacks enjoy taking narcotics. "I also want to show why I think there is such a longevity of drugs in the black community and why so many black children get strung out on drugs. I don't want people to come up after and say the play was good or lousy; I want to hear if they have learned anything. I want to show the 'why'," he commented. With this idea in mind, the director and his actors plan to discuss the play with the audience after the performance.

Other performers in P.J. Jones include Clarence Eldridge, who plays "Hollywood," Kenji Canella, Jose Santana, Ed Tracey, and Zach Ramsey. The action (fifteen scenes in two acts) takes place in P.J.'s office, in a bar, and in an alley. "From the elite to the junkies," quipped Owen Keefe, technical director for the play.

Mr. Loyd concluded with an explicit warning to those who get easily upset by vulgar language, violence and racial slurs. "Don't come to this play...'cause it's going to hit you right in the face."

P.J. Jones will be at the Royall Tyler Theatre on April 5, 6, and 7. Tickets may be purchased at the theatre box office for $1.00 with a student I.D. and $1.50 without.

ETV Weekend Programming

by Carol Dufault

Vermont's first educational television station, Channel 33, began week-end programming on February 16, 1974. Public feedback, in the form of letters, alerted ETC officials of an increasing demand for educational programming, and many people expressed the feeling that children's programming would prove to be a positive alternative to traditional Saturday morning cartoons.

On Saturdays, broadcasting begins with Sesame St. at 8:30 a.m., followed by the Electric Company, Zoom, Mr. Roger's Neighborhood, and Hodge Podge Lodge. These children's programs are geared to various segments of the four to twelve year old viewing audience. For example, the popular Sesame St. is aimed at the five and six year olds, while Hodge Podge Lodge, a program concerned with nature and conservation, is geared for the 8-10 age group.

In regard to Sesame St., Ray Dilley, director of Information Services at ETV, stated that the program is in "serious financial trouble." According to Dilley, Sesame St.'s sponsor, the Ford Company, will not finance the show as of May. Despite this potential setback, Dilley personally thinks a new sponsor will be found, and it is very possible that programming will continue in the fall.

Sunday programming begins at 4:30 p.m. with a one hour documentary followed by a feature story concerning a specific topic such as "How Maple Syrup is Made." Vermont Cracker Barrel, a talk show, begins at 7 p.m., and a very popular, super science series entitled Nova may be seen at 7:30. Religious America, a documentary dealing with numerous persons involved in various religions precedes Masterpiece Theatre at 9 p.m. Sunday evening broadcasting ends with the conservative William F. Buckley's Firing Line.

Currently Masterpiece Theatre is airing the widely acclaimed BBC production Upstairs Downstairs. Although the original BBC production which was shown in England was composed of 26 episodes, only 13 episodes are aired in the United States. A brief introduction to each show as well as an ending documentary has been prepared by American television in an effort to inform the general public of the relationship of servants and their employers in England. This is the setting and context of Upstairs Downstairs. According to Dilley, the entire 13 episode series will be repeated during the summer.

Although the Vermont State Legislature is the primary financial source of ETV's operational budget, it was impossible to obtain an additional $82,000 for the week-end broadcasting.

Because the Legislature offered no support for week-end broadcasting, ETV was forced to turn to other sources. In February, a TV telethon was conducted and members of the viewing audience were asked to pledge money to defray operational costs of week-end programming.

Officials at ETV were extremely pleased with the response to their initial fund raising endeavors, and approximately $20,000 has been promised from viewers. Ray Dilley pointed out that, "a good share of the pledges came from Canada. Many Canadians prefer us to the CBC." In regard to the actual money received from pledges, Dilley stated that according to national figures, approximately 90 percent of the money pledged is actually received.

Future fund raising techniques are still in the planning stages, however ETV officials hope to gain support by approaching businesses and conducting fund raising campaigns through the mail and on the air. Dilley is confident that additional funds will be raised to continue week-end programming, and he foresees week-end broadcasting as a success. "We will work in every way possible to continue the programming."

Officials at ETV are amazed at the growing popularity of the Saturday and Sunday programs and see them as "an interesting alternative" to programs aired on the major networks.

The White Mouse: "The Finest Place To Eat On Campus"

by Kathy Stinson

Have you wined and dined at the White Mouse Restaurant? If not, consider the occasion a must. Now on Sunday nights the Harris-Millis dining room is the finest place to eat on campus. The cafeteria atmosphere has been radically transformed, and in its place is a formal restaurant. One is ushered into decoratively clothed, candlelit tables by a dignified suave maitre d' and shortly after attended by a waitress.

The White Mouse's menu features several well-selected entrees such as stuffed chicken breasts, steak, London broil, and a seafood platter. Steak has decidedly been the most popular choice. These entrees are proceeded by an appetizer and a salad which one may serve oneself. The salad bar, one of the highlights of the meal is set up creatively and appealingly to include every imaginable ingredient which enhances a salad. One may also help oneself to delicious freshly baked breads. The choice of desserts is also varied. The selections of fresh fruit, baked goods, or parfaits are veritable delicacies.

SAGA must be congratulated for its sudden and successful shift from cafeteria production to a quality restaurant. Furthermore, the prices at the White Mouse are unheard of elsewhere, $2.50 with a meal ticket and $4.50 without.

Jim Fiorivera, area coordinator of MAT, and Susan Rand, manager of Harris-Millis cafeteria are the two creators of the White Mouse. Everything served on the menu is SAGA's. Presently, the restaurant is losing some money. This is because most of its patrons are meal ticket holders and therefore only pay $2.50 which is not enough to cover the cost of a steak dinner. However, it is hoped that as more people learn about the White Mouse, its clientele will spread beyond the dormitories.

Reservations can be made by calling Susan Rand at the Harris-Millis cafeteria.

Joseph Campbell, Renowned Mythology Scholar, Speaks On Old And New Myths

by Melanie Choukas

According to Joseph Campbell, Sarah Lawrence professor and scholar of world mythology, mythic images are meaningful projections of the human psyche. In a fascinating lecture, accompanied by slides, Campbell plunged a large UVM audience into the mythological realm Wednesday, March 6.

Campbell's approach was Jungian, his style inimitably his own. He captivated his audience with his lively and humorous personality, as he spoke convincingly of the existence of archetypal symbols.

Archetypes are universal mythological interpretations of human experience. Carl Jung recognized that all societies have myths to live by and that many of these myths recur universally. Campbell demonstrated the validity of Jung's theory by showing slides of artwork ranging from the ancient Minoan society of Crete to modern times in which the mythic symbols were strikingly similar.

"These myths," said Campbell, "reveal potentials and realities in the spirit of man that are now, yesterday, and forever." Because he believes in the timelessness of mythological expression, Campbell compared ancient Greek myths in which mortals were punished for trying to be like gods, to the use of LSD, which plunges human beings into a mythic realm they are not equipped to deal with.

As westerners, Campbell believes we are the inheritors of two opposing mythic traditions, the Bible and ancient Greek humanism. The Bible tells us that God is transcendant, that our laws come from a supernatural source. Not to worship this source is considered diabolical. However, in the Greek tradition the source of law is not supernatural, but human. Thus we are caught between devotion to a transcendant God and devotion to ourselves. This dichotomy is illustrated through the image of the snake.

In the Cretan world the snake was a powerful symbol of life ever-renewing itself although bound to the earth. The snake was identified with the mother goddess who was worshipped as the giver and taker of life. In the Bible the snake is evil and there is a fall from the garden because of it.

Joseph Campbell feels that we are all myth-makers that personal and social myths guide our lives. In changing times like ours the social myths become muddled and confusing, and it is up to us to create new symbols to give meaning to our lives. Campbell feels that the greatest modern myth-makers are schizophrenics who are plunged into a sub-conscious realm, the realm where myths are born.

Slow Dancer
Boz Scaggs
Columbia

Boz Scaggs' musicianship can't be underscored. He's been around since the word 'go.' The major imperfection is production in the Scaggs career, in addition to the establishment of Boz as truly polished artist. In his new album, Slow Dancer, all of these shortcomings are put to rest, in a well-layered, symphonic rendition of some of the best Scaggs material to date.

Boz Scaggs has been known primarily for his jam work with superstar personnel such as Duane Allman, and his album product has reflected a "sittin' around 'n playin'" quality since his beginnings as a solo artist. One of his best numbers of all time, "Loan Me a Dime," despite an outstanding coterie of talented hands, still comes off as a frayed bit of spontaneity that just happened in a studio. It certainly isn't a control-room number, and the discomfort of this staged on-the-spot happening is transmitted to the listener. Unlike the early numbers, the tunes from Slow Dancer are made for and from the studio, and require all the strings, horns, and chorus you can cram into Studio B.

Boz tempers his wizardry as a musician into calculated, controlled atmospheres, sounding both satisfied and at ease. The resultant "laid-back" recording puts the listener into a state of nonchalant interest... traveling the same gentle crescendoes and innuendoes as does the music. Slow Dancer is the portrait of an artist in a mellow, reflective mood, looking back on the wild and rowdy, as well as the bad, somber times. As a life collage, Slow Dancer is an important statement from one of our oldest friends. Sit back and let the feet go!

Album Review:

Yes' Tales Are Ambitious And Accomplished

by Doug Collette

TALES FROM TOPOGRAPHIC OCEANS
Yes
(Atlantic SD 2-908)

Yes have got to be one of the most impressive rock and roll bands I know of. They're ambitious and imaginative and they make it pay with an accomplished singlemindedness that most groups can't even conceive of. In a Rolling Stone interview last spring, Jon Anderson detailed Yes' future, mentioning an extended concept album which would not only be their biggest recorded undertaking, but one which would incorporate into Yes' playing more funk and more improvisation to compensate for the sterility that even they were beginning to feel. Tales from Topographic Oceans sounds to me like a total fulfillment of Anderson's wishful prophecy.

The sound of Fragile and Close to the Edge is less that of a quintet playing together than of five lead instruments playing simultaneously, but on Tales the instruments are subservient to the music; in fact, if it weren't true that the music were of prime importance, Steve Howe and Chris Squire as well as Rick Wakeman would receive much more recognition as individuals. Each is of virtuoso calibre, but they reserve their technical prowess for particular ends. For instance, Steve Howe's acoustic guitar interlude on side three isn't included just to let us know just how masterful he is (although it does prove that as a fringe benefit), but to provide a respite from the jarring section that's just preceded.

Alan White's drumming is vital to the new Yes sound. Bill Bruford always struck me as one of those too busy drummers, but White provides the point of stability that harnesses Wakeman's multi-colored keyboard underpinning, the apocalyptic rumble of Squire's bass, and the ferment of Howe's guitars – those three can and do range as far as they wish without ever threatening to descend into an incoherent sonic maelstrom. Yes now has more of the immediacy of rock and roll without sacrificing any of the nobility that has always marked their music and inspired comparisons to classical music.

The format of Tales From Topographic Oceans isn't entirely new. The album is comprised of four movements, similar to "Close To The Edge," based on Shastric scriptures that describe the phases of human existence, which is as lofty as it sounds, but not pretentious in the least. There's no didacticism with Yes lyrics, only a reflection and suggestion about that which is greater than all of us. If that sounds baffling, try this: what Anderson and Howe's lyrics describe are complex in their simplicity and if you sense what they mean, there's no need to explain.

Each of the four pieces – "The Revealing Science of God," "The Remembering," "The Ancient," and "Ritual" – are distinctly different in tone and flavor, and the large amount of free playing that supplements (not pads) the sub-themes suggests just how much of an advance in conception and musicianship this music is over previous Yes works. Even though there are no direct musical or lyrical cross-references, Tales From Topographic Oceans does coalesce as one: it begins casually, moving in long supple currents that ebb and flow to a harsh climax from which the fourth side rescues you with the gentleness of a lullaby. Best of all, the efficiency with which it's all done doesn't detract in the least from the joy and positiveness that makes this group's name so appropriate.

Just as much as this album must have stretched Yes' musical capabilities, there's a challenge for whoever wants to listen. It took me about a half-dozen concentrated listenings before I began to get in tune with it, but I'm willing to work for my satisfaction in music. Are you?

If you're not, or if you want something just to fill the silence, Tales From Topographic Oceans won't do the job at all. It'll be your loss.

Liberty Union To Challenge Telephone Increase

Montpelier—Bernard Sanders, chairperson of the Liberty Union, announced today that the Liberty Union was beginning its campaign to stop the New England Telephone Company from getting any increase whatsoever in their rates. The phone company is requesting that the PSB allow them to raise their rates by 25 percent.

Sanders stated: "We are announcing today the first step in our efforts to defeat the New England Telephone Company's outrageous request for a 25 percent increase in their rates. On Thursday, we submitted to the Public Service Board a formal request that we be admitted to participate in the case as a full party. Our representatives in the case will be Steve Dunham, a UVM student from Brattleboro, and Peter Diamondstone, of Brattleboro. Steve is here to answer any questions about our petition to intervene in the case.

"The Liberty Union believes that at a time when corporate profits in America are up by 30 percent while the average worker's income is actually declining because of inflation is actually declining, at a time when A.T. & T.'s profits were up a record-breaking 17 percent in 1973 over their record-breaking 12 percent increase in 1972 while the wage structure in Vermont remains abysmally low, unemployment remains high, and our senior citizens remain in desperate economic condition — that it would be an absolute crime for the PSB to grant New England Tel. a one penny increase in rates. The simple fact is that the people of a low income state like Vermont cannot afford to pay any increase in phone rates, and should not be forced to do so. The Public Service Board has got to begin to start worrying about the people of this state for a change, and not about A.T. & T. — the corporation which owns over 90 percent of New England Tel. In 1973 A.T. & T. made more profits than any other company in the world — close to $3 billion.

"In addition to actively opposing this requested increase, it is our strong feeling that when the people of this state understand the facts about the telephone company there will be such a loud outcry that the PSB will have no choice but to deny the requested increase.

"At this time we would also like to announce that if the PSB does grant an increase, we will pick up where we left off last year and help organize a boycott of any increase in the PSB grants. The phone company may want an increase, the PSB may grant them an increase, but there is no way they are going to get the increase if the people of Vermont refuse to pay it."

In addition to participating in the rate case before the PSB, the Liberty Union intends to work actively outside of the hearing. We intend to work with as many trade unions, senior citizen groups, consumer groups, low income groups, farm groups, and student groups as we can in others — they often reflect the worst in human behavior; the predatory and the naive.

You're not a bartender just because you know enough to wipe off the bar and empty the ashtrays every so often, just because you know how to hold a beer mug at the tap, just because you know enough to put a teaspoon of sugar in a bloody mary. You can even compare and contrast the starting lineups of the '52 New York Giants with the '73 Oakland A's and jump to a five-minute explanation of the differences in Oriental and Western philosophies. You can manage a believable chuckle at a customer's appalling joke and make scientific, historical, and economic sense out of phyloxxera. You're not a bartender yet.

You can even deter an eight-foot Cyclops from making amorous advances to unappreciative sweet young things, and you're still not there. Knowledge of technique does not give off an aura of competence behind the bar to those watching.

Our behind the bar "model" works at the Guildernleeve Inn in Litchfield, Connecticut. Dave Harrison left Burlington early St. Patrick's day for Litchfield's greener pastures of bartending. At McGuires, the Swiss Chocolate Pot, and the Pub, Dave showed us that he knows the technical stuff, he laughed at our jokes, he told his share of stories, and he could out-do anyone at bar room intellectualism. Recently, towards closing time, he showed the signs of fatigue brought on by a day shift at the Swisspot and nights at the Pub. Even then, confronted with the inhibitions "liberated" by alcohol, he would just shrug.

Many know that Dave boxed Golden Gloves here last year and won the Vermont title. Dave is also a karate black belt. A few of us always waited for a real life demonstration; we waited for someone to look cross-eyed at him. It never happened. He just shrugged.

We were told recently that Dave Harrison used to be a policeman in Buffalo, New York. That made us suspect that he learned to shrug there. Buffalo is certainly an ideal place for that. When Dave Harrison decided to bartend, Buffalo lost a good peace officer for sure.

We hope he can't stand Litchfield.

Exorcism Discussed At ACE Lecture ...

totally dissimilar to their real voices.

A man now lives in Washington, D.C., who was possessed by a demon but there is no need to publicize his case, as Mr. Stronach pointed out for he is leading a normal happy life.

In respect to how the Church has been affected by this sudden public interest in the devil and evil, many people have complained to priests of their being possessed by the devil. These people are very unstable to begin with, they said.

People have not been any more stimulated to attend church or become involved in religious activities. Being scared into becoming religious is not a stable basis for it, Father Dufault pointed out.

Father Dufault stated that the producers of "The Exorcist" fictionalized throughout the picture. They took examples from many incidents of possession and culminated them all in Regan. The character development was poor with Father Carras being the only person with any character at all. The producers wanted the audience to view the movie totally objectively which was very unrealistic of them as one had to take into account Carras' insecurities and guilt concerning his faltering faith.

Father Dufault stressed the point that the vast majority of people who are convinced that they are possessed by the devil are far more in need of a doctor than a priest. It is the official duty of all priests, however, to be able to perform an exorcism. Usually a priest who does an exorcism is an older, very stable, mature man of deep faith.

All religions have exorcism rites: baptism is actually a rite of exorcism where the person is separated from the forces of evil. A person not connected with the Church in any way may perform an exorcism but he must be of extremely deep faith and stability.

Toward the end of the lecture Mr. Stronach again asked why the movie has been so popular. He felt that it was more than simply a case of good advertising. Instead he wondered if in this day of science there are questions still unanswered. Are people perhaps once again reaching toward the unknown and mystical world of religion?

potential recruitee with the coach of the University of Alabama. How beautiful to put such a momento in the family album. In the newspaper the next day was an article that pointed out that the University of Alabama school newspaper editor had criticized the football coach for his attitudes towards women's sports.

The list of examples is endless and quite revealing. The emphasis on winning has become ever more apparent as the number one priority. Its effect in the end is to hurt the chances of the student athlete to become an educated person. For when the chance to become a pro is reality, very few make it. The odds for making it through high school, through college on scholarship, being drafted, and then sticking with a professional club are phenomenally low. What better reason is there to emphasize education and not athletics in the recruiting process. Once again, this series proved to be enlightening reading and worth the effort for all to glance through or read over.

Kellar stated.

Kellar appealed to the collective consciences of all students in overcoming this problem.

"People take the plants and they're not going to live. They're greenhouse plants. Dorms are dry and dark; the conditions are all wrong," Kellar declared. The student who swipes an exotic plant to grace his or her room may not have it for very long; exposure to cold air, even for a few minutes, really hurts the plants.

The greenhouse cannot continue to serve the needs of the University of Vermont if the stealing continues, Kellar warned. The conservatory may have to be closed to the public.

Gymnasts Compete In Eastern Regional

by Linda Hough

The University of Vermont's Women's Gymnastics Team ended their season this past weekend when they traveled to the University of Massachusetts for the Eastern Regional Intercollegiate Gymnastics Championships at Amherst. UVM placed 15 out of the universities and colleges who participated. This is actually quite respectable when you take into consideration the fact that UVM's team is quite small and is only five years old. A total of 220 gymnasts participated. The top gymnasts for UVM were Sue Lupovitz and Debby Light with all-around scores of 25.5 and 18.6, respectively.

The University of Mass. won the Eastern Championships with a total score of 106.2. Springfield College was second with 105.05 and So. Connecticut was third. These three teams are eligible to travel to the Nationals in California to represent the East in April. Last year, U. Mass won the National Championship.

The competition began on Friday, March 15, when teams competed for the top three places. UVM competed in the second of the four rotations, with U. Conn., Salem State, and Nassau Community. We challenge you.

Our Officer Selection Officers are looking for a few good college men—maybe 3 out of 100—who will make good Marine officers. If you're one of them, we'll give you a chance to prove it during summer training at Quantico, Virginia.
Our program is Platoon Leaders Class, PLC. With ground, air and law options. You might even qualify for up to $2,700 to help you through college. But if money is all you're looking for, don't waste your time.
The challenge is leadership. If you want it, work for it. If you've got it, show us. It's one hell of a challenge. But we're looking for one hell of a man.

any character at all. The producers wanted the audience to view the movie totally objectively which was very unrealistic of them as one had to take into account Carras' insecurities and guilt concerning his faltering faith.

Father Dufault stressed the point that the vast majority of people who are convinced that they are possessed by the devil are far more in need of a doctor than a priest. It is the official duty of all priests, however, to be able to perform an exorcism. Usually a priest who does an exorcism is an older, very stable, mature man of deep faith.

All religions have exorcism rites: baptism is actually a rite of exorcism where the person is separated from the forces of evil. A person not connected with the Church in any way may perform an exorcism but he must be of extremely deep faith and stability.

Toward the end of the lecture Mr. Stronach again asked why the movie has been so popular. He felt that it was more than simply a case of good advertising. Instead he wondered if in this day of science there are questions still unanswered. Are people perhaps once again reaching toward the unknown and mystical world of religion?

the state of the arts at UVM has most definitely improved, and the six panel members are indeed optimistic about future artistic and theatrical endeavors. Kellar appealed to the collective consciences of all students in overcoming this problem.

"People take the plants and they're not going to live. They're greenhouse plants. Dorms are dry and dark, the conditions are all wrong," Kellar declared. The student who swipes an exotic plant to grace his or her room may not have it for very long, exposure to cold air, even for a few minutes, really hurts the plants.

The greenhouse cannot continue to serve the needs of the University of Vermont if the stealing continues, Kellar warned. The conservatory may have to be closed to the public.

Gymnasts Compete In Eastern Regionals

by Linda Hough

The University of Vermont's Women's Gymnastics Team ended their long season this past weekend when they traveled to the University of Massachusetts for the Eastern Regional intercollegiate Gymnastics championships at Amherst. UVM placed 15 out of the 17 universities and colleges who participated. This is actually quite respectable when you take into consideration the fact that UVM's team is quite small and is only five years old. A total of 220 gymnasts participated. The top gymnasts for UVM were Sue Supovitz and Debby Light with all-around scores of 25.5 and 18.6, respectively.

The University of Mass. won the Eastern Championships with a total score of 106.2. Springfield College was second with 103.05 and So. Connecticut was third. These three teams are eligible to travel to the Nationals in California to represent the East in April. Last year, U. Mass won the National Championship.

The competition began on Friday, March 15, when teams competed for the top three places. UVM competed in the second of the four rotations, with U. Conn., Salem State, and Nassau Community. The UVM gymnasts placed second to Nassau, and were pleased to have outperformed U. Conn., since earlier in the season, Vermont lost to U. Conn. by two points. On Saturday, the top gymnasts in each event competed for the top three places that qualified them individually for the Nationals. Jeannine Burger of U. Mass was first in all-around competition, with team member, Andi Vexler second. Karen Schuckman of Penn State was third. Deb Dunkley of Springfield College (and South Burlington) tied for fourth as all-around competitor.

UVM gymnasts began practice sessions in September, and competition in December, so they now end their long season with high hopes for next year.

Womens Basketball Team Finish Season

The UVM women's basketball team completed their season with a record of 7-5. A constant team effort was demonstrated by Pam Bateman, Sally Bremner, Sue Duprat, Marilyn Kinney, Chris Morgan, Meg Phillips, Denise Puff, Jenny Ramey, and Sally Rouse; each member contributed throughout the season.

The team opened their season with a 45-23 victory over Vermont College and again defeated V.C. 49-24 in their second game. The team's winning streak continued as they defeated St. Mike's 81-35, but were defeated by UNH and UMass in a well played game. They came back with wins over St. Lawrence and UConn. Although defeated by Springfield, they ended their season with the victory over Plymouth.

The University of Vermont women's basketball team continued to play exceptionally well in the EAIAW Regional Basketball Tournament, seating itself in the highest position of UVM history. Although defeated by Ithaca in the first game, the women exhibited the season's efforts and abilities with each member of the team scoring. The second game credited the team with a hard-earned victory over

by Mike Schwartz

The big business of college sports. This has become a topic of increasing concern around the nation. In an excellent series on the subject last week, the New York Times analyzed the policies, the methods, and the overall realities of big time college recruiting. For those that have not had the chance to read this series of articles it is worth the time to find copies of last week's newspapers and read the facts for yourself.

The methods used by the recruiters and coaches in many cases is downright farcical. For instance, the case of a New York City basketball player is discussed. He is currently being recruited by many schools and has had about 200 offers for college scholarships. One of his remarks puts the issue in perspective. The recruiters would ask him what subject area is of interest to him and after he tells them, the recruiter replies that of course the school has an excellent department in that subject. The basic issue of college recruiting is what to stress, sports or education.

The comments of current professional athletes were excellent in describing the situation. Many remark that in football and basketball, colleges are the minor league system. Players on athletic scholarships are really employees of the college. These athletes remarked on the little time put in classes, the under-the-table deals and so on. Hockey is also starting to become a sport in college that supplies professional talent. Here at Vermont players such as Ted Castle, Tim O'Connell, Willis MacKinnon, and formerly Dave Reece and Steve Eckerson have been offered or have been drafted by the pros. New York Knick backcourt man Dean Meminger mentions that his recruiting actually started at age 14 when prep schools were enticing him to go to their schools.

In investigating these practices the NCAA is at a disadvantage. There are over 600 member schools participating in many different sports. The NCAA has but four investigators. Rules established by the NCAA on recruiting practices are rather loose as far as interpretation goes. The newspaper published a picture of a mother of a meter diving, and was in good position to move up.

Finally, the 400 yard freestyle relay was one of the most exciting events of the meet. Vermont was seated third behind Springfield and Bowdoin. If Vermont could beat Springfield, then Springfield could not run away with the meet. The Brown swimming arena was electric as the event was called to the blocks. Mike Kurt, Mike Delaney, Mike Jacobs, and David Phalan were called on to outswim the New England Champions. As the Gun went off UVM was in the water first and stayed out in front until the last lap when Bowdoin touched them out. Final standings for Saturday:

100 yd. freestyle - Mike Delaney 10th.
100 yd. butterfly - Paul Jones 6th
100 yd. butterfly - John Mahoney 12th
100 yd. backstroke - Mike Jacobs 2nd.
100 yd. breaststroke - Kevin Delaney 8th
3 meter diving - Doug Picha 6th
400 yd. freestyle relay - 2nd.

U.V.M. SPORTS

Icecats Lose Finals Of NIHT 7-4

The University of Vermont Catamounts, in the first National Invitational Hockey Tournament at Duluth Minnesota, bowed in the finals to the strong University of Minnesota-Duluth Bulldogs, 7-4.

The Catamounts gained the finals by virtue of a come-from-behind 3-2 victory over a very physical team, the Lake Superior State Lakers Thursday night. Willie MacKinnon's third period goal with 2:33 remaining provided the winning margin. MacKinnon carried the puck across the blue line and attempted to center a pass to Ted Castle, but the puck deflected off a Soo Laker defenseman and through the goalie's legs.

After two periods of frustrating hockey, Tim O'Connell pulled the Cats even on a screen shot from the right face-off circle at 6:36 of the third period. Vermont's first goal was scored by Willie MacKinnon on a breakaway. Bill Spence fed MacKinnon at the blue line and Willie flipped a backhander over the sprawling Lake netminder.

Vermont was kept in the game by the great efforts of John Kiely who turned back 35 shots on goal, many of them coming from point blank range. Kiely impressed not only those who are familiar with his play, but also those who had not seen him in action before.

UMD gained the finals after soundly beating the St. Louis Billikens 6-3 in a rough game that left the spectators wondering what game the officials were watching.

Saturday night's finals featured the only East-West confrontation in a championship round of a '73-'74 collegiate hockey tourney as BU and Harvard were defeated in the semifinals of the NCAA Tournament.

Vermont came out skating well against the talented Bulldogs, but soon found out that it was going to be a rough game. The opportunistic Bulldogs took advantage of some UVM defensive lapses, but found that UVM did not give up easily. After UMD had gone ahead 1-0, Billy Koch connected for Vermont to tie it up. Then a questionable call of high-sticking on defenseman Ken Yeates led to a UMD power play goal with 28 seconds left in the first period.

After an errant UVM pass led to the Bulldogs' third goal, Vermont pulled back to within one, on a power play, when Ted Castle flipped in a rebound off Ted Child's slap shot from the blue line.

The turning point of the game came but fourteen seconds later when UMD forced the play in the Vermont zone and scored after a scramble in front of the net.

UMD made it 5-2 at the 2:20 mark of the third period, a lead which the Cats were unable to overcome. Michel Lebeau scored the prettiest goal of the night when he took a pass from Chris Miller at the UMD blue line, beat two defenders, and slid a backhander into the net on the goalie's stick side. Tom Colby completed the scoring for the Cats with 5:20 left in the contest when Miller dug the puck out of the corner and passed to Colby who was stationed in front of the crease and he rammed it home. Even though UMD scored seven times, John Kiely was again outstanding in the net.

During the championship game a UMD was heard to say, "Vermont is a well controlled, disciplined team." The four games we saw in Duluth illustrated a pronounced difference in the style of play between East and West teams and in the style of officiating as well. Western play emphasized body checking and calls like elbowing and charging were seldom or never made. The style of play dictates strong, aggressive individual performance, compared with the disciplined team play exemplified by Vermont. If the same format of having one official from the east and one from the west is followed in future tournaments, the referees must be more consistent on their calls.

The NIHT committee should be commended for their handling of the tournament, which was very well set up and carried out, while the Fickle Finger of the Week award goes to the hockey fans of Duluth who stayed away from the rink in droves even though their home team was playing in the championship game. A crowd of only 2500 came to the 6000 seat arena for the final game.

While the night-life of Duluth held little reward for those making the 1100-mile, 22 hour drive to Minnesota, Coach Cross and the Catamounts capping an outstanding season of hockey with a very respectable showing against some of the nation's finest made it all worthwhile.

Editor's Note – A special thanks to five UVM fanatics who braved the 22 hour drive and a snowstorm on the way back to go to Minnesota and write a first-hand article for the Cynic. They were among the very, very few to make the long trip.

Swimmers Place Eighth In New England's

The UVM swim team placed eighth in the New England Intercollegiate Swimming Association Championship Meet held at Brown University on March 7-9. During the first day of competition the Cats were entered in only one event, the 800 yard freestyle relay. Mike Kurt, Mike Delaney, David Phalan, and John Blake swam to a tenth place finish. Their performance was not up to Coach Legget's expectations.

After a disastrous first day of competition UVM was ranked 21 out of 27 schools. To the rest of the teams and the spectators, it looked as though Vermont was choking, and out of the running for a spot in the top 10. The history of Vermont performances, at past New England Championship Meets, has not been one to boast about.

On Friday, the second day of the meet, the tables began to turn. In the 50 yard freestyle both Mike Jacobs and Mike Delaney qualified for the finals. Jim Werther in the 200 yard backstroke swam within tenths of seconds of the finals with his best time ever. Gary Shepard bettered his best time in the 200 yard breaststroke with a time of 2:29. This was the third time Gary swam this event in competition. Mike Kurt qualified for the finals in the 200 yard freestyle with a new varsity record of 1:51. John Mahoney swam a 1:56 for the best time of his career in the same event.

Vermont had not even begun to come back. Jim Werther swam his best time in the 200 yard individual medley winning his heat. To round off the trials, the UVM medley relay swam to a second place seating just behind Springfield. The relay, consisting of Mike Jacobs, Kevin Delany, Paul Jones, and David Phalan, bettered the old varsity record by three seconds.

The finals began at 7:00 that night. The results were as follows:

50 yd. freestyle Mike Jacobs 5th.

50 yd. freestyle Mike Delaney 8th

200 yd. freestyle Mike Kurt 8th

400 yd. individual medley Vt. 3rd.

Vermont was now seated twelfth.

It was the final day of competition and the swimmers and spectators were beginning to appreciate Vermont's power. The Cats had jumped nine places in one day, and the New England's were taking note of the school from the North Country.

The first event of the final day was the 100 yard freestyle. Mike Delaney put Vermont into the finals with Dave Phalan and Mike Kurt right behind. The 100 yard butterfly saw two UVM swimmers in the finals, Paul Jones and John Mahoney. Mahoney, who had been seated 31 in the trials, jumped 20 places to rank eleventh in the finals. Mike Jacobs and the 100 yard backstroke have become one and the same, Mike ranked second in the trials.

Kevin Delaney, who had been out of swimming for the last three years, came back this year to make the finals in the 100 yard breaststroke. Doug Piche made the cut-off for the finals, in the three

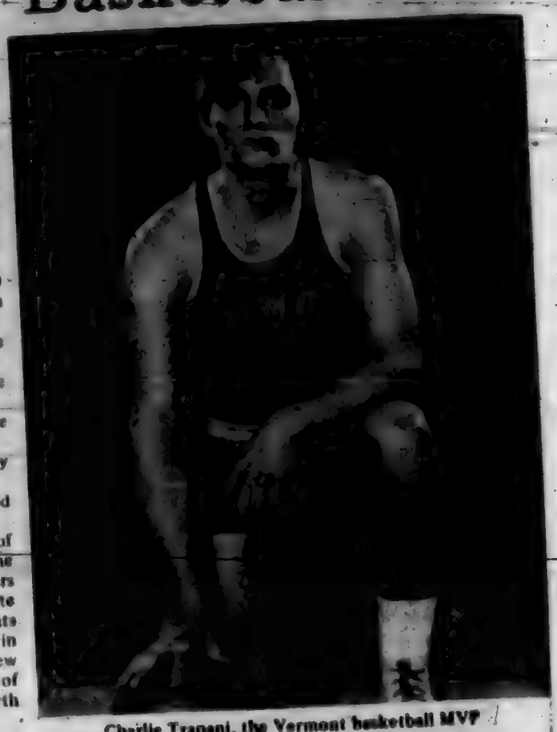
Trapani Named Basketball MVP



Charlie Trapani, the Vermont basketball MVP

Last Thursday night the UVM Basketball Team held its annual breakup dinner at the Black Cat. It was announced at the dinner, that Charlie Trapani was the Most Valuable Player for the team and that Joe Greco will again be the team captain.

Trapani, a freshman from Oakwood, N.J., was the first freshman ever to receive a most valuable player award. The 6'7" center averaged 9.2 points per game, 6.5 rebounds, and shot .42 percent from the field in 24 games. His high game was 22 points and 13 rebounds against Norwich. Trapani was cited by Coach Pete Salzberg for his attitude, consistency and impact on other players on the team. Trapani fought back from a hand injury to show excellent improvement in his play as the season progressed.

Greco, from Whitehall, N.Y., will again be the team captain. He has led UVM in scoring the past two years and is one of the top performers in the Yankee Conference. He was the M.V.P. in 1973.

The Cats look forward with an optimistic attitude to next season. No one is lost through graduation and all returning players look ahead to a fine campaign in 1974-1975.

Bartlett Discusses Hockey Ticket System

by Mike Schwartz

This year's successful University of Vermont hockey season has brought about a growing controversy on the ticket policy of the Athletic Department. People are questioning the policy of complimentary tickets and methods in selling tickets. To clarify this situation, this reporter talked with Mr. Bartlett, the head UVM ticket manager.

The operations involved in organizing the sale of tickets are rather complex. Extensive planning and analyzing are done. Tally sheets trace the game-to-game ticket sales. Mr. Bartlett also is in touch with other schools. When formulating the policy for the ticket book plan, he compared various plans from other universities. The plan at the University of Oklahoma, a school that has an extensive athletic program, was a big help in formulating the UVM plan. Mr. Bartlett is also receiving information from business manager conventions which present forums on ticket promotions, methods for ticket sales, and new ideas in public relations.

The basic problem concerns the sale of hockey tickets. At the recent Division II finals, there were no general admission tickets available. Mr. Bartlett analyzed how and to whom tickets are sold. First priority goes to ticket book holders. In the first year, only 900 ticket books were sold. This year 1800 books were sold to students and 82 to faculty and staff. There are also 575 reserved seats sold. Then there are other people who receive tickets. Friends of UVM Hockey received a ceiling during the playoffs of 200. The athletic department has an area called the Trustees Section in which 145 tickets are given to legislators, trustees, and other important people. In the playoffs this area was controlled and restricted. Mr. Bartlett has charts down to the name of the person who will occupy a seat. The teams are then given 45 seats each for the parents of the players while Public Relations director Dick Whittier is alloted pots for the working press. The rest of the seats are then divided between general admission and visiting teams. In the Army and UMass games, the visitors did not request many seats. However, Merrimack received 600 seats and had asked for more. In the playoffs, the E.C.A.C. is in charge and their rules allow visiting teams to receive as much as 30 percent of available seats. With Merrimack taking their full amount, no seats were available for general admission. In other words, in the playoffs ticket availability depends on the number requested by the visiting team.

During the regular season Mr. Bartlett is involved in controlling the numbers. His tally sheets present the facts in a clear and orderly fashion. For a sell-out as in the UNH game 1841 out of the 1882 ticket book holders went to the game. Normally the average is 68 percent. General admission sales were about 600. In the A.I.C. game with a smaller crowd there were many seats available. By analyzing the tally sheets it is seen that tremendous planning is made in advance of the big games. Mr. Bartlett has learned from mistakes such as the tremendous crowds for the Harvard game in the 1972-1973 season.

Mr. Bartlett points out that an interaction with opponents is encouraged. At UNH tickets are sold without consideration for the visiting team. Mr. Bartlett likes to hold 100-200 seats for visiting teams because there may be a time when UVM students will want to attend an away game. The ticket exchange policy will help guarantee that UVM students get tickets for these away games.

Regarding a letter to the Cynic which accused the ticket sellers of giving more than one ticket p ticketbook, Mr. Bartlett set the record straight. Many of the ticket sellers were infuriated. It came down to the fact that if a student came with three or four books, he got three or four tickets. It was not three or four seats per book. The books were then collected by the ticket sellers to eliminate the possibility of a person going back on line.

With hockey, the demand for seats is very great. Complimentary tickets in the trustees section are controlled. These seats are important, according to Mr. Bartlett, in UVM relations with the legislature and the state when it comes down to budget time. The spirit of hockey games allows the legislators to receive a favorable image of the University. In the end, an expansion of the Gutterson Fieldhouse facility is envisioned. Mr. Bartlett envisions an expansion of the east end where no seats are currently located. There would be seats, a lobby, and offices so that the whole ticket operation would be handled at the fieldhouse. Such plans and the analysis of the ticket operation are reviewed by the Athletic Council of alumni, faculty, and student team managers. Student input in this Council and suggestions are encouraged.

Mr. Bartlett's job is more complex than one might think. There is much analysis and merchandising involved. In the end he attempts to give the student priority. Without knowledge of the operation, one might get angry too fast.

SAGA Unveils New Meal Plan

by Bruce Maddern

A "pioneer plan" as Fred Smith, UVM's SAGA director, and Keith Miser director of Residence Halls called it, was presented to residence hall staff of MAI and Harris Millis. The new meal plan will use coupons instead of the punch system that is now used. Two coupons will be taken for breakfast, three for lunch and five for dinner.

Students will be billed for a base plan of 840 coupons (420 per semester) at $494. These base plan coupons represent about 40 percent of meals available. To make up the difference for added meals above the minimum 40 per cent, students can buy additional coupons in books of 140 for $28.

Anyone wishing to buy a meal plan must buy the base plan first. This will hurt some students who hold the present nine-meal plan. The increase in price for a student who holds that plan is about 20 percent.

For the majority of students, those who have the 15 meal plan, the increase is only 8 percent. The difference can be explained this way. In the base plan the student pays for the "University override" which is the cost of the physical plant of the dining halls. It is about $120 of the base plan price. It doesn't reflect at all in additional coupons bought only in the initial plan."

As additional coupons are bought the cost per coupon decrease. (Base plan coupon will be 58 cents and additional book coupons will be 20 cents).

Another addition will be the trade-in aspect of the coupons. They will be worth 40 cents at all SAGA snack bars. One of the problems with the old plan was that students couldn't use their ticket at snack bars.

On the former plan friends could not use meal tickets. Now they can use coupons off students' books to have meals.

The most important aspect to the system is the "reverse profit motive." Before SAGA made its profit off unused punches. Now SAGA will have to sell additional coupons in order to come out with any profit at all. According to Smith, quality is sure to go up because SAGA will have to make it worth buying coupons.

Competition between dining halls will also help quality. Managers who serve more meals will be paid more.

The new system comes after months of work by various committees and SAGA representatives. The new program will be tried for three years. Students are also going to be very responsible for their coupons because of their redeeming value. To help students, SAGA will have a coupon bank. Books can be bought there when they are needed any time in the semester, so there is no

Parenti Settles Out-Of-Court ; University To Pay Him $15,000

by Barbara Frankel

Michael Parenti, ousted UVM political science professor, was awarded $15,000 in a suit against the University. Both Parenti and his lawyer, Thomas Hayes of Burlington, called the settlement a "victory" for their side.

The damage suit for $175,000 was settled out-of-court a few weeks ago. The settlement will be paid by an insurance firm representing the University and Parenti plans to donate the entire $15,000 to radical causes. About $3,500 will go toward legal fees for people subjected to "trumped up charges" in courts.

According to Parenti's attorney Hayes, "It was a decent settlement under the circumstances." Hayes explained that Parenti could not collect damages for backpay since he has been receiving a salary from other sources since leaving UVM.

Parenti now teaches at the State University of New York at Albany.

Hayes added that it would have taken three to four years to settle the case and that it would have gone to a jury.

Parenti had requested a court hearing instead and had been denied this. "It's very difficult to prove damages when they involve things like endangered academic reputations," Hayes commented. He was especially pleased with the settlement since few civil rights cases are settled to the satisfaction of the plaintiff.

Parenti filed suit over two years ago, when he was fired by the Board of Trustees. He felt his constitutional rights had been violated and that he had been fired for political reasons. Parenti's dismissal led to heated controversy in the University which was augmented last semester by the dismissal of three young, liberal philosophy professors. Two of the three professors, Gerald Anderson and Alan Paskow are planning to sue the university.

Gary Nelson, a UVM political science professor who has coordinated a fund to support Parenti's court battle, said the announcement of the settlement "came wholly as a surprise to me." The money solicited went to lawyer's fees and legal incidentals such as depositions. "The defense fund paid a relatively passive role in the court case. We had very little to say in the course of the litigation," Nelson commented. About four per cent of the money solicited for Parenti has not been used.

Professor Michael Parenti

After leaving UVM in the Spring of 1972, Parenti studied at Yale University under a $17,000 fellowship from the Ford Foundation in order to complete a book entitled Ethnic Experience.

Parenti plans to return to UVM on April 18 to discuss the social and political situation in Cuba. Last April, he appeared at the University and spoke on "Fear and Inequality." At that time he commented to the Cynic, "Those who do raise troublesome questions are still being fired, discouraged or filtered out in this and other universities. When they're filtered out, that means the student's right to engage in hearing other opinions is being further and further eliminated."

News Analysis:

Pedestrian Tunnel: An Alternative Approach

by Peter MacAusland

The proposed pedestrian tunnel will most likely receive state legislative approval and a final design will be made. Yet the planners have not adequately considered the alternative solutions.

A 1972 summary report released by the University and the Burlington and South Burlington Planning Commissions concerning the pedestrian crossing identified four possible solutions. Two of them, an overpass and an underpass with a shopping mall, have been firmly discarded. The remaining two solutions were first, a simple underpass and secondly, a series of on-grade pedestrian crossings with traffic lights controlling vehicular and pedestrian traffic. This solution is what now presently exists.

The two pedestrian-actuated traffic lights are rarely used. The main reason is poor timing of lights. After pushing the button to stop vehicular traffic, the wait is so long that the majority of pedestrians cross at the first opening before the lights change. Then the lights change, the cars stop and everyone has already crossed. Most students don't use the system for this reason.

Wesleyan University in Connecticut has a similar problem, yet not as dynamic. Students there cross a main road in many locations. A centralized crossing such as the one at UVM does not exist. Yet their traffic lights are pedestrian oriented. The wait for the lights to change and a 'walk' signal to appear is under 15 seconds. And that is consistent. At Wesleyan steep slopes, designed to deter students from crossing at those locations, are ineffective according to the planning office. Yet steep physical terrain is planned in the UVM pedestrian tunnel for the same purpose.

The traffic lights at the pedestrian crossings could be put to effective use if the timing of the lights was changed to shorten the waiting period for a pedestrian to cross, then the system may be widely used rather than having a student darting between cars. A proposed solution now exists, yet changes within that solution which may resolve the main problem have not been made.

S.A. Hears Proposal For Student Lobby

by Bruce Maddern

Tuesday night, senators heard plans for and then an invitation to join the Vermont Student Lobby and Peter MacAusland new S.A. president express disapproval with the proposed tunnel under Main Street.

The representative from the still-forming student lobby discussed areas in which the lobby could be effective in Vermont. She mentioned financial aid, education costs, and work-study. The first symposium for the organization will be next Wednesday through Friday at Johnson State with many workshops, speakers and representatives from the National Student Lobby. UVM was asked to attend.

MacAusland in his research over the last weeks has found problems with the cost and utilization of the proposed tunnel. He termed it a waste of money as well as the fact that he feels many students will by-pass the tunnel in spite of the proposed barriers.

In his last Coordinating Committee Report, Sig Heller gave his impressions of his year as president. He stated that the S.A. has held "a minimal level of effectiveness" due to his faults, those of the Senate, and the apathy of the student body. He said problems in the coordination of efforts by various groups should be cut down. He claims that a reduced number of Senators would also help the effectiveness of the S.A.

Among other business were announcements by the Concert Bureau for the New Riders concert and a jazz show and blues show later in April. The possibility of a free or "cheapo" dance was also discussed.

Under Old Business the following action was taken.

S.63, the recognition of the UVM Nursing Council, was tabled again; no representative was present.

S.68, a motion for the S.A. to support the efforts of the Gymnastics Club to be a varsity sport, was passed after much discussion. Arguments against the bill included the cost of the team for the University and also questions on what would deter other athletic clubs from asking support.

S. 69, Evelyn Liberty's proposal to require the Cynic to publish three full-page ads for the S.A. was soundly defeated. Senator Dick Cassidy and Editor-In-Chief Barbara Frankel presented arguments of freedom of the press and the financial burden of the ads.

S. 70, Jim Hasson's motion to set up a replacement reserve fund for the eventual replacement of UV128, the UVM Rescue Ambulance, was

by Margo Howland

The Vermont Student Lobby (VSL), a student interest group basically concerned with the funding of higher education, will hold its first conference Wednesday, April 10 through Friday, April 12, at Johnson State College.

Lee Edwards, a co-director of the lobby, spoke to the UVM Student Association, giving background and basic information and urging students to attend.

The Vermont Student Lobby conference will serve to organize student lobbies at Vermont State Colleges, (VTC, Lyndon, Castleton, Johnson, Community College) and UVM. The Lobby will take a stand on the issues of funding higher education, and other interest areas. Other objectives will be formulated at the conference.

There will be a number of key speakers, a professional education lobbyist, a panel discussion on financial aid, representatives from out-of-state student lobbies, a representative of the National Student Lobby, discussion groups concerning VETS, VPIRG, collective bargaining and other topics of interest.

The Vermont Student Lobby became activated at Johnson State in early March when two JSC students, Lee Edwards and Urban Martin, presented the idea before the All-Campus Council. Ms. Edwards and Mr. Martin had attended the National Student Lobby February 22-27 in Washington, D.C. (Senator Matt Jones, Hamilton, had expressed a wish to attend, but his bill requesting funds died on the floor of the Senate for lack of a quorum.)

Ms. Edwards and Mr. Martin were the only students from Vermont to attend the conference.

"After seeing the effectiveness of other student lobbies we felt Vermont could benefit from the same type of organization," Edwards told the Cynic.

The idea of a student lobby started about six years ago in California, according to the Spartan, Castleton's college paper. There are now student lobbies in 19 other states, as well as a National Lobby in Washington, D.C. California Governor Ronald Reagan considers the Student Lobby "one of the university's strongest assets."

The Lieutenant Governor, Ed Reinecke, stated, "Last year I had the pleasure of signing the first bill sponsored by your organization to become law. Like many people in Sacramento, I had come to respect the manner

Federal Guidelines To Eliminate Sex Discrimination Published

by Cheryl M. Fields
From The Chronicle of Higher Education

Publication of proposed new federal guidelines for eliminating sex discrimination has been stalled by questions about the potential effects of the regulations on college athletic programs.

Caspar W. Weinberger, Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, sent the proposed regulations back to the Office for Civil Rights for clarification of "a couple of issues," a spokesman acknowledged. But the regulations' impact on college sports was the major concern, said an informed source.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association and individual coaches have claimed that the future of intercollegiate athletics would be endangered if the current proposed regulations were put into effect.

Nondiscrimination Required

The guidelines in question are designed to tell colleges and universities how they will be expected to carry out Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, the section that forbids sex bias in federally financed programs and activities.

The sections of the guidelines dealing with athletics reportedly would require coeducational physical education classes, and nondiscrimination in competitive athletics in terms of sports offered, equipment provided, and access to facilities, coaching, and scholarships.

Both Secretary Weinberger and President Nixon have to approve the proposed regulations before they are published for comment in the Federal Register.

Despite the current delay, "Secretary Weinberger wants the regulations out as quickly as possible" and the questions should be resolved in the next week or so, said Gwen H. Gregory, director of the office of policy communication of the Office for Civil Rights.

Timetable for Compliance

Federal civil rights officials were planning a meeting with N.C.A.A. officials.

Although the regulations, drafts of which have been circulating among colleges, would cover equality in admissions, student aid employment, fringe benefits and a host of other issues, the sections concerning athletics have produced the most controversy.

Although no federal aid goes directly to college sports programs and the 1972 legislation does not mention athletics specifically, they are covered by Title IX because the law binds the entire educational institution to the equal-opportunity regulations if the institution receives any general financial assistance such as student-aid or construction funds.

Misinformation Widespread

Some of the controversy over athletics has arisen, civil rights officials indicated, because of mistaken reports of what the regulations would require.

One of the most persistent, but untrue, reports, Ms. Gregory said, was that H.E.W. would demand equal financing of men's and women's sports.

A section in the introduction to the proposed regulations states, "There is no provision...dealing specifically with the means of achieving an nondiscriminatory allocation of athletic revenues from all sources."

'Equal Opportunity' Required

An N.C.A.A. analysis of a draft of the proposed regulations said: "The regulations do not expressly require precisely the same expenditure of funds for each team in a sport; the requirement is one of 'equal opportunity,' whatever that may mean in a particular context.

"The regulations take no account of the fact that some sports produce revenue directly (gate receipts or television rights fees) or indirectly (donations, tuition grants, booster clubs), while others historically have not done so. As proposed, they would prohibit an institution from 'discriminating,' for example, in the support provided its women's basketball team as compared with that provided its men's team without regard to any revenues which either team may produce."

College Costs

New York

The cost of attending college has increase 40 per cent in the last four years and will continue to rise in 1974-1975, according to a report by the College Scholarship Service of the College Entrance Examination Board.

In a nationwide survey of student costs at colleges and universities, the service found that costs for commuting students were rising more rapidly than those for residential students at all types of institutions.

UVM Chess Association

The UVM Student Chess Association got off the ground by receiving recognition from S. A. After a few preliminary meetings, the group got started by attracting nineteen interested students. They elected Polly Peterson as President, Alex Slive as Vice President and Suzanne Lasher as Secretary/Treasurer.

Activities got started when four players went down to Harvard for the New England Intercollegiate Championship. They came in third place behind Harvard and Columbia in the 1600 rated and below section.

The club plans to play matches against other colleges in the area, sponsor tournaments and matches for the University Community and other kinds of chess activities. Most of these things will start next fall. However, they did receive a challenge from Norwich but that is in the planning stage.

The club's next meeting is on April 8 at 1 p.m. in 131 B building of the Living/Learning Center. There will be a brief business meeting before people start playing. Feel free to drop in anytime.

Our Officer Selection Officers are looking for a few good college men—maybe 3 out of 100—who will make good Marine officers. If you're one of them, we'll give you a chance to prove it during summer training at Quantico, Virginia.

Our program is Platoon Leaders Class, PLC. With ground, air and law options. You might even qualify for up to $2,700 to help you through college. But if money is all you're looking for, don't waste your time.

The challenge is leadership. If you want it, work for it. If you've got it, show us. It's one hell of a challenge. But we're looking for one hell of a man.

For the session starting July, 1974, Euromed will assist qualified American students in gaining admission to recognized overseas medical schools.

Since the language barrier constitutes the preponderant difficulty in succeeding as a foreign school, the Euromed program also includes an intensive course in basic medical and conversational language course mandatory for all students. In addition, Euromed provides students with a 12 (16 week intensive cultural orientation program, with American students now studying medicine in that particular country serving as counselors.

Senior or graduate students currently enrolled in an American university are eligible to participate in the Euromed program.

By-Pass The Underpass

$550,000 is too much money to spend to provide an elaborate handholding service for students – who cross Main Street. The administration has yet to offer a valid reason for building the underpass, and a poor solution to student-auto conflicts will result if the tunnel is built.

Each year the administration falls into ritual frenzy, yet a $550,000 appropriation for an underground passageway is not considered wasteful. In a university where faculty salaries are almost rock bottom and the student-faculty ratio climbs higher each year, an incredible $.5 million is unjustified.

The administration claims they are forced to build the underpass by the District Environmental Commission, and they add self-righteously that student safety is a major concern. They do not make clear that they could go back to the district commission with other alternatives.

Student safety was a major concern two years ago. Traffic was backed up for a half mile on Main Street, and congestion posed dangerous problems for cross-walkers. Since the construction of the jughandle that problem has been changed – cars are spaced farther apart. The University, however, has chosen to propose the same wasteful solution: an underpass.

We feel the best workable solution would be to designate two strategically placed crossways, set up student patrols on a shift basis and fund these patrols through the work-study program. This solution would provide immediate access to the other side of the road, inhibit the majority of random crossings, and create student income.

We oppose the construction of this underpass and urge student, faculty, and legislative action against the proposal. The University does not need, nor can it afford this $.5 million student-minding machinery.

Student Apathy At L/L

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the two articles in the last Cynic concerning decision making and the furniture shortage at the Living-Learning Center. I am not writing in defense of the trip to Florida or the shrimp cocktail (though I think they are not our major problems in growing into a community). Nor am I writing to explain away the inconveniences most residents have had to live with during the Center's first year. I am writing because I am disturbed at this recurrent disease that keeps appearing among students. It is a disease that involves apathy, destructive criticism and false expectations of bureaucratic functions.

Planning and running a complex like L/L is not done by magic. I cannot believe that the residents who express such vehemence towards the directors have taken any time to learn about the problems involved in the beginnings of the Center. Not only have all these problems had to be dealt with – not by magical directors – but by human beings – but it involves the lives of other human beings – contractors, plumbers, carpenters, electricians, and carpet layers. Yet the students, reclining in all their glory, have expected all this to be taken care of, everything to be built to perfection, and time, according to their plan.

The directors of the L/L and the industrious office workers have spent endless hours dealing with all these human fallibilities. Thus if they have not had the time to concentrate on "community building" it is because they have had to spend so much time dealing with malfunctioning light fixtures, undelivered wardrobes, stolen (yes, stolen from public places – not liberated to deserving suites – the world will not always provide plenty of chairs for your living room, toots!) furniture and overflowing toilets and mixed up keys.

Which leads me to my final point. Where do you think these "community" decisions and feelings grow from anyhow? From directors, from secretaries? I had always been under the impression that community arose from mutual initiative and concern and constructive criticism and sharing. Yet this same disease breeds this misunderstanding that community decision making can somehow happen from the top down.

Despite the impression that the Center is run by Fascists, it has been my experience that they have been ready and willing to cooperate with student initiated programs. As a member of the East Asian Cultural Exchange, and the Asia Symposium, I have found them extremely cooperative with and useful to our plans. Perhaps there are other students who have had differing experiences, but I'd be willing to guess that many of the unhappy residents have not seen what unbelievable crap the office has had to put up with since its beginnings. I would suggest that these souls drop in to find out, and perhaps take the time to offer constructive criticism rather than their anger and lack of initiative.

Sincerely,
Amy Demarest

Visit The Shoeboxes

An Open Letter to Cynthie Murphy:

My heart bleeds for the terrible inconveniences that you have to live with over at the Living/Learning Center. Why don't you come visit Chittenden Hall or one of the other "Shoe Boxes"?

You complain about living in a poorly constructed, cheaply furnished, and haphazardly run complex with out the necessary furnishings. You complain about rooms that lack desks, chairs, closets, lamps, and bookcases. You complain about 2 inches of ice coating the windows and "The Hawk" coming through the doors.

All I can suggest to you is to come and see how the other half lives. If I just had "The Hawk" coming through my glass door, which leads to my terrace (what's a terrace?), I would be overjoyed. "The Hawk" comes into my room under the door, through cracks around the only window (approx. 4½ ft. X 3½ ft.) and through a horizontal crack at the base of my wall which runs the length of my room (approx. 12 ft. X 1 inch and if your don't believe it come and see it.) Our rooms lack many of the conveniences that you seem to take for granted. What's a lamp? What's a bookcase? What's a carpet? There is nothing like having your bare feet hit the frozen floor in the morning to set your day off right. Do you know what it feels like to live out of your suitcase because you lacked dressers and/or closets for up to 6 weeks during the first semester? Do you know what it is like to have to share the bathroom facilities with 36 other people? Do you know what it is like to be without running water for two days? Do you know what it feels like when you have to go outside to other buildings if you want to eat, get your mail, or wash your clothes? The only answer to these questions is "Try it, I'm Sure You'll Like It."

To top things off your complaining about having only one sette and one director's chair for 5, 6, or 7 people. In the lounge of Chittenden Hall we have exactly 2 settees and 8 chairs for approximately 148 people. You see, we have only one lounge for the whole dorm, not one per suite.

Now that you are aware of some of the conditions under which we live (There are more)... if They Pay You... You Pay ME and while you're at it pay the rest of us for the "inconvenience and the poor study conditions" under which we live.

Sincerely,
Brad Didonato
Chittenden Hall

P.S. No offense meant to you Cindy. I just wanted to make you aware of the fact that some of us might just not have it as nice as you folks over at Living/Learning. If you don't agree with me, let's switch rooms next semester.

Response From A Greek

To the Editor:

I am seriously concerned about Mr. Huck Gutman's lack of ability in grasping the fraternity – concept as evidenced by his anti-Greek philosophy published in the Cynic March 21.

One incoherent argument Mr. Gutman makes is that the Greek system shies away from inter-campus contact, particularly with the faculty and staff. Not so. Earlier this semester Sigma Phi fraternity hosted a cocktail party and invited, I am told, representative from each department, including representatives from the University staff. Mr Gutman should be informed that the response from the faculty and staff was rather disappointing; several departments (including my own) went totally unrepresented, and the English department (of which Mr. Gutman is a member) barely went represented. However, the Greek houses marked a particularly strong showing for this opportunity to interaction.

Mr. Gutman attempts to perpetuate the argument that fraternities and sororities tend to stifle academic intellect, and he does so rather poorly, indeed. he must have neglected talking to many Greeks whose academic averages went up when they went Greek. If there is one thing that Greek houses do well, it is to point out the difference between the social aspects of life and the academic parts; a separation of which is necessary to show a student that there is a time for study and a time for recreation, a philosophy from which the dormitories are consistently moving away. Perhaps Mr. Gutman would be interested to know that this "grievous harm" wrought by a "social-intellectual split" has not seriously harmed the Greek fellow, for statistically 70 per cent of the upper class elements of society were Greek in the undergraduate years. Certainly an undergraduate Greek does not feel harmed by intellectual "isolation" from the main campus, for according to Mr. Gutman, there is always the weekend drunk to consider, or perhaps a sorority orgy, or hooting at a hockey game.

What then is it that rubs Mr. Gutman so severely the wrong way about Greek life? Perhaps it is the fact that it is traditional. Tradition these days is decidedly inappropriate and great pains are taken in all phases of academic and social life to avoid it. But, we Greeks, in all our tradition, are not isolated either socially or intellectually from the mainstream of college life. Many of our members are among the most involved in the college life; our cumulative averages among the top, all of which should serve to show Mr. Gutman that we are not so ostracized as he may have it.

And, we have an added bonus. In the Greek system one learns about life, about people, and about how to trust. Is this possible in the dormitories which consistently revolve around the 4-year, selfish transient?

Mr. Gutman: Talk to a socially-environed, total learning-living student, and then talk to a Greek. Who is happier?

Fraternal Living

To the Editor:

In response to Mr. Gutman's views on the Greek system, I would first like to congratulate him on knowing his alma mater so well. However, there are no such Fraternities as Delt Pai or Phi Delt at Hamilton College. He was right about one thing, there is a Sigma Phi. As a matter of fact, in 1965 there were 11 such fraternities at Hamilton, a small liberal arts college for men (about 800 at the time).

Socially, Hamilton had little more to offer other than Fraternities, athletics and a few club activities. Fraternities often put on parties for the faculty and their children in addition to individually supporting the college and community. In addition, the academic standards are reputably high at Hamilton as well as the extra curricular activities after hockey games.

At UVM, a much larger school for both men and women, the academic standards provide as much diversity as do the clubs, organizations (including Fraternities & Sororities) and living accommodations available.

The combined efforts of the two processes, education and fraternal have rendered invaluable service to not only the individual and groups but to the community as well.

Fraternities at UVM offer more than just a good drunk after a hockey game. For example, their activities include a massive green up movement, waitressing for a local Retired Senior Volunteer banquet, Halloween parties for low income children, baking for orphanages, sponsoring scholarships and dances, cleaning out the fountain, working at hockey games and football games, and participating in intramural sports with dorms and other groups – just to mention a few.

As for secretive, the only thing secretive about them is possibly their origination and/or symbolism.

Let's become a little more knowledgeable about the facts on both sides of the issue, Mr. Gutman.

What About CBW?

An Open Letter to Cynthia Murphy:

After devoting one whole minute of silence for your cause I take pen in hand to commend you on the Letter to the Editor (Cynic, March 21, 1974). It is a bad state of affairs when a student living in a multimillion dollar complex shoots off her mouth about living conditions when the complex happens to be the UVM Sheraton compared to Chittenden, Wills, Buckham, Converse, MAT, etc. I have as of yet to read a letter from a Chittenden Hall resident about the lounge with 2 settees and six chairs for 148 students. You complain about the activity rooms which are locked up (probably to keep out the student rip-off artists who have a thing for furniture). We should have complained about the activity (pool) room which is locked up since it's down in the basement boiler room. You complain about the ice on the windows (Poor child). We should have complained about the ice on the bath room ceiling and the fact that the condensation in the rooms is so great that they are impossible to paint in Winter.

My dearest Cynthia: If you ever have chance to write another letter, here are a few more complaints you could add:

1. There is only carpet on the floors (CBW has it in the halls only).
2. There are only two toilets per suite (CBW has 16 toilets for each 148 students).
3. There is only one meal hall on the complex (CBW has none).

If you need any more help please let me know – I might be able to think up some more complaints.

Putting all sarcasm aside, I wish to thank the Housing Authority for giving us a place to live on campus at reasonable rates and with decent living conditions. You should be commended on a job well done. Also, I would like to address dearest Cynthia. Although L/L Center isn't like a 43rd Street penthouse, it is the Ritz compared to other UVM accommodations. Just call x2083 and say, "Hi, I'm Cynthia Murphy," and you will promptly be told where to go.

Sincerely,

Against The Underpass

To the Editor:

It has recently come to the attention of the student body that the University of Vermont is submitting a proposal during the next legislative session, to construct an underpass near the Pringle Herbarium, which will require the expenditure of $550,000. We feel it's time to speak out against the mismanagement of university funds. In the midst of dollar devaluation and inflation, we feel money should be guided towards priorities and not spent frivolously. The student body appreciates the concern the university is taking towards the safety of its students lives, but we feel certain other factors have been overlooked. For instance, is an incredible cost of $550,000 really required to accomplish the purpose of the tunnel? Is there really a dire need for an underpass? Is the traffic really that dangerous? After all, a school zone usually requires a 25 mph speed limit. So can one of the major problems be the enforcement of a proper speed limit in the university area? Are university police properly enforcing fundamental speed laws or do they dodge between cars in the parking lots, waiting to tap a poor student with a $2.00 parking ticket for having an "improper parking sticker displayed."

Regarding the safety of human lives: what about the harassment of individuals in science laboratories, or the unrestricted use of illegal drugs which constantly flow through the university.

Living in the wake of a current energy crisis, we find it hard to believe that the proposal included lighting 24 hours a day, a monitering office, and elevators, boosting the projected $550,000 estimate to even higher extremes when one stops to think of the maintainence required after it has been constructed, which includes the hiring of two additional policemen.

Vermont boasts a beautiful rural campus setting. What becomes of this beautiful setting once "high mounds of landscape dirt" are flung across from the Living/Learning Center, to force students, like mice, through the new underpass.

In summation, we would just like to say that we appreciate the concern shown by the university on such a critical problem and really don't mind the high cost of tuition at UVM, because the caliber of students and faculty along with the environment, more than well make up for the cost. But we would appreciate a more restricted expenditure of money, which would leave alot more for other important university problems.

Poor Security

To the Editor:

A few evenings ago my girlfriend and I were walking back from the library to Jeanne Mance Hall. Crossing the green, we were passed by two males. One of them, quite intoxicated, turned around and attacked me. My girlfriend screamed and only then did his friend pull him off. Campus security preaches safety in numbers and this time it paid off, but had both males been drunk it would have only meant twice as much trouble. I think the potential rapist put it quite well when he yelled to his friend "Hey it's in the shadows. Come on, no one will know." The fact is, the paths to Jeanne Mance and Redstone campus are poorly lit. There are few, if any streetlights situated along the sidewalks. Why is this? A better lighting system and security staff would not only provide a new challenge for the streakers, but those who wanted to keep their clothes on and their bodies intact, might feel a little safer at the same time.

In the Dark

Skinny-dipping

To the Editor:

I was very interested in your article last week on Streaking and Skinny-dipping. In that article the skinny-dipping which takes place on Lake Whitingham was mentioned, and Rep. Kenaleose Collins' opposition to it.

I am a legal resident of the Town of Whitingham (where part of the lake is located) and have seen the skinny-dippers, although nude sun bathers would be a better term for them.

In order for Mrs. Collins to have seen them, especially 200 as she stated she had, she must have wanted to do so. There are only two ways to get where you can see them.

The first is to be out in a boat with a pair of binoculars, or to bring the boat in close to shore.

The second is to walk a half-mile to the lodge where they congregate.

My point is that Mrs. Collins must have gone out of her way to see them and perhaps she could find other more important matters to turn her attention to if she tried.

Contrast Criticized

To the Editor:

I would like to criticize the coverage afforded the premiere production in the Royall Tyler Theatre in the last edition of the Cynic. It was not good policy to run two favorable reviews of the opening production, The Contrast by Royall Tyler. It is all right to have a review by your arts editor but the other review happened to be written by a person involved in another shorter production that was presented in the initial week of the new theatre. Ms. Donovan is clearly a biased reviewer.

On the negative side, the play should have been done in its original form, to do justice to Mr. Tyler. I have read this play as it was originally, the first representable piece of American dramatic literature. A musical adaptation in the spirit of Godspell or The Two Gentlemen of Verona did not present the play in a favorable manner. Besides this, the voices doing the singing were transformed actors who have appeared in many other dramatic productions but never musicals at UVM. Their singing left much to be desired as they constantly strained to reach notes or keep a tune. Much choreography was in poor taste, resembling more a sexually-stimulating stripper or a ballet that consisted of one or two turns and a few walking steps. Any good character roles were left out in the woods as much of the original flavor of Mr. Tyler's work was destroyed.

The UVM theatre went to great expense to spend money to present a favorable image. To this viewer, they wasted much of it (someone told me they spent $6000). If the theatre looks back to their production of A Flea in Her Ear done in its original form as a French farce, then representative theatrical performance is the result. In this production a 19th century play was performed in a style that did justice to the material. It was not altered as was The Contrast.

WE SHUT THE DOOR

We shut the door on the philosophy four,
no longer willing to implore democracy
at a university, struggling to be free.
White flags hang everywhere, and again, we surrender to our books, and rarely look beyond the printed word to seek a deeper meaning, reflected in the soul of a winter sky, blue and gray, hugging
white mountains on a Sunday afternoon.

Are we afraid to explore something deep?
When we try, do we tremble in our sleep?
How much longer do we live until we die?
When we die, do we die free? Will our children understand why we trembled when we learned that to live free is a never ending struggle to be free?

Can you blame us, then, for shutting the door,
no longer willing to implore democracy?
Our eyes grow weary, our faces turn gray, but the sky remains, blue and gray, hugging
white mountains on a Sunday afternoon.

Facts ... hundreds of Chicano and Portuguese farmworkers who, unlike Ernest or Julio, actually have to pick those grapes at harvest time – enduring abysmal living conditions the whole time. On this summer's ugly picketline confrontations at Gallo's vineyards between the farmworkers and an assortment of the company's security guards, Teamster "organizers" and county deputy sheriffs.

"Every day they would fire at least 15 to 20 guys, especially during the pruning season," recalls Feliziano Urrutia, a stocky farmworker who began with Gallo in 1958. "Not many lasted over two years. I don't know how I lasted so long. The workers were always afraid of losing their jobs." And, he continues, besides the job insecurity, the working conditions were horrible: for example, "out in the fields, they didn't have no bathrooms or nothing."

Umberto Hernandez, another striker, who joined the Gallo crews in 1964, argues that workers often had to run from vine to vine to maintain the pace demanded by Gallo supervisors. "If you fell behind the crew, they'd fire you. They'd announce it real loud to make the others scared so they'd speed up."

Then, as if to intensify the pressures on the mostly Mexican workers to produce still more, about ten years ago Gallo began importing large numbers of Portuguese from the Azores. Frank Perry, a Portuguese worker who joined Gallo back in those days, explains the Gallo technique: supervisors would put a Mexican crew and a Portuguese crew on the same job to see who would work faster. The Portuguese would often win, Perry says, because "they're more afraid. The company can push them around more. They came from the Azores, they didn't know the country here. And if they got fired, what else could they do?"

Housing: dilapidated, overcrowded.

The buildings, which house migrant workers but also a large number of Gallo's year-round workforce, are flimsy and insubstantial, and unbelievably crowded. The labor camps sit right out in the fields, surrounded by the vineyards where the workers pick grapes all day. In the camps, bathroom areas are communal, shared by up to 20 families with fixtures which are frequently broken anyway. Often, says Filipe Miramontes, a camp resident, "we have to go out into the vineyards to go to the bathroom." Another camp resident told me that "the toilet water is used for irrigation. When they start irrigating, it stinks real bad." (A pleasant thought when next you sip some Gallo Burgundy.)

No job security, unhealthy working conditions, blatant racism, deplorable housing – these were some of the problems making Gallo workers receptive to the Chavez organizing efforts in the mid-60's. And the 1967 UFW contracts began to get results. Wages improved, bathrooms and fresh drinking water were brought into the fields, grievance procedures were instituted, the work pace was slowed – and, most significant, there was job security for the first time thanks to the UFW's hiring hall which allowed workers to be fired under certain prescribed conditions only.

Stuck with unionization, Gallo this summer went the route of most of the other wineries, and chose the Teamsters, far the lesser of two evils.

BOYCOTT Gallo wines.

Now, following the violence... and deaths of this summer's struggle in the vineyard, Chavez and the UFW have sent highly-publicized teams of strikers across the country to drum up new support for a consumer boycott of table grapes (and)... a city-by-city effort of strikers working on a Gallo boycott... they've been fanning out around the city, confronting store owners who carry Gallo (or Franzia, or table grapes) and trying to convince them to stop selling boycotted products. The tactic: attempts at persuasion through discussion. Then, if storeowners won't cooperate, immediate picket lines in front of the store. If owners do comply, workers return periodically to be sure the agreement is kept, and picket once again if it is not.

"It's time the boss stopped having the people under his feet," argues worker Serrifim Correia. "The farmworkers are the reason Gallo is rich." From a middle class intellectual, such works might sound rhetorical. But Correia is an illiterate immigrant from the Azores who has spent his whole life working in the fields. "Age a victoria!", Correia puts it in his native Portuguese, describing his dedication to the struggle for the UFW. "Until the victory!"

WE SHUT THE DOOR

...shut the door on the philosophy four,

...no flags hang everywhere, and again,
...surrender to our books, and rarely
...beyond the printed word to seek
...deeper meaning, reflected in the soul

...we afraid to explore something deep?

Can you blame us, then, for shutting the door,

In Search Of The Pot Of Gold

by Jeff Ryback

It was a typical Saturday, lazy, with a puff of cloud scantily marring the purple blue sky, the sun beamed its sharp rays as if to trumpet the promise of a warm day; and then high above a flutter and the mild purr of a lone single engine Cessna 150 cut the silence and that wish to be like the birds heaped upon me once again. But how many times, I kept asking myself, has the urge struck me, a hundred, a thousand? Yes, I do want to soar, to take control of one of those strange mechanical bird like monsters, and glide between the tall peaks of restless mountains and climb high to compete with the boast of a lone Herring Gull, I really do. But what about that flight into Boston, the one where the sky frothed with clouds, and the seat belt sign screamed off and on as the plane twisted from side to side.

It was as if I were thrown into a bad dream, as if the end lay a scant 15 minutes away lost in the deep of the Atlantic Ocean. I remember the descent that time; nothing but rain and fog and clouds, and all of a sudden the runway leaped up to meet the plane and fog simultaneously and we were down. There was a rush for the door midst promises, "I'll never fly again, I've had it," and Catholic ladies placed their sweaty beads back into their gold clipped, black pocket books while the others simply thanked God they were alive. And so, the freedom of flight that had creeped into my soul abruptly drifted into abeyance as the Cessna sank out of sight and out of mind.

The rest of the day dragged: study for awhile, lunch, and then the mesmerization of those damn sports events on the tube: basketball on one station, hockey on the other, and all those wild crazy fans screaming and yelling so they could forget the little messes that await them in the real world. Finally, the boredom became unbearable and my secret little death wish pressured me into evaluating the meaning of life, if indeed it meant anything. Was it hockey games or books or sex, or was there some compulsion there challenging one to do those things that defied death, an instinct that occasionally superceded the better judgment of self preservation for a chance to personally encounter. It was such thoughts that had me make an appointment for that first flying lesson.

I remember that first flight, the introductory flight, the flight I suggest no one take before he or she understands the principles of flight; For without that little bit of knowledge the question of what holds the damn thing up forever perplexes you. The Cessna 150 was yellow and white and seemed to be made of some kind of flimsy tin that you wouldn't trust as a cookie sheet (never mind a life support system 2,000 feet in the air). Inside there were two seats crammed together and a dash board loaded with a myriad of dials and meters. The ignition was interesting for it had five settings: Off, Left, Right, Both, and Start. There was a wheel that moved forwards and backwards, right and left. And two peddles were used to both brake and control the rudder. All in all it was quite baffling.

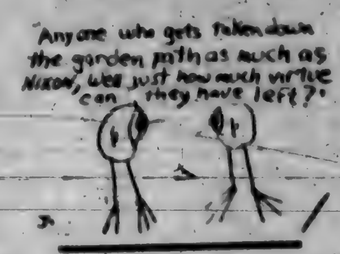
Take-off was unusual. One minute there was this wide white stripe and the next it disappeared into the azure of what seemed to be an ubiquitous heaven. And, strange as it may seem, all the courage I had mustered before the flight waned as one urgent question continued to jab at the back of my neck, "when do we land this damn thing?" In other words the "chicken factor" was hard at work pinning me to the mat. In fact I don't remember looking down more than twice for fear that I might rock the plane and send it plummeting down in the feared death spiral. However, when I took the wheel and found the aircraft responding right when I turned right and left when I turned left a strange thing happened, the magic of a little knowledge had converted total fear into simple fright. So as long as we maintained our altitude I was content to suppress my desire to let out some kind of hideous scream. But it was too good to last and before I knew it I saw this big No. 3 growing larger and larger until we finally brushed it and landed. I left the airport upset that I hadn't met the personal challenge and was convinced I would not be able to live with myself until I had. So, right then and there I made the commitment, I would learn to fly.

The following week was mixed between my battle understanding all the physics involved with flight and the different procedures I needed in order to perform basic maneuvers. And as I learned, the lessons became enjoyable to the point where I actually looked forward to jumping into the Cessna and skying out into the wild blue yonder. I remember some of those clear days looking out on the horizon at Kilamanjaro like Mt. Mansfield or down at the sparkling desolation of ice that separates Vermont from New York all the while contending with six or seven instruments seemingly demanding attention all at the same time.

But basics were nothing compared to the procedures I had (and still have) to learn to master the art of flying. The day my instructor said, "I think it's time to do a power off stall" left my heart a short trip up my esophagus and into my mouth. "We will simply increase the angle of attack until the wings stop flying and the plane drops vertically." When he demonstrated the maneuver a loud buzzer went off which he calmly explained was a danger device where the plane warns the angle of attack is too steep, "nothing to be alarmed about." As the plane crept closer and closer to vertical position, buzzers sounding, I became torn between my desire to pray or scream. All of a sudden the plane dropped three hundred feet, to be exact, before he throttled up to a full power recovery. And you know after I experienced it a few times it became bearable and hardly affected me.

The moral of this story is two fold: first, don't learn to fly unless you're willing to put in long hours of bookwork and flight work; and second, don't be afraid to assert yourself on some project if you believe it will enrich your life or will further the banner of right. It is out of such struggles to weather the storm that revolutions are made. And so to you who accept the status quo, right or wrong, I offer a warning; soon the cloak of evil will fetter your chances at life and before you know it you will be deader than you are now.

What scary maneuver is next, who knows...?



A Worthless Piece Of Technology

by Scott Bauer

Plans are well underway to build the tunnel under Main Street which was described in the last issue of the Cynic. I was aware that the tunnel was being considered, but I never realized it had reached such an advanced stage in its planning.

Most people I've talked to have said that it must be built because the District Environmental Commission stipulated this as one of the requirements for the Living/Learning complex. This is not true. The commission gave four possible solutions to the pedestrian crossing problem.

In the commission's report, they presented their solutions in order of preference:

1.) An underground mall with stores and extra space for university functions.

2.) An overpass where the change in level does not exceed six feet. This would necessitate the lowering of Main Street.

3.) A series of on-grade pedestrian crossings controlled by traffic lights. The lights must be pedestrian actuated.

4.) A simple pedestrian underpass.

I personally, am strongly opposed to construction and development. Therefore, the third suggestion is the only one which seems logical to me.

The first priority must be safety. The traffic situation in this area is disgusting. Perhaps if the University worked with the Burlington Planning Commission, a solution could be worked out. The pedestrian crossings already exist. So it seems to be a matter of using the existing facilities a little more efficiently.

One major problem is whether the underpass would be used. The University's solution: Construct obstacles which would deter the students from crossing the street. My solution: why not put up barbed wire fences with armed guards to funnel us through the tunnel?

Cost is another factor involved in this decision. Solution number one would be financed by the people who have stores in the mall. This would be the least expensive solution for the state, but turning the University into an underground shopping mall leaves much to be desired. The second suggestion would mean lowering Main Street, which would not be economically feasible. The fourth one, as it stands now, would cost the state $550,000. The state of Vermont has better ways to spend half a million dollars. Number three would require a few more lights, lines painted on Main Street, and most importantly, some cautiousness employed by students. With money as hard to come by as it is today; this might be the best solution.

Much research has been done on this problem and the studies conclude that a tunnel is necessary. Has this university degenerated to a point where quantitative figures determine the needs of the university? If this is the case, then I believe this place is becoming a very dehumanized institute of higher education. If this worthless piece of technology is constructed, then the University is taking one huge step in this direction.

A final comment—I mentioned to someone that if the University can get this piece of legislature through this legislative session, the administration must have a lot of influence— his reply: "The word is affluence, not influence."

London Early Music Consort Presents Varied Program

Renaissance and baroque music will form the program for the third Lane Chamber Arts Series concert on Tuesday, April 9.

The artists will be the world-famed Early Music Consort of London, who will be heard — and seen with their unusual musical instruments — in Ira Allen Chapel at 8 p.m.

In a program entitled Five Centuries of Popular Music, the five members of the Consort will play French chansons and dances of the 15th and 16th centuries; English "bouffons" (clown songs), including one by John Dowland, English and French gymels (improvised popular songs); and three 13th century laudi spirituali (popular hyms).

After the intermission the group will perform a group of 12th and 13th century French motets and instrumental pieces; a 14th century istampitta (a couple dance devised by the Troubadours) entitled "Ire Fontane"; a selection of English 15th century songs, notably John Dunstable's "O Rose Bella"; and an Italian dance (ca. 1508) called "Piva."

The concert will conclude with a sequence of popular songs and dances, nearly all dealing with love, by Spanish and Italian composers of the 16th century.

In addition to most well-known instruments as the bass viol, harpsichord, harp, lute and recorder, the players will perform on such unusual instruments as the rebec, crumhorn, cittern, dulcian, sordun, shawm and cornamuse. In addition, one of the musicians sings counter tenor.

The Early Music Consort of London was formed by David Munrow in 1967 with the intention of giving authentic but popularly attractive performances of pre-classical music: mediaeval, renaissance and baroque. The founder members were James Bowman, Oliver Brookes and Christopher Hogwood, joined in 1969 by James Tyler. These five artists form the basic touring ensemble of the consort, occasionally augmented for certain programmes and recordings.

Although all the members of the Consort are extremely versatile, each one specializes in a particular aspect of early music: David Munrow in the woodwind instruments, Oliver Brookes in bowed strings, James Tyler in plucked strings, Christopher Hogwood in keyboard instruments and James Bowman in vocal production and technique.

The Consort gave its first concerts in England, but soon began to attract attention abroad. Its following in London developed rapidly, much helped by frequent broadcasts and occasional television appearances. By 1970 the Consort had established a pre-eminent reputation in its field and made appearances that year at the Aldeburgh, York, City of London and Flanders Festivals, as well as giving fifty-eight concerts abroad in Sweden, Denmark, Belgium and France.

Since then their overseas engagements have continued to increase, and the Consort has made its debut in New York, Toronto, Hilversum and Vienna. Future plans include return visits to Belgium and Scandinavia and tours of Italy, the Near East and Australia. Covent Garden Opera engaged the Consort for their 1972 production of Peter Maxwell Davies' opera "Taverner," which features two stage bands of old instruments. In September, 1972, for their third Henry Wood Promenade Concert in the Royal Albert Hall, the Consort took part in a program of German music ranging from Senfl to Stockhausen.

All the members of the Consort believe that old instruments have a real part to play in twentieth century music making. In England they have already helped to bring early music to a much wider public. The 1971-72 season saw three particularly successful experiments: a concert shared with the Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra which juxtaposed music by Machaut and Berlioz; a television show shared with a pop group, the Pentangle; and a concert in the Queen Elizabeth Hall, London, with the London Sinfonietta, which contrasted the "avant-garde" composers of the late fourteenth century with comparatively mainstream composers of the twentieth century such as Stravinsky.

Besides straightforward recitals, the Early Music Consort of London is in great demand for music making of many other kinds, including backing pop and folk records, educational programs for the Open University, and incidental music for plays, films, and documentaries. The Consort has provided incidental music for many BBC radio productions, ranging from Shakespeare to J. R. Tolkien's "The Hobbit." They have received much praise for their part in the two award-winning BBC TV series "The Six Wives of Henry VIII" and "Elizabeth R" (both won several of the 1971-72 Emmy awards). For the cinema, the Consort contributed a substantial part of the music for Ken Russell's controversial film "The Devils" and all the music for the EMI-MGM production "Henry VIII and his Six Wives."

Tickets, $3 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For reservations, telephone 656-3418.

Vermont Symphony Appears Here April 21

For a Lane Series "extra" concert, four major artists from the far corners of the world will perform with the Vermont Symphony Orchestra in the 40th Anniversary celebration of its founding.

The concert will be presented in Memorial Auditorium at 3:30 p.m., on Sunday, April 21.

Guest-conducting the Vermont Symphony Orchestra will be the Argentina-born Efrain Guigui, and as soloists in Beethoven's "Triple Concerto" will be the American pianist David Keiser, the Russian-born violinist Tossy Spivakovsky, and the Brazilian-born cellist Aldo Parisot.

The complete program includes Brahms' Tragic Overture, Schubert's Symphony No. 5, Beethoven's Concerto for Piano, Violin, Cello and Orchestra ("Triple Concerto"), and Dances from the ballet "Estancia" by Ginastera.

The Vermont Symphony Orchestra, now celebrating its 40th Anniversary, is the official orchestra of the State of Vermont, the first of its kind in the nation. It was founded by its music director, Dr. Alan Carter, in 1934.

This concert will mark the second appearance of the Vermont Symphony in the Lane Series. The first was during the opening series, 1955-56, when Carter conducted and violinist Zino Francescatti was soloist.

Guest-conductor Efrain Guigui is one of the conductors of the Casa Festival of Puerto Rico, and a former conductor of the American Ballet Theatre Orchestra. He is also a faculty member of the Puerto Rico Conservatory of Music founded by Pablo Casals.

Pianist David Keiser, a summer resident of Ferrisburg, Vermont, is a distinguished musician who has appeared in recital, in chamber music performances, and as soloist with many orchestras. He is chairman of the Juilliard School of Music, director of New York's Lincoln Center since its inception, and was president and chairman of the New York Philharmonic (1956-1970).

Violinist Tossy Spivakovsky, a world-renowned artist, has the unusual distinction of having performed with the top five symphony orchestras in this country — the Boston, Cleveland, New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia. He has also played with many major foreign orchestras and in recital around the world. Owner of a famous 1721 Stradivarius, Spivakovsky was hailed by the Times as "among the choicest violinists today."

Virtuoso cellist Aldo Parisot has performed throughout the world in recital and as soloist with all the leading orchestras. He has the great distinction of being engaged by the New York Philharmonic as soloist during the inaugural season of the Philharmonic at Lincoln Center. Parisot played on the first Lane Summer Series (1956) as a member of the Trio Allegro.

On the same afternoon (April 21, in Memorial Auditorium) at 1:30 p.m. the Vermont Symphony Orchestra will present a one-hour free Youth Concert. Conducting will be Anthony Pezzano, assistant conductor of the Orchestra and Director of its Symphony Day Programs for children. For this youth concert the Lane Series will have the co-sponsorship of a group of local ladies known as the Friends of Music, who are distributing tickets in the local schools.

High school and grammar school students who are unable to obtain tickets in their schools for this concert may write to Lane Series, UVM, for free tickets. Parents and other adults are welcome to attend the Youth Concert in the company of the children.

Tickets for the 3:30 concert, $5, $4, and $3, are now available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For reservations, telephone 656-3418.

Photographs Of Baltimore At Fleming Museum

An exhibition of twenty-nine photographs by Stephen Cohen, M.D. opened Wednesday, March 20th, at the Robert Hull Fleming Museum, UVM. The subject of this group of photographs is Fells Point, one of the oldest sections of Baltimore, which has been described as a dying area of the city. But what appears through the eye of Dr. Cohen's camera in many of the portraits of the areas inhabitants is the feeling of life which attracted him to that spot.

Dr. Cohen has previously exhibited his photographic works at the Walters Gallery Art Museum in Baltimore and the Baltimore Museum of Art. He and his wife Trudi presently reside in Charlotte with their two sons.

A native of Omaha, Nebraska, Dr. Cohen is presently as assistant professor at UVM's College of Medicine, Dept. of Psychiatry, as well as Director of the Emergency Room Psychiatric Service, Community Psychiatry, and Crisis Intervention Service, Clinical Consulting Psychiatrist at the Howard Community Mental Health Center in Burlington, and a member of the Vermont State Board of Mental Health. He took his medical training at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine, 1961-66. Besides being active in psychiatric-related services including an instructorship at Johns Hopkins, and serving as consultant to the 1971 Group Relations Conferences in Washington, D. C., Dr. Cohen spent much of his time working as administrative and design consultant to the Department of Parks and Recreation in Baltimore. In conjunction with this, he worked on various playground projects in Baltimore.

"Baltimore Photographs by Stephen Cohen" will remain on view through April 17th.

Gangsters of Love
Capitol ST—11237
List Price $5.98

Gangsters of Love is a frustrating album. It's not good, but it's not bad either. Well, that's fairly clear — the album is ambiguous. It's an experimental album, and the musicians obviously don't know exactly where they're going. The music is shallow, simply from the standpoint that the attention span of any given style is permitted but a few minutes to grow itself. Just as positioning of various attempts comes off as nothing more than hop-scotch audiotronics. It's a tiring game of instability.

Still, there are a few cuts on Gangsters of Love that salvage the disc. The ominous one is "I'm Gonna Keep On," which, if doctored a bit, could be solid, professional material. "Sorry" is a commendable, semi-mellow tune, and rates runner-up as best from the L.P.

Gangsters of Love is a scattered first, that, despite shortcomings, shows promise. The band has the potential to get things together, with some hard soul-rock. What they gotta do is find something coherent to be concentrated on throughout one album, and put it down. As it stands, Gangsters of

"Invisible Man" Is Friday's Lane Science Fiction Movie

"The Invisible Man," based on H. G. Wells' novel of the same name, is the next movie on the Lane Science Fiction Series. It will be shown on Friday evening, April 5, at 7:30 p.m. and also at 9:30 p.m., in Marsh Life Sciences Building Auditorium.

A literate adaptation of the Wells' classic, "The Invisible Man" has fantastic sound and visual effects. The N.Y. Times critic wrote that the "story makes such superb cinematic material that one wonders that Hollywood did not film it sooner. Now that it has been done, it is a remarkable achievement."

Directed by James Whale, and with the script by R. C. Sherriff (author of "Journey's End") the movie stars Claude Rains, Gloria Stuart, William Harrigan, Una O'Connor, Henry Travers and E. E. Clive.

The movie marks the first appearance of Claude Rains on the screen — and under most unusual circumstances. Mr. Rains' face is beheld for a mere half-minute at the close of the proceedings. The rest of the time his head is either completely covered with bandages or he is invisible, with his voice being heard.

In brief, the story concerns a scientist, who, having fathomed the mystery of making himself invisible, is unsuccessful in discovering an antidote to bring him back to flesh and blood.

Tickets, $1 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door. For reservations, telephone 656-3418.

Debate Team Takes Second At Tournamen

The University of Vermont debate teams finished out the season during the spring vacation with a second place in the national Delta Sigma Rho-Tau Kappa Alpha tournament March 28-30 at the University of Massachusetts.

The team of four, composed of Daniel Mulcahy of Brandon, Richard Hayes of Burlington, Rick Willey of Rutland and Ed Osborn of Pittsfield defeated such teams as Indiana State, Emerson College, Temple University, Ohio University, Wabash College and DePauw while losing to Vanderbilt and Indiana University in the seeding rounds.

In the finals, the top affirmative team, Vermont, was pitted against the top negative, Indiana University. The final standings were Indiana University first, the University of Vermont second.

The top debaters were rated on the basis of their total points. The first place affirmative debater award went to Daniel Mulcahy and second place went to Richard Hayes. The topic for debate was "Resolved, That the United States Should Grant Universal Amnesty to All Draft Evaders and Deserters of the Viet Nam War."

Vermont also entered Norma Schoonmaker of Burlington in Persuasive Speaking. After the two preliminary rounds she was tied for fourth place among the 40 contestants. Her total points were not sufficient to get her into the finals. The title of her speech was "The Wrong Teaching." In the speech she developed the theme that prejudice is learned because people and institutions inadvertently teach it. She opposed teaching prejudices.

Dr. Robert B. Huber was the coach and judge who accompanied the debaters. As National Treasurer he not only participated in the legislative functions of the Honorary Forensic Society, but also presented the Distinguished Alumni Awards at the annual banquet.

On March 22 and 23 the Honorary [illegible] of Jeffrey Fernandez of Killington, Amy Fischer of Rochester, N. Y., John Perry of Barre and Robert Zorn of South Orange, N. J. finished out their season at Shippensburg College, Shippensburg Pa. Many colleges attended the tournament: Mansfield, Westminster, Temple, Bloomsburg, and Villanova from Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Vermont from the New England area with Wisconsin, Michigan State, and Air from the Mid West. Each the Vermont teams won th and lost two for a to record of six wins and fo losses.

Violinist Tossy Spivakovsky, a world-renowned artist, has the unusual distinction of having performed with the top five symphony orchestras in this country – the Boston, Cleveland, New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia. He has also played with many major foreign orchestras and in recital around the world. Owner of a famous 1721 Stradivarius, Spivakovsky was hailed by the Times as "among the choicest violinists today."

Virtuoso cellist Aldo Parisot has performed throughout the world in recital and as soloist with all the leading orchestras. He has the great distinction of being engaged by the New York Philharmonic as soloist during the inaugural season of the Philharmonic at Lincoln Center. Parisot played on the first Lane Summer Series (1956) as a member of the Trio Allegro.

On the same afternoon (April 21, in Memorial Auditorium) at 1:30 p.m. the Vermont Symphony Orchestra will present a one-hour free Youth Concert. Conducting will be Anthony Pezzano, assistant conductor of the Orchestra and Director of its Symphony Day Programs for children. For this youth concert the Lane Series will have the co-sponsorship of a group of local ladies known as the Friends of Music, who are distributing tickets in the local schools.

High school and grammar school students who are unable to obtain tickets in their schools for this concert may write to Lane Series, UVM, for free tickets. Parents and other adults are welcome to attend the Youth Concert in the company of the children.

Debate Team Takes Second At Tournament

The University of Vermont debate teams finished out the season during the spring vacation with a second place in the national Delta Sigma Rho-Tau Kappa Alpha tournament March 28-30 at the University of Massachusetts.

The team of four, composed of Daniel Mulcahy of Brandon, Richard Hayes of Burlington, Rick Willey of Rutland and Ed Osborn of Pittsfield defeated such teams as Indiana State, Emerson College, Temple University, Ohio University, Wabash College and DePauw while losing to Vanderbilt and Indiana University in the seeding rounds.

In the finals, the top affirmative team, Vermont, was pitted against the top negative, Indiana University. The final standings were Indiana University first, the University of Vermont second.

The top debaters were rated on the basis of their total points. The first place affirmative debater award went to Daniel Mulcahy and second place went to Richard Hayes. The topic for debate was "Resolved, That the United States Should Grant Universal Amnesty to All Draft Evaders and Deserters of the Viet Nam War."

Vermont also entered Norma Schoonmaker of Burlington in Persuasive Speaking. After the two preliminary rounds she was tied for fourth place among the 40 contestants. Her total points were not sufficient to get her into the finals. The title of her speech was "The Wrong Teaching." In the speech she developed the theme that prejudice is learned because people and institutions inadvertently teach it. She opposed teaching prejudices.

Dr. Robert B. Huber was the coach and judge who accompanied the debaters. As National Treasurer he not only participated in the legislative functions of the Honorary Forensic Society, but also presented the Distinguished Alumni Awards at the annual banquet.

On March 22 and 23 the [illegible] of Vermont novice team of Jeffrey Fernandez of Killington, Amy Fischer of Rochester, N. Y., John Perry of Barre and Robert Zorn of South Orange, N. J. finished out their season at Shippensburg College, Shippensburg Pa. Many colleges attended the tournament: Mansfield, Westminster, Temple, Bloomsburg, and Villanova from Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Vermont from the New England area with Wisconsin, Michigan State, and Alma from the Mid-West. Each of the Vermont teams won three and lost two for a total record of six wins and four losses.

Richard Hayes of Burlington participated in other phases of forensics. Participating in the individual events of Oral Interpretation of Literature, Impromptu Speaking, Humorous Oral Interpretation, and Impromptu Oral Interpretation, he won the fourth place trophy in Impromptu Oral Interpretation and tied for sixth in Oral Interpretation. This placement won him entry into the national finals to be held this year at Plattsburgh State College on April 19-22, 1974.

Ecumenical Co-operation Alive At UVM

Ecumenical co-operation is alive and thriving on the UVM campus. One of the more active representatives of this co-operation is a group known as the Religious Counselor's Association (RCA).

The RCA is composed of various religious counselors who serve the university community. Membership is open to anyone in a leadership position in a religious group related to campus life. Despite diverse religious traditions and ministries, the members share a common goal: the welfare of the university community.

In the past many counselors have undertaken similar activities as individual representatives of their own religious traditions. This often produced duplication of effort and services. Liaison among various religious groups had been underdeveloped. It should thus be often difficult for one counselor to refer to another religious counselor, should a student be in need of someone from a different religious tradition. The RCA is working to solve these problems by meeting together, serving together, praying together.

In the work of the RCA, three goals have evolved. They are 1. to facilitate communication among representatives of the various religious communities on campus 2. to avoid duplication of work 3. to work together and learn together in enriching experiences. In order to reach these goals the members have found that they need to cultivate among themselves a spirit of trust and trustworthiness. In their meetings they are striving to know each other better by sharing ideas, concerns, activities, and, above all, by demonstrating a respect for each other's religious beliefs.

The attitude of the members of the RCA towards one another and towards the campus community is summarized by a statement the RCA has made in reference to its involvements in student residences. It reminds each member "Our work should also be characterized by a spirit of humble service. We should avoid any form of coercion, particularly, where such coercion may take the form of forcing our religious convictions onto others. It needs to be stressed that we are in the residences, not to force our own attitudes, but rather to make available the resources of the RCA in responding to needs expressed to it."

What has this ecumenical group accomplished during the current year? Its first big project was the construction of a residency plan which established four teams of religious counselors, each to serve a particular residence area. Each team is responsible for representing the resources of the entire RCA, volunteering their time and skills to whatever extent they are able, co-operating with other professional counselors, and enhancing in whatever way possible the life of the residence communities. To help in this work the RCA compiled a folio listing all information that might be useful about each group. In addition, time is set aside at each meeting for the team to share what they have learned in their residence areas.

Another project was the planning and presentation of an ecumenical Thanksgiving service, held at the Living/Learning Center last semester. Although the RCA organized the first few planning sessions, the final planning and running of the celebration was accomplished by an inter-faith student committee. The service consisted of guitar music, singing, slide presentation, and spontaneous prayer.

The current project of the RCA is the establishment of a hospital visitation plan, to be sure that students in the hospital are visited, if they so desire, by a representative from the RCA. This person will then be able to be of service in any way necessary to the student who may wish help.

The members of the RCA feel that they have learned much from their common sharing and serving. They welcome any student suggestions or participation and would be glad to be of help to the University in whatever ways possible.

Member Groups: Christian Scientists, Newman Center, Campus Crusade for Christ, St. Anselm's Chapel, Associates in Ministry, Hillel House, Ascension Lutheran Church, First Unitarian Church.

Common numbers aside, the Air Force offers professional advantages. Besides receiving training in your own specialty, you'd be in contact with physicians in all of the medical specialties. You'll function in an environment which is intellectually stimulating and professionally challenging.

For example, there's opportunity in the group medicine and preventive medicine, and the growing specialty of "family physician." Wherever your interests, there are few specialties which are not being practiced in today's Air Force.

The physician entering his practice in civilian life has to take into account the cost of setting up an office. The physician commissioning his practice in the Air Force does not. He finds his office established for him. Supplies and equipment readily available. He has many options available to him when treating patients. For example, he can consult with Air Force specialists. He also has referral to other Air Force facilities via aeromedical evacuation. Last, but not least, are the satisfactions that come with having the opportunity for regular follow-ups, and a rewarding supplement can that is practically nil.

Whether you are already a physician, or want to become one, you might find it immensely rewarding to find out what the Air Force has to offer. We think it could be a real eye-opener. If you'll mail in the coupon, we'd be happy to send you detailed information.

McRae Criticizes Goddard President, Takes Fight To Washington D.C.

Otis McRae, outspoken critic of Gerald E. Witherspoon, president of Goddard College and his administration, has taken his fight to Washington, D.C.

McRae, alleging "liberal racism" of Gerald Witherspoon in the violation of his contract in September, 1973, sanctioned by the Goddard College Board of Trustees, has moved to block a possible Federal grant of $600,000 that the College has applied for at the Department of Health Education and Welfare's Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education.

McRae has asked the Office of Education to postpone any consideration of Goddard's application pending resolution of his case which has been filed with the Equal Opportunities Commission in Boston, Massachusetts.

McRae states that while no promises of any kind were made to him by the officials of H.E.W. nor conclusions expressed, he was assured that the information presented that department would be given serious attention and consideration provided the grant proposal submitted by Goddard College would be among the fifty institutions selected for awards from the 250 competing institutions that survived the initial preliminary proposal application process.

McRae is also awaiting an apology from Governor Salmon for misinformation given a Goddard Student in December in a letter bearing his signature in which he alleged information received from the American Civil Liberties Union, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the ex-president of Goddard College Royce Pitkin indicated that no civil rights violation or racism was involved in his case at Goddard College (each has denied in writing that the Governor's office had ever received any such information).

McRae has also written two letters to Phil Hoff currently head of the Democratic party in the State of Vermont informing him of his treatment at the hands of Goddard's president, Gerald E. Witherspoon, who was a former Tax Commissioner under Ex-Governor Phil Hoff, requesting that he take a stand on the issues involved. (Thus far, Hoff has refused to respond.)

Other Washington based New England officials were visited including the office of Senator Aiken.

McRae charged that Goddard is currently near death. Eight teachers were recently notified that their contracts will probably not be renewed with at least twelve more terminations a real possibility. Enrollments continue to decline as the College becomes more and more deficient in curriculum and central services.

McRae states that an article appearing in the March 7, 1974, edition of the Barre-Montpelier Times Argus is typical of Witherspoon's clever manipulation of language. "Favorable first round Federal action on these proposals indicates the strength of Goddard's educational thinking."

McRae argues that "first round Federal action" indicates the strength of grant proposal techniques and expertise on the part of Goddard's writers having nothing to do with the reality of Witherspoon's educational leadership, and further views his statement as "a ploy to influence the Montpelier branch of Chittenden Bank with whom the school deals, and to demoralize efforts being made seriously for the first time by the Goddard faculty to unionize themselves for protection against Witherspoon's barren leadership."

UVM Club Participates In Model United Nations

by Big Helter

The Warren Austin Model United Nations club took Canada's position in a model U.N. conference in Boston from March 21-24. UVM took a delegation of six members. The club's expenses were funded by the Donner Foundation and the Student Association.

The conference, the Harvard National Model United Nations, through a simulation of the U.N., attempts to give students a deeper understanding of the process of the international forum.

The conference had approximately 130 participants from all over the country. Each participant represented one country in the U.N. on various committees, the General Assembly, and in some cases the Security Council and International Court of Justice. UVM's delegation took part in the committees of the General Assembly such as the Economic Committee, which investigated and took action on such resolutions as a world-wide policy on hydrocarbon resources and the establishment of a World Economic Resource Agency. The other committees, Legal, Political, Social-Humanitarian, and Trusteeship, entertained resolutions on apartheid. One such apartheid resolution was proposed by Canada (UVM), and trusteeship of Portuguese territories. The committee of the General Assembly cut down the approximately 200 resolutions to about 70 that were considered by the General Assembly Plenary.

The conference had certain problems because of restraints in time and space. One unique feature of the HMUN is that it is a Model United Nations. A model U.N. allows for role playing and creative diplomacy. This permits deviation from verbally espoused policies of actual member nations. A mock U.N. duplicates exactly every procedural and substantive content of the U.N.

The UVM delegation had two new opportunities offered them in preparation for the conference. One was a briefing given by an official from the Canadian external affairs department in which he explained policies and actions taken by Canada at the U.N. The other was a luncheon at the Harvard Club given by the Canadian Consul General of Boston who answered questions of protocol and policy.

The HMUN was a rare educational experience for all involved and the club is preparing again for next year. There is quite a bit of preparation for a Model U.N. consisting of writing up resolutions based on each respective country's past actions and usually a complete overview of each country's foreign policy especially in the area of trade, alliances, and other international agreements.

Anyone interested in being a part of the Warren Austin Club may contact Dr. Kinnard of the Political Science department.

Jung Vs. Behaviorists

As part of a continuing effort to provide programs of interest to the entire campus, the UVM Psychology Club is sponsoring a symposium on two major schools of thought: "Jung vs. the Behaviorists."

The founder of the first system, Carl Jung, became good friends with Sigmund Freud in 1906 and later served as the first president of the International Psychoanalytical Society. He then broke with Freud to establish his own school of Analytical Psychology. Jung made many trips to Africa studying the beliefs and customs of primitive peoples. Using the information gathered both from his trips and from his patients during psychotherapy, along with his research on the customs of ancient man, Jung developed a theory on the functioning of the "human psyche." He became convinced that the mind contained many "archtypal" images that have been passed down for generations and millenias through a "collective unconscious." His research has some interesting things to say on the meaning of dreams.

In contrast, rather than dealing with unconscious attitudes, the behaviorists feel that all behavior is learned. There is little if any tolerance allowed for the discussion of an unconscious dynamic operating in the mind. Probably the most notable behaviorist today is B. F. Skinner. The behaviorist has some important things to say about our view of man and his society.

Dr. Luther Martin will be presenting for the Jungians. Speaking for the Behaviorists will be Dr. Joseph Hasazi. Both points of view will be presented in an informal forum of debate, following which students and faculty will be encouraged to join in the discussion.

The confrontation of such radically different views of human personality promises to be lively and entertaining.

The symposium is being held this Tuesday, April 9, at 7:30 p.m. in the Auditorium (Room 115) of the Living/Learning Center. Refreshments will be served courtesy of the Psychology Club. All interested people are invited to attend.

Katherine January Exchanges Classroom Lectures For Communication Work In Windsor Prison

by Becky Burr

For Katherine January, becoming a UVA volunteer was the result of a chance conversation about the full-time volunteer program with a friend. She was finishing the first year of her graduate program in communication and she felt out of touch with the world outside the protected isolation of the University. Eventually that meant that she was to exchange the UVM classrooms for the bars at Windsor Prison.

January is the media coordinator at the only state prison in Vermont. She is the first woman to work regularly behind prison bars at a maximum security institution. Each morning she passes by the high fence which surrounds the prison, crosses the empty cement yard and enters the prison through a heavy and aging door.

This is the same door through which the families of the prisoners come to visit each day. She stops to talk with some of them as she goes, having learned about the agonizing problems of prison families from her communication with the prisoners inside the prison.

The guard takes her purse from her as she rings the bell requesting entrance to the cell block area. There is no sign of any human being but the door buzzes and Katherine pushes it creakily open and climbs the worn stairs to the next barred door which buzzes again as she approaches. Inside a protective glass bubble sits a guard who has monitered her arrival on closed circuit television and permitted her to make this entrance. January is well known at Windsor.

To the left are cell blocks B and C where the majority of prisoners occupy their small cells. Directly ahead are a group of barred windows which look down on the wind-blown prison yard.

January turns right and goes through yet another buzzing door to the educational wing which squats squarely before cell block A, the honor block. She opens a door to the left (it too was locked) and enters what could almost pass for a regular classroom. Books line the walls. A faded copy of Major British Writers is lying half open beside a copy of Human Biology. A portable blackboard stands at the front of the room, blocking from first view the barred windows behind it.

This is her home base, the place where most often she works and listens. On Thursdays this is where Katherine sets up television cameras for her Interact Television Network driven down from Dartmouth College. She has filmed classes and individual conversations. She has facilitated communication between the Burlington Probation and Parole office and Windsor by having cameras at both places. She has taught the prisoners how to help her film, explaining that many are skilled and most able. In turn, she has stayed late in the evening to film the prisoners' basketball games and play them back.

Like most UVA volunteers, January is technically supposed to work a 40 hour week, but one prisoner noted that, "She is here whenever we need her."

One afternoon a week she helps teach a psychology class with Larry Sargeant sponsored by the Vermont Community College. The inmates who appear for this class are serving time for murder, rape, armed robbery and aggravated assault. They do not seem self-conscious. They talk with her as they enter the room, glancing at the blackboard which bears the legend, "group process." One heavy red-haired prisoner with a skeleton tatooed on his hand inquires whether that means they can talk about the strike that took place in the prison last summer. She looks around at the other prisoners for a sensing of how they feel about the topic and there are nods of assent. The following hour and a half is a constant flow of conversation, a struggle for communication which facilitates understanding and fosters growth.

When the regular class breaks up, the prisoners do not leave. They talk amongst themselves and with her, lighting cigarettes and glancing occasionally out in the hall where guards and other prisoners pass. There is a discussion of violence and what and how one uses it as a communications process. "I believe in violence," says a small dark-haired man who has sat quietly through the class lighting one cigarette after another.

The prisoners look and act the same way as any of the multitude of men who fill your car with gas or bag your groceries. January explains that realizing and accepting the prisoners as fellow human beings was the first step she took toward acclimating herself to the prison. "When it all hits you at once it's so strong," she says quietly.

The volunteer has been at Windsor since September. In the intervening six months she has become a familiar and trusted friend to the men who have spent months and even years locked away from the kind of hope and caring that Katherine offers. She has built a "foundation of trust" one of the prisoners explains. "Kathy tells you she'll do something and she does it. She's not just here to make herself feel good. She's no goddamn do-gooder. She's real.... and honest."

Her newest project is a communications workshop to help break down some of the barriers which exist between prison officers and inmates. By interviewing both groups she hopes to create at least a base for exchange of ideas between the traditionally warring factions. The object of her interviews will be to bring the two groups together in face to face dialogue.

The work which January has begun will hopefully be continued by other student volunteers who believe as Katherine does that "sometimes you have to work inside to make a change." Windsor is one hundred and fifteen miles south of the University campus. But her professor and advisor Bill Lewis of the communications department has made the journey south to listen and help. "You have no idea what it means," she explains. "Just to have a faculty member to really talk with, to share and care and advise."

University Year for Action has provided Katherine January with the means of having a truly experiential educational experience which she is recording as part of her Masters thesis. Iron bars have made for a pretty heavy reality. UYA has also offered her a chance to break with the traditional classroom experience and learn while doing, while making a valuable contribution to the scarred and ancient tradition of security institutions.

She explains her decision to go to Windsor Prison as a UYA by saying that she was "tired of going to classes and studying and having connections with people who were just like me. I wanted to find something else. As it was, I was just learning in a vacuum and I was ready to do something."

No prison features enthusiastic or approving comments from its residents but the Windsor prisoners seem uniform in approving and caring for a young blonde UVM student who cared enough to give a year of her time to them. "So much of this place is in me — the rhythms of it," Katherine says. The journal which she is keeping of her experience at Windsor has a first page with a quote which Katherine feels is a meaningful introduction to her reason for being a UYA at Windsor Prison:

This shaking keeps me

Gardens-For-All

As in 1973, the University will again be cooperating with Gardens-for-All in a community gardening program which makes land available to persons interested in having gardens. This year two additional sites in the university area will be available to accomodate the increased numbers of gardeners expected. Plots will be provided on three sites owned by UVM (behind the Admissions Office at 194 S. Prospect; behind the nursing home on East Avenue and in the adjoining apple orchard; and in the large field near the Jughandle bounded by Main St., East Ave., Carrigan Dr., and the Agriculture Engineering parking lot) and on land near the medical complex owned by Medical Center Hospital of Vermont.

All UVM students, faculty, and staff and residents who live near the university who are interested in having a garden plot this year should come to a meeting on Thursday, April 11, at 7:30 p.m. in the Memorial Lounge, Waterman Building, meeting. Tommy T passed after several queries on the conditions of the fund.

The agenda was then altered so that outgoing president Sig Heller could introduce a Constitutional Amendment, S. 73. Heller's proposal would delete Article III, Section 2, and instead provide for a 16-member Senate. It would consist of one representative from each of the following complexes: Chittenden - Buckham-Wills; Jeanne Mance-Burgess-Converse; W-D-W; Harris-Mills; Living/Learning Center; MAT; Christie-Wright Patterson; Mason-Simpson-Hamilton; Redstone-Robinson - Slade-Coolidge. There would be one representative from the fraternities, one from the sororities, and five from the town. Section 3 would be changed to "Each Senator will have one vote."

Ed Pasqualin, Senator from Coolidge, objected to the system of grouping the smaller dorms together. "Here we've got Redstone, a women's dorm, Robinson, the Environmental Dorm, Slade, the French dorm, and Coolidge, which is in the Experimental Program, all grouped together. They'll disagree on issues; they should be separate. The fellows I know in fraternities won't all agree, either."

Another point brought up was that 16 students cannot adequately represent the needs and interests of seven thousand undergraduates.

Alan King, senator from Fiji, suggested that the Senate work on ways to increase attendance, such as recalling a Senator who did not attend a certain number of meetings. The discussion continued in a negative vein, and the bill was defeated.

In other action, the Senate recognized the Pre-Veterinary Club. There are 18 veterinarian schools in the United States, and the Pre-Vet Club wishes to promote interest in the proposed New England Veterinarian College, in Massachusetts. The college would serve New England needs and base enrollment on state population.

Under New Business, Kim Niskey, Senator from Millis, proposed that the Student Association Senate appropriate $10 from the Senate Contingency Fund to buy cold patch paving material and cover the expense of revising the "Speed Dip" system at UVM. The bill was greated with applause by the Senate.

Cathy Chamberlain, senator from Wing, asked for recognition of the Psychology Club, and that the rules be suspended. A question on procedure defeated the motion, but after a statement from a Club spokesman, the motion was made again. This time it was passed, with a suspension of the rules. The meeting adjourned at 9:30.

Apology

Last issue's article questioning the effectiveness of the Living/Learning directors was in part inaccurate and false.

Nick Muller has shown these reporters the travel expenses and budget he and his assistant followed. For example, concerning the Directors' plant-buying trip to Florida, we wrote that their expenses totaled $4,500. Muller showed us the detailed expense record of his trip which totaled $2,500. The figures we quoted were heresay from an uninformed staff at the Living/Learning Center. These facts and figures should have been checked with informed administrators before going to print.

Although most of these figures and names we quoted were not entirely true, there are still aspects of Nick Muller's accessability and effectiveness that need questioning and clarification.

Baseball ClubIs Formed

Early in the Fall Semester the idea of fielding a Club Baseball team was presented to the Alumni Athletic Council for a reaction. The Council responded favorably which triggered follow up steps in the areas of student interest, teams to schedule, alumni financial support and S. A. recognition. Early in the Spring Semester the last part of the puzzle fell into place with formal S. A. recognition of the team.

The word went out and on March 4, in the cage, 76 players showed up for the first workout. After the coaching staff, made up of Al Dwyer, Harry Brooks, Paul Trono, Mark McDonald, and John Stanton, recovered from the initial shock of such a large turnout, workouts have progressed rapidly. Working nightly the players have shown a tremendous amount of desire and hustle which indicate that win or lose the club team will be a success this Spring. The team will play its home games at Centennial Field.

The season opens Sunday, April 7 with a double header against Norwich at home, which means the weatherman needs to give the team a break with an early Spring this year. Currently there are 13 scheduled "exhibition" games with the possibility of two or three more that are not firmed up yet. In addition plans are being formulated for an Alumni baseball game to be run in conjunction with the Alumni Football game but the details are still being discussed.

Lacrosse Team Opens Season

Hockey season is over. Gone is the feverish excitement - the flying sticks and hard, fast checking - which brought crowds cheering to their feet. A certain sadness remains, at least among those who are unaware that they don't have to wait until next winter to once again experience the sports thrills associated with UVM hockey. Fortunately, that melancholy is unnecessary, because, as the hockey rink melts to tennis courts UVM hockey excitement will take to the football field outside Gutterson Fieldhouse in the form of a new university sport - a spring sport - Lacrosse. The UVM Lacrosse Club wishes to invite everyone to witness the opening of their first season this Saturday as hockey's new rowdy rival takes on the St. Mike's Varsity Lacrosse Squad in the first formal lacrosse game ever to be played at the University of Vermont. The game will begin at 1:30 p.m. this coming Saturday (April 6) on the football field outside Gutterson.

Lacrosse is hockey without skates - it's rough and the action flows quickly. In fact, as "the fastest game on two feet", lacrosse is really a two-hour all-out sprint, featuring body checking, blocking and tackling, which makes hockey look tame in comparison. Like the hockey stick, the "Crosse" or lacrosse stick (a basket type netting in a wood or plastic frame on the end of a wood or metal shaft) is too often, mistakenly, used as a weapon. The crosse, however, breaks far less easily than the hockey stick, which necessitates in lacrosse a rugged helmet (to protect the human skull) with a baseball catcher type protective face cage attached. The remaining protection worn by a lacrosse playsr is limited to shoulder pads, arm pads (to reduce the frequency of black/blueness incurred by miscellaneous jabs and pokes from an opponents stick), and whatever protection afforded by the game shorts and jersey. (The extra thickness and cushioning of warm-up pants is considered "sissy" practice by the average player who prefers to "rough it," unless of course, there's still snow on the ground, in which case the pants are needed for warmth.)

Recognized as an official club by the Student Association last Fall the new lacrosse club raised enough money to outfit a team with the equipment mentioned above, and has been all winter. The miles and miles run, the grueling conditioning have been in preparation for this Saturday's game (as well as for next Monday's and Wednesday's game, not reducing the importance of the remaining six games on this season's schedule.) Naturally, the team would like to beat St. Mike's, but it's not going to be easy. Unlike UVM, lacrosse is not new to St. Mike's - they've got depth and experience. But in UVM's favor is a brilliant coach, Chaplaine Odie, and alot of really fine lacrosse talent, some fresh out of high school competition. The contest should be close and aggressive. When all is said and done, however, the winner will most likely be the craziest of the two squads. To excell, to be really good, means being a little crazy, and pushing to the very limit and attempting the unique and seemingly impossible. Last Monday and Tuesday nights, the UVM lacrosse team, in the freezing cold, shovelled snow for hours from the Lacrosse fields to insure a clear field for Saturday's opener. Crazy.

The other All-New England picks, O'Connell and Child, also contributed substantially to the offensive statistics, particularly O'Connell. The sophomore center was the leading pointgetter on the squad with 24 goals and 33 assists for 57 points. It was his second consecutive 50+ point season. Last year, as a freshman, he had 21 goals and 30 assists for 51 points and was named the East's Rookie of the Year. Child had four goals and 18 assists this year and a career total of 17 goals and 54 assists.

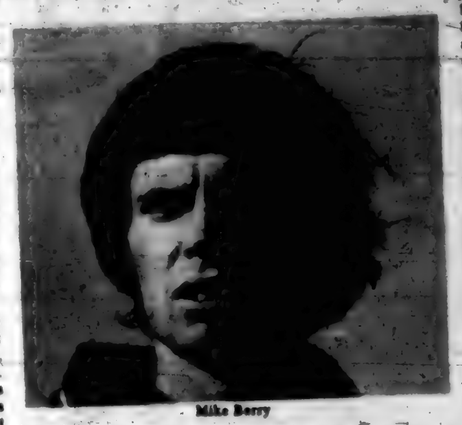
Berry To Again Lead X-Country Team

Repeating as captain of next year's University of Vermont cross country team is So. Burlington's Mike Berry, it was announced at a recent Athletic Council meeting.

Berry, captain of three sports this year, cross country, indoor and outdoor track, is a junior and will lead a veteran squad next fall. "We are eager about next year, as we have all of our top point-getters back from last fall," said Bill Neddo, coach of the Vermont harriers.

The Yankee Conference title has eluded Vermont since 1958. This year, Vermont finished third. "We'll be chasing the leaders next fall, Massachusetts (champion) and Connecticut (runnerup)," added Neddo.

The best Vermont finish since 1958 was a second in 1970.



Mike Berry

Berry was Vermont's top finisher in the Conference meet at Durham, N.H. last fall, placing seventh. The talented distance runner is also one of the premier two-milers in the Conference.

Kurt And Mahoney - Swim Co-Captains

Elected as co-captains of the 1974-75 University of Vermont swim team are two juniors from Burlington, Vt., Mike Kurt and John Mahoney. It was announced at the annual post-season dinner, March 20.

Kurt, a freestyle specialist, holds four Vermont records, all set this past season when the AquaCats reeled off eight dual wins in 10 meets.

Mahoney is a butterfly performer.

The new co-captains replace Cliff Johnson (Hamden, Conn.) and Dave Phelan (Morristown, N.J.) as swim leaders.

"I'm very pleased that the team elected these two men as the co-captains of next year's squad. They couldn't find two men more capable," said swim mentor Les Leggett.

At the dinner, sophomore swim ace, Mike Jacobs (Leominster, Mass.), was named recipient of the team's Outstanding Swimmer Award, presented annually by the staff. Jacobs performs in the 50 and 100 yard freestyle events and is also a member of the record-holding freestyle and medley relay teams. The award is presented to the swimmer for "loyalty, dedication and point production."

The Vermont swimmers have won 31 of its last 33 dual meets and at one point, won 23 straight dual meets. The streak was snapped in the opening meet this year by Maine. Over the last five years, Vermont's AquaCats have won 42 and lost only six. Vermont finished eighth in the New Englands this year.

Rugby Schedule

Spring rugby practice will begin on Thursday, April 4 at the Archie Post Field at 4:30 p.m. For those unable to attend the initial practice session regular practice will begin on Monday, April 8 at 3:30 p.m. Anyone who wishes to play rugby for UVM is invited to attend practice; no previous experience is required. The schedule:

April 10 – Johnson State – Away
April 13 – Middlebury – Home
April 17 – Johnson State – Home
April 20 – Norwich – Away
April 27 – Albany Law School – Away
May 4 – St. Michael's – Away

Honors And Awards For A Great UVM Hockey Team

A bundle of "firsts" evolved from this year's record-setting hockey season at the University of Vermont.

Beginning with March 9, Vermont became the first Division II team to win three divisional championships, as the Cats whipped Merrimack, 6–2, in the title game. Also, Vermont became the first college division team to compete (and first team to be invited) in a post-season national invitational tournament, the NIHT in Duluth, Minn., March 14–16. And, on the eve of the NIHT, it was announced (March 15) at the NCAA's in Boston that three Vermont players (of a total of six selected) were named to the college division All–America squad, the first time Vermont has placed three players on the first team. For the last three years, Vermont has had two players picked.

"It was a year we will never forget. What a way for the seniors to finish (28 wins and only five losses), closing out their final year with the best collegiate hockey record in the country, champions of the regular season and playoffs in Division II for the second consecutive year and runner-up in the first-ever NIHT," said Vermont head coach, Jim Cross. The seniors, captain Ted Castle (Rochester, N.Y.), Willie MacKinnon (Dedham, Mass.), Ted Child (Dedham, Mass.), Chris Miller (Bedford, Que.), Eli Tubbs (Buffalo, N.Y.), John Kisly (Ithaca, N.Y.) and Whitney Watts (Swampscott, Mass.), compiled a three-year record of 70–18–2 (.798) and an astonishing Division II record of 50–4–1 (.927).

In addition, two of the seniors (Castle and MacKinnon) were named to the All–America squad, while three of them (Castle, MacKinnon and Child) were picked for All–New England honors. MacKinnon was a first-team All–New England choice, while Castle and Child were tabbed for second-team accolades.

Junior John Murphy (Dedham, Mass.) was recognized as a first-team All–America and All–New England defenseman, while sophomore flash, center Tim O'Connell (Cohasset, Mass.) was a first-team All–New England pick. Three others, senior goalie, John Kisly (Ithaca, N.Y.), sophomore defenseman Ken Yeates (Dorval, Que.) and junior wing Roger Mallette (Vaudreuil, Que.), were honorable mention choices in New England.

MacKinnon, who missed eight games because of two shoulder separations, averaged an amazing 2.08 points a game on 27 goals and 25 assists. The smooth-skating center scored the winning goal (3–2) in the semi-finals of the NIHT against Lake Superior, scored the winning overtime goal (4–3) against St. Louis (Jan. 4) and had a four-goal night in a big 7–4 win at Bowdoin. His linemate, Castle, tallied 25 goals and 19 assists for 44 points and holds the Vermont record for career goals (71) and is second on the Vermont scoring list with 71 goals and 75 assists. MacKinnon is fourth (50 and 69 for 119 points).

The third All–American, Murphy, set a Vermont season record for most assists by a defenseman (27) and was a continual terror on defense.

Intramural Results

On Monday, March 18, Simpson Hall captured its first intramural sports title of the year by beating Wasted, in the bowling playoffs. Total pinfall was not spectacular as both teams played below their capabilities, but the tension as the match progressed was high.

In order to make the finals Wasted whipped Acacia and Simpson sliced Hamell. In the semis, Simpson was down 76 pins going into the second game. The victor is determined by total pinfall of the four man teams in both games combined. In the second game Simpson applied the pressure and finally came up the winner by 108 pins to capture the match 1164–1132. The high game in the match went to Steve Robinson with a 203 in the final game.

In the finals, neither team played with much accuracy but Simpson won by 56 pins. The second game was filled with tension as Wasted, a team with many intramural championships, put on a last minute rally. The rally fell short and Simpson bowled away with its first championship. The members of the winning team were Dan Moulton, Paul Thompson, Mitch Goldstein, Jay Samuels, and Steve Robinson. Wasted team members were Carl Bohlen, Roger Lowe, Larry Granger, Kim Bray, K. Alan Wallace, and James Bradley.

The winter sports season is over at UVM and the lull of spring sports hits the campus. True there is lacrosse, rugby, and track but the excitement of hockey, basketball, and swim is lost after the spring vacation. Some new excitement has been generated with the formation of the baseball club but with snow still on the ground on April 1, the chances of playing baseball under good conditions in Vermont remains a problem.

Perhaps this is as good a time as any to glance back at some of the events this semester. Besides a hockey team that made it to the top and a basketball team striving for success other things have come out of the winter sports season. Gymnastics drew a big following on campus. Many crowds at Patrick were quite large for this expanding sport on campus that has not yet become a varsity activity as far as men are concerned. The women's sports teams were [illegible] and the basketball team played in the Eastern tournament in New York City. The ski team despite setbacks in the jumping, surprised the field at the NCAA's and finished third, the best finish of any Eastern team. We also learned of the need to expand the Patrick Gym facilities and also that no matter how organized the ticket allocation system for hockey there are still many problems. There are still priorities that hurt the chances of students to receive tickets.

When one glances back for a quick review of events one can see many facets of UVM sports. Hockey and basketball may receive the greatest space but the other teams have performed in many cases, beyond expectation. And of course, the injustices of tickets and the use of facilities hurts us all. For now we turn attention to the success of the spring athletic teams. Even if the true sports excitement is not there for these teams the student athletes represent UVM and deserve our support. Perhaps baseball can get off the ground without getting stuck in the spring mud. Or perhaps, like this reporter, we would rather wait for Henry Aaron to break the home run record.

INTERESTED IN GROWTH POTENTIAL?

Then you should consider these interesting and important facts about Pratt & Whitney Aircraft.

Fact 1: H. J. Gray, president and chief executive officer of United Aircraft Corporation, has announced an objective to double sales through the end of the decade.

Fact 2: Pratt and Whitney Aircraft is the largest division of United Aircraft Corporation and accounts for a major portion of total corporate sales.

We expect to share in this growth...and share materially. Here's how and why.

With.....advanced aircraft engines generating up to 60,000 pounds of takeoff thrust that will ensure our continuing world leadership in powering the majority of commercial air transports.

With.....pollution-free fuel cell power plants to help solve the world's energy needs. Experimental units have already amassed over 100,000 hours of operation producing electricity for commercial, light-industrial and residential applications.

With.....even more efficient and powerful industrial gas turbines to join the almost 1,000 units already sold for generating electricity, pumping gas and propelling marine vessels.

If you want to prove-out your abilities at the frontiers of the state-of-the-art, P&WA is a great place for that important personal testing. Further, our projected growth-rate suggests faster-than-usual advancement opportunities for those capable of innovative thinking.

We have attractive career opportunities for engineers and scientists in virtually every technical field. See your College Placement Office for requirements, interview dates and our descriptive brochure. UVM's Bureau Of Immigration To Recruit More Farmers

by Clark Kent

There is good news for all of you who were deceived into believing that the dire financial situation would force UVM to drop its trousers and streak to a financial halt even before another belt notch on the proverbial waistline could be tightened. Here, with another exclusive Clinic interview is Little Black Sambo getting the direct scoop from Commander Tinfoil, head of the University's immigration bureau.

Clinic: Commander Tinfoil, is it true that UVM is going to increase its ratio of rich to poor students next year?

CTF: Sammy, may I call you Sammy? – that is absolutely false. In fact, just the reverse is true. Obviously we want more agriculture majors at this school. We all drink milk, don't we?

Clinic: Well, according to the Borington RePress, the number of wealthy students is gain...

CTF: Listen, son, may I call you son? – the Borington RePress is a very fine paper, in fact it is the best daily in Burlington. But they have their biases. Of course, the agriculture students are getting richer. Just look at this chart. Except for that little descending red line at the end, it shows that the GNP is going up, up, up, and along with it, the students. Don't tell me you're not richer this year that you were last year?

Clinic: No, I don't think so. I only made $.50 last year, not counting my dancing scholarships.

CTF: Well, Sonny, here's a dollar. Now you're richer. Say, you want to turn that tape back a little? This is off the record you know, someone might think I was trying to bribe you.

Clinic: Commander Tinfoil, this paper takes great pride in searching for the truth, whether it be in Lake Champlain or up Ed Andrews'...

CTF: Ah...yes...to seek the truth, Rastus—may I call you Rastus?-carnal knowledge- that is truth! Those were the four best years of my life. The light at the beginning of the black tunnel. Oh, Betty Lou, where are you now? Uh, the truth, "E Pluribus Unum"...No, the truth is that we —say, you're not trying to hypnotize me are you?

Clinic: Why...no.

CTF: Well, Sammy, the truth is that we are...we are...we...yes, rich kids... budget...20%...

Cynic: The Truth!

CTF: Uh...

Clinic: What is the deal on the rich-kids?

CTF: Uh, we are supposed to increase our enrollment of students whose parents have annual income of fifty G's or more. Ed...um, Ed Andrews says...uh,...say, where am I?

Clinic: You were just telling me how you expected to raise the wealthy studend enrollment, sir, CTF: I did?

Clinic: Certainly.

CTF: Oh... yes. Well of course! Nothing is definitely planned, but yes, we ...uh, just look at this chart, see how those people enrichen this little state. For a few old trees, farms, houses, and mountains, they have given us good crisp green money. And jobs. Jobs. Sammy, remember that dancing scholarship! And look at this chart, see what we have done for social mobility in Vermont. Not only do we have many more mobile homes, but look at that graph. Five Vermont girls —count 'em— FIVE Vermont girls got, to marry wealthy guys from northern New Jersey in just one year alone! Amazing, it's just really amazing.

Clinic: But what if those couples decide to live in Vermont?

CTF: Ridiculous my boy! What could anyone brought up in northern New Jersey want with Vermont?

Clinic: What about admission for minority groups? Are there going to be more minority students next year?

CTF: Well as you know, the two main minority groups are non-skiers, and albinos, and they are awfully hard to find.

Clinic: What about people who don't like hockey?

CTF: I'm sorry, but they have no place at this university. You have heard that saying, America is a piece of ice and we are all Mark Spitz's frozen in our imag...

Clinic: Well, how many albinos do you have?

CTF: None really, but we're looking. Gee, you know the chemistry department has been helpful with us here. I cannot really elaborate on it. I mean we don't have the Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval or anything like that. But we're going to take the bull by the balls and do something about it quick. It's really a shame that we have no albinos. But hey, I wish you wouldn't quote me on all this. People really do jump to hasty conclusion and pull things all out of context.

Clinic: I'm an albino.

CTF: Huh?

Clinic: That's right. I appear to be black but underneath I'm white as a newborn baby's unstained diapers.

CTF: Well, I never...

Clinic: This is just a tar covering— all that stuff you heard about us being tar-babies is true.

CTF: Well whaddya know! All these years...

Clinic: Say, my roommate has a friend who's a senior in high school up in Derby Line — says -he got rainbow colored skin!

CTF: Really, ya don't say -Gee, do you suppose there is a pot of gold under his feet?

Clinic: My roommate says that he spits out golden coins every other minute.

CTF: Really? right here in Vermont? I don't believe it! Say we've got to bring this kid down to the lab. Hello...Operator, could you get me Derby Line?

Streakers — Show Your Faces Now!

It has come to President Andrews' attention that there has been an outbreak of streaking here at the university. Dr. Andrews expressed shock and dismay and has taken steps to cope with the problem.

One of the major concerns of the president is that streakers streak with masks on. "This has got to stop," giggled Dr. Andrews. "We must be able to see their faces so we can tell the F.B.I. who the subversive students are. And besides one of the professors wants to meet some of the boys."

"The reputation of U.V.M. is in jeopardy," states President Andrews. Andrews feels that U.V.M. students aren't taking streaking in the proper spirit. The guidelines set down by the American Streakers Association were continually broken. Covering of the face is strictly forbidden. Footwear is allowable but discouraged. No one over 85 may run (exceptions are made with doctor's permission.) However accessories are encouraged. These may include scarves, WWI helmets, sunglasses, feathers (with or without tar), body paint, or bells if you want attention.

To improve administration with students the first annual streak run will be held April 19. Students, faculty, and administration are welcomed. Leading off the administration will Barbara Snelling and Keith Miser. (Mrs. Snelling is the favorite but Mr. Miser has been working hard for two weeks.) The students are placing their hopes in Peter MacAusland (recently elected) president of S.A., and Barbara Frankel, editor of the Cynic. Many other contestants are expected, both big and small.

The route will go from Waterman down Prospect Street around Redstone campus for viewing and down to MAT and back to Waterman through the campus. First-aid stations will be set up every 100 yards for the out-of-shape people. Smelling salts will be available for the faint-of-heart.

Beside the streak run, streaking will be restricted to Christmas, New Year's, and Ervin Klingchick's birthday between 3:33 and 4 p.m. The administration after much study and consideration felt these times were best for the students and spectators. Andrews hopes that U.V.M. students will continue to keep up the Vermont tradition of being the biggest and best in Vermont.

P.S. The streaker who was wearing a red bandanna and cowboy hat, earrings and silver high heels, please call Sue Browning at 4329. John Blum also expresses a deep interest in this streaker. He can be contacted at the High Hat anytime.

Good Night and Good Schwarts

The UVM athletic department announced a coup this past week. The basketball team coming off the best season in recent memory (10-16) has decided to go independent. Not only have North Carolina, North Carolina State and Vanderbilt agreed to play the new Catamount-independents but Notre Dame, Marquette, UCLA, USC, Providence, Kansas, Maryland, and other members of the top twenty have agreed to play games. The basketball team plans to import the best high school players in the country and go with a team of 12 freshmen and the captain, Jose Greco. Because Patrick Gym is not large enough for all these visiting teams, the Montreal Forum has agreed to stage these games as Canada learns what top flight basketball is all about.

Meanwhile the hockey team, after its best performance, has decided to spurn Division I and continue an effort to gain a completely undefeated season. They have decided to go down to Division III. Framingham State, Wesleyan, Lehigh, New Haven, Amherst, and other Division III powers have agreed to the switch. According to informed sources on the hockey club this will allow an all Vermont hockey team without imports from other states and countries to play and show how much Vermont hockey has advanced. Replacing the Catties in Division I is the newly crowned Division III champion, Castleton State, which has played varsity hockey for the last six weeks.

The analysis of this reporter is that the hockey team will remain with a winning record and the basketball team can only get worse.

Question: Because of a recent accident which broke both my wrists, my mother is writing this letter for me. I am sorry to say that my sex drive was not broken as well. In my convalescent state, I am often bored. I feel that masturbating would help the time to pass more quickly, but this plaster on my arms and fingers prevents me from doing so. Do you have any suggestions? Please do not ask mom to do it for me. She has already refused to put that "dirty thing" in her hands, much less in her mouth.

Answer: Why don't you let mom try her Electrolux on you? If using a vacuum cleaner to masturbate surprises you, remember that when the first hand vibrators appeared on the market a lot of people were shocked. But if the ads in the back of those women's magazines are any indication, they are all getting the electric turn-on now. With a good suction type vacuum, your mom could satisfy you efficiently without any danger of personal contact. And for some anal titillation, an electric toothbrush does a nice job, too. Only be sure to sterilize the brushes after. (Did you know that some people actually like the taste of dung?) Are you a bed wetter? If you are, I [illegible] with these gadgets. They claim that death is the ultimate climax, but no one has lived to prove it.

Campus Security Receives Award

The Kojak Award for Bravery in the Line of Duty has been awarded to a member of UVM's Campus Security, the Clinic was informed today. The award is given each year to a police officer demonstrating great courage, bravery, and intelligence in the line of duty. The award this year goes to Joe Fuzz, the daring lieutenant who stalked bravely into Pomeroy Annex and completely shut down [illegible] single shot from his nightstick.

WRUV, as everyone must be aware of by now, is a Communist-inspired, subversive radio station, that caters to the perverse needs of exhibitionists and nudists by coordinating mass streak-ins on the University Main Campus. Some of their antics are quite shocking; they have been known to broadcast "Seven Dirty Words You Can't Say On Television" over and over during Sunday prime-time. [illegible] let him serve as a graphic reminder that Might makes Right.

Soapbox Scholar Smilingly Seizes School

by John Milton

Dr. S.I.N. Bogokawa of the UVM Department of Linguistics announced today that he was taking over full control of the University, due, he said, to the "Paucity of poetical pursuits." Former President Edward Andrews and his staff have been deported to Trinity College.

Standing on a soapbox in his new office in the Old Mill's Dewey Lounge, surrounded by his personal guard of honor, who were dressed in uniforms of silver-studded pink tights, chartreuse body shirts decked out with a copious number of Rhode Island Red chicken feathers, mink jackets trimmed with Siberian Huskey fur, and velvet-green knee boots, Bogokawa announced immediate abolition of the UVM Band, the University Players, the Folk Dance Club and Saga Food Services (an announcement which was greeted with a rousing cheer), and ordered that every UVM student be required to join the David Bowie fan club, adding that anyone who didn't would be hung by their little piggy who went to market from the Redstone water tower.

Blue blazer twinkling in twilight the diminutive doctor pressed persistently toward telling the tenor of his revolutionary remarks. "Alliteration is dead!" he cried. "Assonance is asinine! The obnoxious arrogance of ignorance obviously ought to be obliviated."

Bogokawa announced the outlines of his new administration. I'd tell you what they were, but a fellow member of our dedicated journalistic corps brought out a fifth of Seagram's and the rest of the news conference was lost in an alcoholic blur.

invited to attend this event.

Evening festivities are described as a "fun-filled way to demonstrate national unity and equality." John Connally and Sammy Davis, Jr. will be co-masters of ceremony.

In an unprecedented gesture of magnanimity, President Nixon made a personal call to Gloria Steinem inviting her to appear and receive the crown for "Nostalgia Day Queen." Ms. Steinem declined for unknown reasons. Tricia Nixon was asked to take her place and accepted the honor with enthusiasm.

Highlights of the evening include a mime performance by Martha Mitchell, wife of the former attorney general, entitled "Hear no Evil, See no Evil, Speak no Evil."

The holiday celebration will close with a dance performed by the "Goldiggers" of the Dean Martin show entitled "The Paper Shuffle." Dean's girls are dedicating the number "to all those boys at the IRS." Asked the significance of this, one goldigger replied, "We just want to say to those boys, 'We luv ya.'"

Dean Weiger Show

The Pharts and Entertainment Department of the Clinic is proud to present the Dean Weiger Show, tonight in the round room of Billings Center.

Never before has the Dean agreed to reveal his singing talent to the public. Tonight will be the first performance of his diversified musical selection. The Dean's rendition will include "Shine On Harvest Moon," "You Made Me Love You," and "As Time Goes By." All three songs, he says, are dedicated to the administration.

Also appearing with Dean Weiger will be his secretary, Rosie, who will show slides of the interior of the Dean's office, and photographs of him streaking in front of President Andrews' home.

Join the fun at 7:30 tonight, in Billings.

Don't Do It Barb

It has come to the attention of the Vermin Clinic that some Chittenden County Republicans are toying with the idea of getting UVM Vice-President Barbara Snelling to run for governor. While the idea of a woman governor must seem attractive to the radical feminist sect of the Clinic, it is hoped that Mrs. Snelling will not consider any such bid at this point in time.

The Clinic fears the far-reaching effects of a long, drawn-out campaign upon the university vice-president, especially if she should win. One has only to look at the last executive of the Student Association to observe the dreadful consequences of "spreading oneself too thin."

Since one must assume that any serious candidate is in it to win, we will contemplate what would happen if Mrs. Snelling did win.

If she should continue in her present position, she would indeed be "spreading herself too thin." If she resigned as Vice-President, the UVM Administration would have the lengthy task of throwing out 399 applications (since there was only one "obvious choice" and producing, sending out, and processing 400 more applications. Imagine the time it would take finding another "obvious" choice! Meanwhile UVM is floundering along without a Vice-President!

Governor Salmon will probably win anyway, since all the good Republicans are running for the U.S. House. Mrs. Snelling would be much better cleaning out the watergate in Waterman. There's at least three inches of grundge on the floor.

The Philosophy Four and the Psychology Nine will hold a discourse on [illegible] Connotations of "Innies" and "Outsies"." After the speech, there will be a demonstration of belly-dancing, and navel oranges will be served as refreshments.

Litters To The Idiotor

From Dope Too LSD

To the Idiotor

In a recent series of articles on drug use, the Burlington Free Press revealed that marijuana "reproduces all the effects of LSD." This quote greatly disturbed us, as that information has been a closely guarded secret among students for years. Alas, the facts are now publicized and marijuana sales are exploding while the populace trembles in fear. To ease the fears of those parents who worried that their children may become addicted to marijuana trips, we would like to announce the formation of a group to be known as MAA, or Marijuana Addicts Anonymous. Our meetings will take place on the green next to University Heights. No names will be asked, no photographs will be taken. Counseling and discussion of painless withdrawal methods will take place with qualified ex-addicts who have been free of the terrible poison for at least a year.

We wish to point out that we are not affiliated with any current counseling program, such as the Next Thing, or any other organization. We are just two former marijuana addicts who wish to help others be cured of this terrible affliction. We trust the Clinic backs us in our efforts. Anyone wishing help, please be on the green near the Waterman Building any Wednesday between 3 and 4 a.m. The early hour is designed to preserve anonymity.

Sincerely,
Mary Jane Hempseed

Stroking And Streaking

To the Idiotor

In the past month the craze of streaking has invaded UVM in full and phallic force. Students have streaked through classes, castes, and other social strata, as well as through the streets altogether in the altogether. But in recent daze, I have noticed an added movement to the art of streaking. It is known throughout the Western world as stroking while streaking. While at first this defecation of a high American principle may seem despicable, I see now that this adds a new dimension to the streaker.

Now I ask, does streaking constitute a high crime or misdemeanor? Or Mr. Demeanor? If Chittenden Trust Co. can outlandishly yet tantalizingly offer "Banking a la Mode," is it not reasonable, even outrageous for UVM undergrads to strike for stroking streakers? Wouldn't Warren G. Harding have wanted it this way?

Viaduct? Well, why not a duck? Marx's eternal question remains unanswered, even today, in the future. Can the stroking streaker expect to rise, to get ahead, so to speak, in modern American society. On the other hand, is it worth 5 cents a bottle? I remind you of the words inscribed on the shrine of the unborn politician – we have nothing to fear but me. Remember, today's streakers are tomorrow's tax evaders and bright young men in government. The choice is in your hands, fellow students.

I leave you with one final thought, a placebo to soothe the rampant ideology of liberal American capitalist democratic self-interest: the Great Cookie lives on in all of us.

The Bag

by Peter Campbell, V.D.

Please stuff all enquiries down the front of my pants.

Question: I have the crabs. Just two questions: First, can the crabs be picked up from public toilet seats? I had thought they were obtained only by direct sexual contact, but a buddy of mine just told me different, and I haven't been getting any lately, anyway. Second what is the best cure for the crabs?

Answer: The species, Crabeus Ichus, otherwise known as "the crabs" is a parasite that is unique to, and has evolved with homo sapiens. How tragic when one thinks of these tenacious little critters clinging on desperately as man slides down the dark razor-blade of his sexual evolution. Hippocrates mentioned the crabs; and Confucius labeled them "the curse of civilization." So did our own Benjamin Franklin, a noted whore-monger in his time. In fact, the venerable (not to mention venereal) statesman spent a great deal of his active life looking for a quick and easy cure to his crabs. Remember that famous picture of Franklin flying his kite in the electrical story? What he really had tied the lower end of his kite string to is one of science's best kept secrets. The modern situation is no better. The crabs are still everywhere, especially in southern California.

Yes, you may get the crabs from toilet seats, and from hand towels, pantyhose, or from any other clothing that has been in contact with pubic hair. If you use public toilets, then might I suggest that you squat instead of sit, on the rim of the bowl, thus avoiding contact with those awful vermin. Admittedly, this new position will take some getting used to, but it is actually good for your thighs. One thing – watch out for the big splash.

As for a cure, there are some soaps commercially available, which are partially effective. However, a method that I have used with great success requires only some lighter fluid, some matches, and an ice-pick. First, drench one of your testicles (i.e. your balls) with the fluid. Then ignite the testicle. When the crabs flee the inferno to the other side, get them with the ice-pick. Repeat this process several times until you are completely crab-free. Good luck!

Question: My girlfriend and I have a great sex life. We consider ourselves to be modern, imaginative, and adventurous. Typically, the other night, we pretended that I was Adolph Hitler and she, Eva Braun (we are both History majors). As she jumped up and down on my erect penis with her ski-boots on and yodelled obscenities, I drooled over a picture of Shirley Temple. Then my girlfriend pretended that she was a panzer tank and I was a Jew lying in the street. This sexual escapade gave me the best feeling I have had since I fell out of a fifth story window two years ago. But since that night I have had a hard time passing water. The resulting pain keeps turning me on to further fantasies, which keep me from studying as much as I should. Any suggestions?

Answer: Hey, to have healthy normal sex fantasies is one thing, to be the passive end of a sado-masochistic relationship is another. However, if you feel that you must, I would at least advise you to find imaginative situations that are less physically abusive, such as pretending that you are the battleship Monitor and your "girl-fiend" is the rebels' ship throwing ping-pong balls at you. Never use anything more abusive than a garden hose on yourself, and if you want to avoid total self-destruction keep away from any scenarios that are twentieth century. But if you do wish to emulate famous sado-masochistic relationships in history, I suggest that you use less extreme models. For example, David and Julie Eisenhower, or Princess Anne and her horse would both be good for a start.

Question: I am a 18-year-old virgin, college student. What sex manuals do you recommend?

Answer: It seems that anyone who has ever shot their wad or gotten their M.D. recently feels obliged to show their expertise in a "how-to-do-it" book. The best manual is that book by Virginia Masters and Ben Johnson, the name of which escapes me at the moment. It is highly technical and boring as well. A more popular book is Everything You Knew About Sex, But Never Thought of Asking, by David Rueben, M.D. Unfortunately, the doctor is full of erotic ideology, sexual sophistry, and just plain priapic perfidy. (No, Doctor, your wife cannot successfully douche herself with coca-cola—why don't you try boiling water instead?) Despite the fact that this column is a direct rip-off from the doctor's book, I have no respect for the man. Moreover, his vitriolic and erroneous attacks on homosexuals leads me to suspect that the doctor is somewhat of a closet-queen himself. In short, I consider Rueben's book to have about as much value for sexual research as a rusty chastity belt. This sort of expert opinion never recognizes that each individual has their own particular hangups and kinks. Tell me, did you read a book when you learned to walk? Of course not! First you crawled, then you got up on your hind legs and took those first few unsteady steps. You learned to walk slowly, and you got better gradually, until you finally learned how to run. Now, if you are a normal human being, you can hop, skip, jump, do somersaults and who knows what else. It's the same with sexual intercourse: if you can walk, you can fuck. First you petted, eventually you will fuck, and then you will be off and running! It's as easy as cherry pie.

Fortunately, I was raised on a farm, and I had several animal husbandry courses at college, so I feel well-qualified to write my own book, tentatively titled, The Dog in God, The Eschatological Orgasm. I use an etymological approach starting with the discovery that the word "sex" is the phonetical reverse of the word "excess". From there, I go on to draw extensively from the invaluable research of Kahlil Gibran and D.H. Lawrence, and I decisively conclude that the verb "to fuck" originally had the same meaning as the verb "to pray." Somewhere, in our nebulous past, the two words were split into diametrical opposites. I think if we combine the two meanings into one again we will be back in the right rut, so to speak. Then one would pray whenever he or she wished to fuck, and whenever he or she wished to fuck, then they would pray. It is very simple, but

Due To Popularity Of Four-Day Week:

UVM ToGo On Three-Day Week This Fall

by Steve Lombard

In keeping with the current energy shortage (yawn), President Andrews announced to the Clinic that UVM will go on a three-day week this fall. Citing the great popularity of the four-day week among students and faculty, the increasing number of assignments handed in on time and the 90 percent drop in cutting classes, the Faculty Senate has decided to go one better. "If a four-day week works so well, mightn't a three-day one work even better?" asked F. S. spokesman "Jack" Daniels.

The Faculty Senate statement reads as follows: "The Faculty Senate agrees to the proposal by Dean M. T. Head that the University of Vermont go on a three-day academic week starting next November. The University will therefore be in session on Friday, Saturday and Sunday of each week. We believe that such a change will reduce even further the already declining week-end highway death toll. Moreover, our crystal ball expert declares that the news of the Arabs ending the oil embargo is all a hoax, and that they're trying to pull the camelhair over our eyes.

"In addition, the Old Farmer's Almanac declares that we're going to have a helluva winter, with enough snow to keep even Chesire Flats open until May. This is the only obvious way to save fuel. All buildings will be kept at an even 65 degrees, since Unscientific American declares that people who live in cold surroundings live longer. We won't have that rash of freshmen croaking on us that we have had in years past.

"The UVM administrative week will run Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, with alternate Tuesdays for those who go to church on Sunday. For those who may not work on Saturdays, the first Monday in each month with an "R" in it shall be substituted. In the matter of vacations, we have grouped together Easter, Veteran's Day, Columbus Day, Pray For Nixon To Be Impeached Day, Christmas, New Year's, Rosh Hashana, Yom Kippur, Chanukkah, and First Day of Trout Season all into one month, made up of the extra days in the months with 31 days in them, plus the extra day on Leap Year's. The extra month will be a vacation, so that there will now be 13 months to coincide with the 13 full moons of the year. In addition, the University of Vermont will no longer recognize Leap Year, or the 31st day of January, March, May, July, August, October or December."

When asked if there was any plan to keep the UVM Bookstore or the Bailey Library open during the academic week, Dean Head replied, "Not at this point in time; the students will be in class and will not have the time to use the facilities. As for the rest of the time, they won't be open then either. We have to save money somehow, you know."

Ms. C. Kent of This Week announced plans to change the name of that publication to the UVM Fortnight, in honor of the occasion. Executive Vice-president Christie, in a conspirational whisper, confided, "It's only a matter of a few years-now before the University will go to a zero-day week in 1978, if we continue our trend of decreasing the work week by one day each year. In 1978, all academic work will be done through correspondence courses; and in 1979 we will start again on a seven-day week." Despite the credibility of Christie's statement, the Clinic remains cynical.

Fired Philosophy Professors, Parenti Rehired By University

by Red Whiz

In a shocking reversal, President Edward Andrews announced last week that the three fired philosophy professors will be re-instated. The University will also rehire Professor Michael Parenti, fired in 1972 for political reasons. Parenti will receive full compensation and back-pay.

The decision came as a shock to many observers, who had claimed UVM discriminated against "young, liberal, outspoken" professors. Andrews only comment was, "After carefully considering the matter, the Board of Trustees, Vice President Rollins and I have decided to rehire them all. The pressures from the students and the public has been too great. If we wish to remain an open-minded institution dedicated to education and enlightenment, we must have a good representation of all sides."

The three philosophy professors, Alan Paskow, Gerald Anderson and Robert Rice were reached at the home of an associate, department chairperson, Steven Cahn. "This is an amazing occurrance," Anderson exclaimed. "We never expected the University to do anything like this. It's really quite unbelievable."

"It's a red-letter day for human rights," added Alan Paskow. "Personally, I think the administration was afraid of the power of the faculty union and is just trying to appease everyone."

"They're amazing," commented Robert Rice, "They yank us from one thing to another and expect us to be grateful. There's something behind this."

Michael Parenti was finally located in Cuba, harvesting sugar cane. Parenti felt the University's decision was a cover-up for something "larger and even more destructive." He stated, "I think there's a massive plot going on and Andrews and his gang are trying to get publicity. It may have something to do with the trustees, I don't know. When I get back to Vermont, I'll thoroughly investigate this. They may be sorry they rehired me."

All four professors plan to return to UVM in September. Parenti, Paskow and Anderson have dropped their lawsuits against the university, which amounted to well over $2 million.

Nixon Declares Holiday To Forget "Our Times"

Easter weekend will take on new meaning this year as President Nixon declares April 12 "National Nostalgia Day." In a rare appearance before the press last Monday, April 1, the President described the proposed occasion as an "unprecedented attempt to forget the sad chaos of our times and remember all those great patriots of our glorious, through recently aborted, heritage."

Following the announcement, the White House received calls from members of the "Right to Life" society who objected to the President's terminology in using the word "aborted." In an attempt to clear up the misunderstanding Press Secretary Ronald Zeigler appeared on national T.V. In what was described by the Washington Post as a "Freudian slip" Zeigler apologized to the "Life to Right" society. However, Press Secretary Gerald Warren appeared minutes later to right Ziegler's slip of the tongue.

"President Nixon urges all Americans of the silent majority to stick by their television sets on this holiday to witness "a grand celebration of good cheer and national spirit performed by members of the 'silenced majority.'"

In a rare case of national historic concern, the U.S. Supreme Court has released all those who are in jail or awaiting trial to perform in the ceremonies at the President's request. Funding of television time, which will be all day on CBS, NBC, and ABC, comes from a generous though unknown philanthropist.

The events of the day will be as follows. The ceremonies will open with a "Bob Haldeman Brunch" followed by a game of "Creep Frog" [illegible] Day" participants will enjoy a "Bug Hunt."

The President did not say if this is a reference to convicted Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt, or White House wiretapping devices. It was described as an Easter activity for the children, who will span the White House gardens in search of Japanese beetles. The child who finds a one-legged beetle will win a prize.

Senator Inouye of Hawaii is quoted as saying, "This is a subtle stab at me reminiscent of a statement made by John Wilson, attorney to Erlichman, during the Watergate hearings." Ziegler's reply to this accusation was "no comment."

The hunt will be followed by a "John Dean Treason Tea." A giant teakettle, courtesy of General Electric, will be set on the White House lawn in which an effigy of Dean composed entirely of sour grapes will be boiled. Former Attorney General John Mitchell will join Bob Haldeman and John Erlichman in donning American Indian costumes and performing a tribal dance around the kettle. This is supposed to revive the flavor of America's ancient past.

Simultaneously with this [illegible] run up and down the 90 flights of the Washington monument 20 times. The significance of this is unknown. Jack Anderson was quoted as wondering if "Krogh is trying to outlast the handicapped Veterans of Vietnam who protested administration policies at the monument last week."

Next on the agenda of festivities is a demonstration by Rose Mary Woods, the President's personal secretary. Ms. Woods will enact an undescribed performance to illustrate how her foot and leg happened to stray onto the fatal button of her recording machine. The television networks will have a station break at this time. A very select audience has been

S.A. Senate Restores KakeWalk, Pandemonium Erupts During Meeting

[illegible] the floor of the S.A. Senate as a division of the house vote restored Kake Walk on the UVM campus.

Following what appeared to be a routine, humdrum Senate meeting, students were electrified to hear a motion to bring back Kake Walk. Heads turned to behold the speaker, but he or she was surrounded by a protecting crowd of constituents and other senators. The distinguishing senate wristband, adopted last week, could be seen, however, so the chairperson was forced to let the motion stand.

A heated discussion ensued at once, with Senator Blee D'ing Hart, an exchange student from Outer Penumbra, representing Ira Allen Chapel, voicing an objection to consideration. [illegible] immediately confronted with a large pastrami sandwich and ordered to "stuff it." Senator Hart's weakness for pastrami is well known, since an attack of the munchies has often sent him scurrying to the Den at the time of many a crucial vote.

The discussion stopped as suddenly as it began, and for a few tense seconds nothing could be heard but gobbling noises from the general direction of Senator Hart.

Suddenly, to the surprise of everyone, Senator Elroy P. Mundy, one of UVM's Black students, took the floor and began arguing in favor of the bill.

"We can make Kake Walk so that it will not offend anyone!" he cried. "For five years UVM has been a suitcase campus in the [illegible] very exciting to look forward to, that's what! We can make Kake Walk into what it's supposed to be — three days of uninhibited excitement!" He paused for breath. Several bored-looking Senators had brightened immediately. "Look at Dartmouth's Winter Carnival!" someone shouted. "It makes ours look sick!"

"Order, order," cried the chairperson, gasping for breath. "One at a time, please."

Another senator stood up and glared indignantly at the speaker. "You're denying your race," she screamed. "You're no better than James Buckley!"

Senator Mundy, who is known for his mild temper, was with difficulty restrained by colleagues from giving [illegible] mouth.

"You are splitting hairs with machetes," he retorted. Senator Wize immediately offered a friendly amendment that each Kake Walk conclude with the Walkers heaving brick-shaped snowballs during the awards ceremonies. "It adds a healthy theme of rebellion," he noted. The amendment was accepted and another added to suspend the rules to vote on the measure.

Senator Mizz immediately started a filibuster; pages were sent out to round up recalcitrant Senators to assure a quorum, and Clinic reporter Barbara Rankel was seen dashing out of the room screaming "Stop the presses! Stop the presses!"

And when it was all over, the division of the house vote had restored Kake Walk, by a bare two-thirds majority. The Secretary of Records announced that there were no abstention votes and (wonder of wonders) no absent senators. Senators Mizz and Hart began to peruse the rule books, and were last seen shaking their heads in disbelief.

In other business, the Senate voted not to recognize the Symbionese Liberation Army, after a member of the Student Radical Union said it would be a duplication of effort. A motion to install pay toilets in the downstairs restrooms was summarily dismissed as a "capitalist plot."

The recognition of the Vermin Clinic, a student-sponsored ASPCA, was hailed as a fine place to keep stray dogs found in the Den. One part of the Clinic is run by the Zoology department: it raises mice specially trained to do delicate wiring and other electronics work. A rumour that the mice were known to run along dormitory halls and sniff out heroin was dismissed as "wishful thinking, somebody's pipe dream."

Following adjournment, the senate went en masse to Joe Berry's, where next week's meeting will be held.

Shoeboxes Torched In Protest Of Living Conditions

by Steve Lombard

FLASH! A raging four-alarm fire has spread through Chittenden, Buckham and Wills Halls and at press time was still not under control. Volunteers from UVM Rescue and ROTC fought the blaze for a good ten minutes before the Burlington Fire Department got their trucks in gear.

"The fire is definitely arson," understated Fire Chief "Smokey" Baher. Further reports indicate that the blaze was touched off by residents of the three dorms, who have been crabbing all semester about the lousy living conditions.

"We used to line up cockroaches and race them," remarked Clovis Walnut, a resident of fifth floor Buckham. "It was awful." Another less sporting student said it was only because Clovis' cockroaches never won.

"We've been promised furniture," charged another student, Reginald Snuff, "and they failed to inform us that it self-destructs in one week!"

"We have torched the Shoeboxes because they are an affront to our sensibilities," cried radical Mark Rudder. "Even pup tents would be better than this."

One student told a Clinic reporter that the fire was started by diverting the noxious fumes of the sewer pipes near Cook building into the CBW complex. The volatile fumes did not take long to ignite. Further questioning elicited the response that a trained sewer rat was involved in the plot.

"I've been warning the professors in Cook about the sewer pipes all term," a chemistry student complained. "Every time I go by them I just about pass out. See what happens when you don't listen?" she screamed.

A spokesman for UVM Project Obstruction said they will begin work tomorrow on a multi-billion dollar condominium, providing of course that Chittenden, Buckham, and Wills are a total loss.

"We've been given the go-ahead on this project four months ago," stated Clark Grapple, president of the firm. "We were told to wait until some natural disaster happened which would provide the room."

A malicious rumour that Project Obstruction bribed the students to set the blaze arose yesterday afternoon when it was learned that the first occupants of the condominium would be the Shoeboxers themselves. However, Grapple declares that the condominium will not be ready until the fall of 1977, and until then, all residents of Chittenden, Buckham and Wills involved in setting the fire will be required to live in pup tents. Innocent students will move into the condominium next fall, as it is guaranteed to have four walls and a roof by then.

Asked what the students would do for furniture, Grapple barked, "They can rip it out of the Living/Loving Center."

A Chittenden County spokesman said that Judge Abbott has set the trial of every resident of Chittenden, Buckham and Wills for first-degree arson for Friday, April 13 at 4 p.m.

Watergate in Waterman: Trustees, Corporations: $12 Million Conflict Of Interest

by John Franco

The University of Vermont Board of Trustees had in Fiscal Year 1973 a $12,380,000 conflict of interest. The figure involves Trustees Howard Allen, Luther Hackett, Thomas Candon, Daniel Burke, George Little (who was until February of this year a trustee) and UVM President Edward Andrews. The principals of the conflict of interest include:

–$4,888,000 deposited, on an annual basis, with the Chittenden Trust Company as Certificates of Deposit

–A $100,000 balance in UVM's Chittenden payroll account for nine months

–$6,684,124 deposited on an annual basis in the Howard bank as Certificates of Deposit

–A $900,000 balance in UVM's Howard checking account for the month of March 1973.

–A loss of at least $20,600 in interest to these two banks, and possibly as much as $60,000

–$571,000 which these two banks made in revenue from these deposits and balances

–UVM stockholdings worth $408,399 in corporations of which UVM Trustees were directors and stockholders

–UVM stockholdings worth $250,290 in corporations of which the business associates of UVM Trustees were directors.

The bulk of the conflict of interest money involved UVM's banking. The University, by depositing revenues in these banks before the expenditure of them was required, supplied these banks on an annual basis over $11 million of capital for them to use as investment. The University also supplied these banks with investment capital in the form of inordinately high account balances; a $100,000 balance in UVM's Chittenden payroll account; and $900,00 in the month of March 1973 in UVM's Howard Bank checking account.

The full picture of the University's check balances for the entire year was not available at this writing. If these banks had loaned this money out on car loans, they would have taken in over $500 thousand in revenue. The University also, by receiving rates on its Deposit Certificates in the last quarter of Fiscal Year 1973 which were lower than the prevailing rates, and by not investing its checking account balances, lost at least $20,600 in interest to these two banks.

The conflict of interest lies basically in these two areas. The trustees as directors of these banks and corporations, have as directors, a responsibility to the profitability of the companies & a personal stake as stockholders in those companies, in its profitability, and therefore interest in managing UVM funds for the aggrandizement of both their corporations and themselves.

UVM trustees Allen and Little, plus President Andrews, together held in March 1973 $205,870 worth of stock in the Chittenden Trust Company. All three were, and are, directors of the Chittenden. Among the other beneficiaries of UVM's business with the Chittenden were the newly appointed UVM Vice President of Development Barbara Snelling, a director of the Chittenden, and who held $2,940 worth of Chittenden stock in '73; and L. Douglas Meredith, Chairman of the Central Vermont Public Service Corporation, a Chittenden director, and holder of $42,280 worth of Chittenden stock. Meredith sits on the CVPSCO board with UVM Trustee Allen Eaton.

UVM did a land office business with the Howard BAnk while at the same time UVM Trustee Fred Hackett, a Howard director, held $20,900 worth of stock in the Howard. Among the other beneficiaries of UVM's Howard Bank business were former UVM President Lyman Rowell, a Howard director and holder of $6,930 of Howard stock; a former UVM trustee Lawrence Marvin, a Howard director and holder of $364,000 worth of Howard stock; and I. Munn Boardman, Howard director and holder of $62,000 worth of Howard stock. Boardman sits with UVM trustee Robert Boardman as a co-officer of Hickock and Boardman Insurance and Real Estate of Burlington. UVM trustee Thomas Candon is also with the Howard, a member of its Rutland Advisory Board.

Proposed Tunnel Questioned By University Members

by Peter MacAusland

Last week, the proposed pedestrian tunnel was passed by the Vermont Legislature, but members of the university have wondered in the past, and are still questioning if the tunnel is the proper solution.

In October, the Financial Policy Committee of the Faculty Senate seriously questioned if the proposed pedestrian tunnel would solve the problem of pedestrian crossings.

At the Oct. 11 meeting, Professor Lewis pointed out that their committee, whose function it is to assist in formulation of the university budget, had never been consulted previously on the underpass. Lewis thought that the underpass would not solve the problem and it is not worthwhile. He suggested that the committee oppose the project and have it removed from the request to the legislature.

At the next meeting, Vice-President Patterson appeared and was alarmed at the committee's proposed actions. Dr. Patterson remarked that the Living/Learning Center's opening would be conditional with the provision of two crossings with one as an underpass. Patterson declared that the underpass would be worthwhile even if on-grade pedestrian crossings were reduced only 30 percent to 40 percent. Professor Sinclair contended that students walk the shortest route and would probably be forced into the tunnel. After more discussion, Patterson urged the committee against making recommendations to oppose

Faculty Union Denied Space In This Week For Commentary

by Bruce Maddern

In the continuing conflict between the new Faculty Union and the administration, the union has been denied the use of This Week to publish commentary, letters or announcement according to Justin Joffe president of the UVM union.

The administration claims justification for the violation of the Bill of Rights by a National Labor Board byline which reads "It shall be unfair labor practice for an employer to dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization."

According to Joffe, the administration is using the letter of the law to interfere with the spirit of the law.

The administration claims that publication of pro-union literature is a violation of this, yet in the March 15 issue, Dr. Patterson published a short commentary on "union cards." In it he asks "employees to carefully study the differences between unions before signing up."

Dennis Morrisseau, candidate for Congress, in a letter to Andrews, also questioned the argument the administration utilized in ratifying the policy.

According to Joffe, the administration claims they support a Faculty Union yet their actions indicate the exact opposite. Among the actions Joffe cited were that the administration has refused mail rights to the union. However the Union of Non-Academic Employees has mailing rights. The faculty union can't use UVM as a mailing address. The union can't meet on campus.

The union was willing to pay the $15 fee for use of university area by off-campus organizations but the administration refuses.

–The union can't reply to Dr. Patterson's statement even though there are inaccuracies in his commentary.

According to Joffe, the university lawyer, Matt Katz, has told This Week it can't print commentary or letters to the editor for the union. In every This Week a box is printed stating "Comment, news...open to faculty, staff and students" and "Commentary & Opinion is strictly the commentary and opinion of the identified source and not of the University of Vermont and This Week." Joffee said if an anti-union letter was to be written it could be written according to his sources.

The union is not allowed to have union dues deducted from their paychecks. Other deductions for other non-profit organizations are allowed. Also the University has retained a labor law specialist from Boston to "help us understand the laws."

In this year's session of the legislature, an amendment was asked to be added to the current legislation covering collective bargaining rights for state employees. Andrews who testified against the amendment on H539 claimed that UVM was not a state university and therefore the faculty would not be a part of the State Labor Relations Board. Over $11 million of UVM's budget is from a state appropriation and the majority of the Board of Trustees at UVM are appointed by the legislature.

All the state college faculty unions are part of the state board. Andrews suggested that UVM apply to the National Labor Board although their recommendation to UVM was that it is a state labor board affair. The end result is UVM's chapter of the AFT is denied collective bargaining rights till next session of the legislature.

Joffe said that UVM has only to benefit from a union. Morale among faculty would increase and the faculty would have a unified voice in areas such as salary, and hiring and firing. Joffe said the last reason for a union was economic. He also said the administration gets away with what they want. Many faculty and students in many areas are shunted around. He would like to see the faculty independent of overriding powers such as voting members on the Board of Trustees.

International Jazz Artist Ted Curson and his quartet will be appearing at the Ira Allen Chapel on the University of Vermont campus, Sunday evening, April 14, at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are priced at $2 each with UVM Student I.D., $2.50 General admission, and can be purchased at the University Store; Bailey's Music Rooms on Church Street, Burlington; and at the door at the Ira Allen Chapel. Previous to the concert, Ted Curson and the quartet will hold a jazz workshop at the Living and Learning Center in the Commons Building, Upstairs Room, at 2 p.m. The workshop will be free of charge.

Women Submit Proposals On Hiring Of Female Faculty

by Melanie Choukas

President Andrews has been given a list of recommendations drawn up by university women regarding the hiring of more women faculty. The recommendations are the result of a one-day retreat funded by the Danforth Foundation. At the retreat, 45 representative women, faculty and students from the College of Arts and Sciences discussed general academic problems encountered by women at this University.

The statistics attached to the recommendations are shocking. In the entire College of Arts and Sciences, there are only eight tenured women faculty members. Out of a total of 283 faculty in this college there are 32 full time women faculty.

Women make up 50 per cent of the undergraduate student body. However, only 29 per cent of the women B.A. holders go on to graduate school as compared with 44 per cent of men.

While the reasons for this are many the proposal now on Andrews' desk cites the Carnegie Commissions' recommendations that "unless women students see women in all academic departments, they will not tend to aspire to such careers themselves."

The list of recommendations also includes a wide range of suggestions to improve life on this campus for all involved women.

Present university policy does not allow students not dependent on their parents to receive scholarship aid. Since this does not make sense, Arts College women request an inquiry into the policy which discriminates against independent women and men.

Representative Kunin Comments On State Legislature's Activities

by Barbara Frankel

Madeleine Kunin, representative of District 1-8, which includes parts of Redstone Campus, recently commented on several bills which have appeared before the state legislature.

Ms. Kunin feels that "a lot of important decisions are made in the legislature. It is necessary that students follow at least some issues. The state and local levels are getting increasingly more important."

One bill she cited as important to students is JRH 13, recently passed, which set up student internships in the state legislature. The bill was first introduced in 1973 and, at that time, received some anti-student reaction from the legislators. Their attitudes, according to Ms. Kunin, have changed, possibly because "radical student activism has died down." She feels this bill will be helpful to both students and the legislators since it will encourage more young people to get involved in politics.

Madeleine Kunin has been personally involved with several bills, including a bill which forced all lobby and interest groups to declare their supporters and the sources of their funding. This bill, along with a bill to publicize campaign financing, did not pass the legislature.

She has supported the Transportation Bill which asks for a ten-year comprehensive bill to act as an overview of all kinds of transportation. This according to Ms. Kunin, will "not leave transportation exclusively in the hands of the highway department, but will give it a broader view. It is the first step in a reshifting of emphasis from highways to other areas."

Ms. Kunin mentioned several bills which had passed in the legislature, which she supported. Among them were a bill of rights for trailer owners, and an environmental bill which hopefully will stop land auctions by requiring a permit for the sale of five lots of land. She was disappointed when Act 250, the land-use plan got "bogged down in the legislature." Commented Madeleine Kunin: "Some people are afraid that you can't do what you want with your own land. Hopefully, the bill will be passed by next year."

She also mentioned a few bills of interest to UVM students. The legislature passed an election law stating that the checklist to register to vote is now 24 days before

HAS THE WAR ENDED?

For many American students, the Battle of Southeast Asia has ended, but the battle within the hearts of her people—the pains of sickness, hunger, fear and death rage on with horrendous force.

Americans view the signs of Southeast Asia as symptomatic of the global condition.

American missioners labor through subhuman conditions around the globe. We perpetuate the battle—to liberate the struggling masses from the causes of wars.

NO MORE WAR! WAR NEVER AGAIN! Let us work for that goal by defeating the structures that oppress and exploit mankind.

L-L German House

Planning to study German? Why not "live and learn" German in the Living-Learning Center German House? The German House program, which is to be launched in the fall semester, will consist of an accelerated language course and the opportunity for students to live together in the Center for conversational practice.

The accelerated language course, the academic side of the program, will cover in one semester the work normally done in two regular terms. The accelerated elementary course will be offered in the fall semester, followed by the accelerated intermediate course in the spring. Students participating in the program will have ten hours of instruction per week during the first semester for eight credits, and six hours during the second for six credits; in other words, they will do "double time." A German-speaking advisor will live in the House to initiate conversational practice and otherwise coordinate activities aimed at fostering interest in Germany, her people and culture.

The program is open to all men and women who have had no previous college-level German. It should be particularly useful for prospective German majors, as well for those who must fulfill language requirements in other departments. It will also be excellent preparation for students who might wish to spend their junior year in Salzburg, Austria. (The Junior-Year-in-Salzburg program is open to students in all disciplines, incidentally, not just to German majors.)

A limited number of spaces in the German House will be available to non-program students who are continuing their study of German and would welcome the opportunity to practice their spoken German.

Students interested in the German House should contact Prof. Veronica Richel, Waterman 416, ext. 3430, by April 17.

VPIRG Transportation Projects

by Leo Bisson

Most of you probably think Vermont's legislature did nothing this year. You're almost right. Only almost thanks to H-469– Rep. Madeline Kunin's transportation bill, H-469 was top priority in transportation legislation this session. VPIRG lobbyists and the Citizens Lobby spent a good deal of time supporting the bill which sets up a Transportation Advisory Board. This board will study all facets of Vermont's transportation picture, specifically exploring 1. ways of funding and initiating public transportation programs; 2. viability of the Highway Trust Fund; 3. alternatives to any more interstate type highways; 4. recommendation of a 10 year transportation plan replacing and incorporating the present system of highway construction plans.

VPIRG's present and planned transportation research projects will enable citizens to have significant input to the board's considerations this summer and fall. Most important are studies of the highway planning process (via studies of specific highway construction proposals); making a transportation slide show; studying bus and rail funding and potentials; and evaluating local transportation planning.

As a basis for these projects VPIRG is conducting a series of attitude surveys to determine public opinion on transportation issues. One of Chittenden County residents will soon be done. If you are interested in the survey or any of the other projects contact Connie Wilson at Robinson (656-3086) or Leo Bisson at the VPIRG office (863-3435).

Warnke Will Lecture On Defense

A former official in the U.S. Department of Defense, Paul C. Warnke, will outline "A New Defense Policy for America" Thursday (April 11) at the University of Vermont.

Warnke was Assistant Secretary of Defense in the administration of President Lyndon B. Johnson, and his role in that Department was featured in "Limits of Intervention," a recent book by Townsend Hoopes.

He is widely regarded as a spokesman for the Democratic Party on defense matters.

He will speak at 8 p.m. in Ira Allen Chapel at the University on the Florence Davis Dean Lecture Series sponsored by the department of political science.

His talk will be free and open to the public.

Warnke studied at Yale and Columbia, and served with the U.S. Coast Guard, before opening a law practice. He was a general counsel to the Department of Defense 1966–67 and was Assistant Secretary for international security affairs 1967–69. He presently has a prestigious law practice in Washington, D.C.

In addition to his membership and offices in professional legal associations he is a director of the Council on Foreign Relations, former chairman of the Arms Control and Defense Policy Committee of the Democratic Policy Council, and a member of the Washington Institute of Foreign Affairs and the Council on Foreign Relations.

Underpass Questioned

the underpass project.

The Physical Planning Committee of the Faculty Senate also held discussion on the underpass project. According to Craig Lowe, one of the student representatives, the committee seemed to answer questions pertaining to the underpass with generalizations. The only consistent reply Lowe received was that the underpass was to be because of a stipulation in the Living/Learning Center's contract. Lowe had the general impression that the committee didn't want to discuss the project in detail, implying it was already out of their hands. Lowe was frustrated by this committee's answers concerning the underpass project.

Bill Smith, a junior working out of the graduate school of Resource Economics and under landscape architect, Paul Flynn believes the long-term solution is a tunnel, not for pedestrians, but for the vehicular traffic. Smith states that auto traffic is the problem and not the pedestrians. This solution would combine two main areas of the campus and eliminate the traffic barrier that now divides the campus. Smith, who is presently writing up and working with the planning commission in the town of Chittenden, Vermont, suggested that the funds allocated for the pedestrian tunnel ought to be used for technical research and consulting in deriving this long term solution. This solution would be realized in a yearly-staged program.

Women's Recommendations...

The number of regular established catalog courses in Women's Studies now numbers two. The proposal recommends an increase in these to include all academic departments where such courses are relevant.

The proposal urges the establishment of a child care center at UVM as well as the women's center that the UVM Women's Caucus is trying to establish. Research into both of these proposals is being done by women who were at the retreat and members of the Women's Caucus.

great deal during the three-week session," added the coach. And much work needs to be done. The entire offensive line must be replaced, along with a wide receiver to take over for departed (via graduation) All-Yankee Conference performer, Tony Jones. "We'll have a revamped offense by the time this fall rolls around," said Falivene. The defense is experienced, with 12 lettermen back, led by defensive ends George Brunst and Mike Johns; tackle Fred Fournier and a veteran linebacking corps and secondary.

...The alumni team is coached by former standout flanker, Dick Hebert ('67), now the head football coach at BFA in St. Albans. Organizing the list of returning lettermen is former lineman, Denis Blanch ('65). Blanck urges all football lettermen who want to play in the game to contact him at his office in Burlington (125 S. Winooski Ave.) or call him at 863–4577. "Right now, we have 15 seniors from last year's team ready to go and several alumni such as Hebert; former All-American running back, Bob Mitchell ('68); quarterback Scott Fitz ('66) and quarterback safety Jim Brennan ('65)," said Blanck. The game, the fourth annual contest, has been interesting the last three years, with the varsity prevailing by close margins. More information (with an expanded list of alumni and ticket information) will follow in the next few weeks.

election day. A capital construction bill was passed, which supports the projected underpass on Main Street. The Landlord - Tenant Act which would have further explained the rights and duties of both landlords and tenants was defeated. The bill to decriminalize marijuana was stalled in committee. Ms. Kunin commented on that, "People are reluctant to take a stand during an election year on something like this...There's a great law and order atmosphere."

Madeleine Kunin understands that students feel the legislature is not effective. She admits that in a lot of cases, this is true. Yet she would like to see more students get involved in Vermont politics so that there are future generations to "try to get things accomplished."

Support The Faculty Union

Recent action by the administration strongly contradicts their contention that they are in favor of a union. The denial of the right of free speech is the most damaging reason to disprove their "approval" of the faculty union.

The denial of mailing rights and a meeting place, and the retention of a labor lawyer all support their blanket disapproval of a union. The administration has gone so far as to say that UVM is not a state university and therefore contend that the union is not entitled to collective bargain rights given to state and public employees.

They retain overriding control over the Faculty Senate and the Student Association, as well as limiting the rights of students and faculty. President Andrews said students were most important in granting tenure, yet the administration didn't listen to organized student opinion. These actions only support the assertion that the university is only acting in their own best interests.

It is about time faculty and students stood up and opposed university policy. It's about time faculty and students had some control over decision-making. Other universities have voting student and faculty members on the Board of Trustees. We don't expect miracles, but maybe a Faculty Union or a Student Union could start the climb toward greater control in decision-making. Students should support the Faculty Union's efforts to establish a coalition.

Religion For Sale

by Jeff Rybeck

Nature's call had the man struggling to endure the hemorrhoidal explosion when the gold knocker clanged against the front door. "Go away," he thought, "let me suffer in peace." But the rappings were insistent. So he pulled up his pants disregarding the beads of irate perspiration meandering about the lines of his fatigued face and bowlleggedly shuffled to the front door. "Yes," he said gently. "Hello," said a young boy, perhaps fourteen, smartly dressed in a dark blue suits, white shirt, and dark tie. "I represent the local Jehovah's Witnesses and wondered if I might spend a few minutes with you. Believe me when I say they will be enlightening moments."

The man stared at the boy masked behind thick black glasses, unable to speak for the area of his brain which deciphered pain was muddled in the mess of deciding whether the throbbing soreness stabbing at the depths of his rump or the vicious hate he felt for religious peddlers would breach the threshold of his endurance and allow him a moment of temporary insanity. "Son," he said, "do you have any idea how many moments your people have spent with me? Why I remember when I was your age and home alone; a group of your colleagues spent an hour with me trying to sell me that thriller, "The Watch Tower." Well I told 'em I only had 20 cents, and you know what, the scoundrels took it. Anyway, for the last time, I am disenchanted with you people distributing your lurid literature. I am sick and tired of you black coated freaks insulting my intelligence by pointing out passages in the Bible. Get the picture, son?"

The boy took the lambasting with a smile, as if it were ennobling, or part of the burden all believers must suffer and said, "Let me leave you with this piece of literature."

"Son-of-a-bitch," the man retorted, "you ever hear of piles, kid?" The boy shrugged. "When you get a size eleven lodged some place, a miracle happens, you start bleeding feces, hallelujah, and the world starts tumblin' down brimstone and hell fire. And no living creature can withstand that onslaught, dig kid?" "Oh, yes sir," he answered, "have a nice day," and he was on his way.

His natural inclinations subdued, the man hopped into his car and drove off to pick up the Sunday paper. It was a busy morning, traffic bumper to bumper. In front of his car was a 1973 Buick smeared with stickers: "Jesus Saves," "God Loves Richard Nixon," "Jesus Forgives." "Fascists," whispered the man as his mind drifted off to the letters he had received from his brother concerning the Southern Baptists continuous badgering for donations. "Rich get richer," he thought, "the sheep all swallow those gimmicks."

The traffic was picking up speed when all of a sudden a siren began screaming forcing everyone but the man to stop. And before he awoke from his ethereal daze his bumper had smashed into the rear of the Buick slightly damaging one of the religious stickers. The lady in the Buick got out of her car and slammed the door. "Okay buddy, why don't you watch where you're going." "Jesus saves," said the man. "Sure," said the lady, "who's your insurance agent?" "Look lady, you can hardly see the bump, what't the beef? Besides, Jesus forgives. Aren't you the people who jump around and bother people about Christian teachings?" "Yes," said the lady, "and if you had a clear conscience this wouldn't have happened."

"You're all alike," said the man, "you and Billy Graham. Do you realize that he has more money than most of us will ever see? And how come he backs killings and wars and Nixon? It's baffling, lady. You don't know what in hell I'm talking about, do ya' lady?" "Don't put words in my mouth, buddy," she said, "the work of the Lord requires money to support those who bring the word to the world." "Maybe so, lady, but I seem to remember Christ becoming mighty ticked off at those Pharisees who prayed in the middle of the road. In fact, I think he said all that praying should be done private, behind locked doors. By the way lady, you understand the word, essence." The lady stared at the man, perplexed, for the conversation was ridiculous. Then she said, "The essence is the cost of a bumper."

The man reached for his wallet and, as if it were a physical extension of his body, he felt a twinge as his hemorrhoids warned of some surreptitious anathema creeping all about him.

Door Stickers

To the Editor:

I rejoice because I have finally obtained my tuition's worth. You all know what I'm talking about; those stickers on the doors; placed centrally and visable; make an excellent trade; though morally I suppose that this must be further discussed. The temptation to rip one-off is so great, in my soul, that I just could not resist. Yet, I hate the idea of anyone actully spending money, to have the warning posted, in the hopes that it would stay put. A hope in vain, without a train-of-thought and without a brain, proves that none will ever remain. Still, it was a nice touch. How much did it cost?

L/L Directors

To the Editor:

I would like to comment on some of the subjects of controversy in Cynthia Murphy's letter which appeared in your publication on March 21, 1974.

First she accuses the directors of the Living/Learning Center of expecting people to live in a suite furnished with one settee, one cube table, one directors chair, etc. I am quite certain that Miss Murphy never lived in any of the older dorms on campus for she doesn't seem to realize that all this is furnished in addition to all the furniture normally provided in any other dorm.

Secondly, in response to her question on how all the residents of her suite could be expected to sit in the living-room furniture provided, I would doubt very much if all of them were in the living-room at once. However, if they are, they could just as well bring some of their desk chairs out to the living-room with them, as we do in our suite.

Thirdly, it appears that Miss Murphy never lived in a new building before, as one can almost always expect problems with wiring, plumbing, doors, etc.

I am not saying that everything around here is run as it could best be, but simply that there are two sides to every story.

I will agree with Miss Murphy that the plants in the dining hall were a poor choice, and are not much benefit to anyone in their condition. It would have been much more sensible to use native plants adapted to this area, and climate and even to have the students pick them out or grow them.

In conclusion, I would say that if Miss Murphy would think of all she has gained by living here instead of what she has lacked, she would be happy to live here again. In fact, I would not be surprised even after reading her letter if she was at the head of the list to come back next year!

ROTC Credit

To the Editor:

There will never be peace so long as militaries exist on this planet. We can no longer permit ourselves to be fooled by the false sense of justice and freedom forwarded by Haponski and the article by Tom McCormick.

1) The refusal of credit was not done with faddish anti-militarism. I was here at the time as were many others who are still here. For the most part the action was taken with the conviction that justice and freedom demand peace, not credit. Have we forgotten so soon that a number of professors are no longer here because of their philosophic, social, and political convictions? Do we actually believe that streaking has replaced Viet Nam? Streaking has replaced nothing. It was here during the height of the anti-war movement, Viet Nam is here as well. What has changed is media publicity and some of us don't seem to realize how much influence and perhaps control the media can implement on us.

2) ROTC is not only worthless for academic credit but as a piece of military it is also worthless as an existence. If one thinks that the College of Arts and Sciences is less than just with its acceptance of other courses, I agree. It is another part of lives to be changed if we continue to dare to use the word "justice."

3) It is silly to question whether the army "has too much control over the program" when it is clear that the Pentagon has too much control over this nation and other areas of the world. I assure you that Thomas Moores is no illusion and neither are the military and intelligence forces that he and his subordinates control. If we are to fully realize what Nixonian logic means and implies we are also to realize that it largely depends on a strong military spirit. Our language, beliefs, and life-styles are imbued with this spirit. We can not allow it to continue and live in peace. One precludes the other. Remember, when it comes down to its essence, the military's basic training is to learn the "art" of killing. Death, although it touches all of us, is not a commodity which is to be dealt out like Tarot cards.

If ROTC is granted credit it will mean that strength has been added to the military. Those who would support such action are complicit with the decisions and actions of the Pentagon. Violence is obviously no answer to our problems. There is an opportunity here to struggle for a change without using it. Let's continue the struggle for peace with a sense of vision, patience and wisdom.

Let's refuse to be sucked in, sponged up, and then spit out like disease-ridden mucus by the military spirit. Viet Nam, Cambodia, Laos, Thailand, the Philippines, Angola, Mozambique, mid-East, Northern Ireland, South Africa, Chile, Korea, Spain, Russia, Czekoslavakia, the United States of America. There are more.

Fleming Museum

To the Editor:

I would like to call to your attention several art works which are now on exhibit at the Fleming Museum. Such impressive artists as Pablo Picasso, Jacques-Villion, Duchamp, Max Beckman, and Jean Arp are represented. These works are owned by the museum and have received no attention by the Cynic. I would like to see some space devoted to this exhibit because I am troubled by the extremely poor attendance there. Perhaps if the Cynic gave the museum more attention, this could possibly increase interest and thereby attendance and hopefully more grants.

The museum recently received a $10,000 matching grant which requires it to purchase works by living American artists. This amount of money is by no means sufficient to purchase a large number of well-known works. $10,000 is a drop in the bucket for famous works. However, I think the museum could purchase works which would generate excitement and increase interest on this apathetic campus. Perhaps colorful, contemporary works that do not necessarily have to be by famous artists could do this.

In New York City, thousands of people are attracted to the Metropolitan and Museum of Modern Art just because it is interesting. Background in art history is not necessarily needed to enjoy art. I recently saw ten year old boys, sitting wide-eyed in front of surrealist works by Dali, in ecstasy.

The museum can and should be a place of interest at the University. Right now, many students don't know where it is. This should be rectified hopefully by next fall if the museum is granted more publicity by the Cynic and new, exciting works are purchased.

Sincerely,
Mark Serafhick

The Underpass

To the Editor:

In reference to your editorial of 4 April 1974, I must apologize for having a self-righteous concern for the safety of the students crossing against Main-Williston traffic. In my defense and to be impersonal however, my concern is only statistical—student injuries/1000 students/unit time. $.5 million is a lot of money—more than I or President Andrews (or both of us combined) make in a year. And as you so properly point out it is all so unnecessary. If only the students would obey the light-signal system that is there now. But they don't—so foolishly or not I'm willing to donate my part of the $.5 million to the underpass construction.

From TBR

To the Editor:

Not since the great 110-day New York newspaper strike has such a blow been dealt to American journalism as the non-publication of last week's Bar Review. Several Bar Review readers lamented our absence from these pages in the last issue. So did we. Our hospitalized reviewer found TBR absent from the Cynic and immediately consumed thrice the recommended dosage of pain killers. As far as this column is concerned, the Cynic might as well have gone in and beat-up the hospitalized reviewer sometime in the hours after surgery. If we don't publish, we perish.

Several alternatives have been considered. The Bar Review contemplated parodying last week's Vermin Clinic. TBR thought about reviewing the Vermont Cynic as entertainment. Also considered was (and is) passing the hat around to collect enough to purchase a mimeo machine to facilitate separate publication of the Bar Review.

Despite consideration of alternatives, the Bar Review wishes to assure its readership that it will assiduously endeavor to insure the prevention of a second repetition of this kind. (It has happened once previously this semester.) We're not being sat on again.

The Cynic welcomes letters and columns from students, faculty, or any other readers. Materials for publication must be signed, but names will be withheld upon request.

"Why Wasson ?"

To the Editor:

As one who has authored many articles regarding the infirmary, I would like to comment on Tom McCormick's latest effort to do the same. First, I would suggest that Tom re-read his article, as it's very hard to understand just what his point is. I really don't see how the infirmary compares to a baby with a loaded gun pointed at its head, nor how it tries to act as a surrogate parent. In fact, so many analogies are used that I really start to lose faith in that particular rhetorical technique. But if the infirmary is like an IBM assembly to Tom, then I guess to each his own.

I would seriously question whether Mr. McCormick has ever had a full tour of the Wasson facilities. Surely in order to ask "Why Wasson" one has to find out what Wasson is. Just in case this necessary research hasn't been done, let me lay some cold facts on those who would blame the staff for the type of service rendered.

Fact: The reason the present infirmary is inadequate is not because of the doctors and nurses, but because of the ridiculously small quarters in which they must work. Right now the staff may see up to 200 students per day. Is it any wonder why they will often do their best to get you out of the doctor's office quickly? Also try to remember than many students come to the infirmary for colds they could treat themselves, which makes the lines longer. So it's the building at fault. In saying that the infirmary is foolish to add services, Mr. McCormick gives the impression that he feels the number of services should be cut until they fit the building. I don't share this view, and I doubt many students do either.

Fact: I will agree, and have stated before, that the moving of the infirmary to East Avenue was a bad decision. But it was a political decision and was made by the board of trustees, not Dr. Amidon. In choosing to move, the trustees found they could buy a piece of land and a building with student money and get another building, Wasson, to play with. No, I didn't want this either, but if it came down to a choice between conditions as they are now, and East Avenue, I'd pack my bag tomorrow.

Fact: The staff of Wasson has actively sought student input. Results are now showing, or are being planned. There is now another doctor (part time) to help with the waiting situation. The new infirmary will have minor surgery capability to deal with cases which might ordinarily go to the emergency room (at a $9 cost minimum). All things considered, I would be more willing to commend than criticize.

I don't like the health fee going up either, but blame the trustees for the delay in building a new infirmary (so that construction costs have gone up) and for deciding on East Avenue in the first place. Don't blame the staff. If Tom McCormick wants to pay $9 per visit to a doctor, then all I can say is good luck and stay healthy. Just ask a recently sick or injured student how much their bills would have been without the infirmary services. That $48 annual fee would have been exhausted in one hour of time with a specialist.

We all have a right to complain, but let's do it with purpose, constructiveness and most of all, credibility.

Thank you,
Alan H. King '74

Frats Attacked

To the Editor:

Fraternities at UVM are under attack from many sides. Members of the faculty attack the fraternities as needlessly elitist and intrisically anti-intellectual; the politicized student attacks the fraternities as an establishment-oriented, junior "Country Club"; the alumni attack us, but more commonly merely abandon us as betrayers of time-honored traditions and values.

At UVM some fraternities, Sigma Phi being one, actually outstride the reforming zeal of their most active opponents and retain that kind of society that even the most ardent adherents of a "new" communalism are too timid to aspire. Our society is unencumbered by needless institutional bureaucracy that is so prevalent in the Living/Learning experience.

Unfortunately the archaic connotations of the word "Fraternity" cause the disillusioned outsider to group Sigma Phi and all fraternities with all other institutions that are actively attacked for their lack of social and political responsibility. Consequently the fraternities find their relevance being questioned.

If the greatest problem facing the fraternity today is an indiscriminate attack upon its relevance, then the greatest danger is an indiscriminate defense of its existance. For if any fraternity finds itself being merely defensive in its attitude, it will truly and justly become an irrelevant object of scorn in this revolutionary age. What is essential for the preservation of that tolerant fellowship and intellectual vitality which is central to any positive fraternity experience, is a continual and radical re-evaluation of every aspect of the fraternity.

For example, it seems crucial that we intensively re-examine our criteria for recruitment into the society. It is always a temptation to recruit those who are eager to join. However, in doing so, we fatally limit the possibility for diversity of opinion and background in our pledge class. Perhaps it would be well to work harder to persuade the student who is disenchanted with fraternities to pledge and to seriously consider his opinions and objections: With this type of effort on the part of the brotherhood, the fraternity protects the possibility of a relevant future for itself.

By no means is this suggesting an arbitrary change; on the contrary, it suggests that we fully realize the nature of the situation at hand and the necessity for a radical clarification of our values so as to rejuvenate the ideas of fraternalism in these changing times.

Meanwhile, Back At The Bar Review

Despite the rumor-mongers, the Bar Review lives. While many of our fellows luxuriated in southern sun or western slopes, TBR's team split up to vacation in the glories of two great New England watering holes, Worcester, Massachusetts and Barre-Montpelier. Little can be said in either praise or criticism of these garden spots. Suffice it to say that both areas are well and alive.

Upon returning to Burlington, the Bar Review suffered the loss of half its force for several days last week. One of the critics entered DeGoesbriand Unit for what they told him was minor oral surgery. Don't let anyone ever tell you that "minor oral surgery" is not a major operation.

Our reviewer's room overlooked the UVM Green with the gorgeous Mathematics buildings as the main visual attraction. The reviewer, not a frequenter of hospitals, was informed that the room would cost $95 per day, American plan, double occupancy. Knowing the price of the accommodations and the fact that dinner would be the last solid food for several days, the reviewer fairly expected escargots, an imaginative entree, and a light dessert. Instead, TBR's restaurant specialist was fed raw baked chicken, with a soggy crust of crushed Wheaties, jell-o salad, and a cupcake. A nurse was informed of the problem with the main course and managed to procure a substitute entree... olive loaf on white.

In the morning, breakfast was a hypodermic in the posterior and a cart ride upstairs to surgery. The reviewer, despite the hypodermic, remained awake to experience those dramatic few moments of being wheeled upstairs to surgery. While he was awake, he was so sedated that he was unable to chew his fingernails.

Wheeled into the O.R. (hang around hospitals long enough and you'll start throwing around the local vernacular), the critic was placed on the table – the intravenous needle was inserted in his hand – a mask was placed over his face and, in two deep breaths.....

...The critic groggily awoke back in his room 40 minutes later. His awakening did not necessarily confirm his continued existence; however, he knew he was alive upon viewing one of his favorite lady friends sitting beside the bed. The critic attempted some meaningful conversation with his visitor, however difficult it was due to the residual effects of sodium pentothal. Our visitor did a superb job of not letting on that she knew that the patient had difficulty speaking because his mouth was bleeding. Finally, noting the hour being early and the without breakfast, the visitor left, not wishing any further view of the post operative tragedy. She is forgiven.

One of the nurses entered, inquiring of the patient if he desired anything to drink. The reply was a request for 2000 cc of Cuervo Gold tequila martini fed intravenously. While the nurse appreciated the request, she was unable to comply. Presented instead was a half cup of ginger ale and a soft boiled egg.

The later lunch was labeled split-pea soup – it was indeed green. The afternoon was beautiful outside; inside a lady geriatrics patient was accusing the writer of lying in her bed. Still groggy, the writer made a vain attempt to reach the call button to summon relief. That failing, our post-op reviewer retreated into sleep, dreaming of a sweet young thing delivering a writ of habeas corpus to get him, out of his $95 a day predicament. The little old lady persisted in her efforts.

He awakened in time for dinner – cream of carrot soup. A sometimes reader of the Larousse Gastronomique, the writer was unacquainted with this particular soup. He hopes he never will be reacquainted.

At this point, the critic, in consultation with an expert, decided that it would be healthier to check out of the hospital than to remain.

It should be noted that between Tuesday evening's raw chicken and olive loaf on white and Saturday night, the reviewer was unable to ingest solid food. Never has so much soup, cottage cheese, ice cream, and jello been eaten with so little appreciation. Much to the writer's "amusement" the roommate cooked a steak dinner Thursday night.

On Saturday night, several Shelburne Road residents sponsored an early Thanksgiving dinner. The Cleveland Crazy superintended the production of a huge turkey dinner in a scene that was a combination of the worst possible elements of the Salvation Army with Walt Disney World. Needless to say, four days of near starvation were easily vitiated in one sitting while two local kumquats entertained by telling duck jokes.

On to new business!

Do You Believe In Tenure?

by Tom E. McCormick

Do you believe in tenure, brother?

The Faculty Affairs Committee does. "The committee believes that a grant of tenure is a guarantee to the grantee, that he will be able to practice his profession of teaching without being compelled, either directly or indirectly, to subscribe to any political, administrative, or professional orthodoxy." Demosthenes couldn't read that without stuttering. Tenure–the theory goes– is absolutely essential because members of the Academy, by the nature of their position, speak with the vehemence and passion of John the Baptist, but–as my theory goes–with the timidity of Pontius Pilate, they demand protection from the unruly masses.

Tenure rests on the proposition that the university is a marketplace of ideas, where all ideas, no matter how unpopular, are expressed, and eventually the truth wins out. Under that conception, tenure is the guarantee that unpopular ideas can be expressed without fear of reprisal. The theory sounds plausible, but it isn't correct.

For all practical purposes not all ideas can be advocated. One cannot, for instance, insist on genocide as a solution to the world's food problems. Secondly, tenure relies on a misconception of the university's role in society. Tenure implies after all that the Academy is, or can be, freer than the society at large. That's nonsense. It's silly to expect isn't it, that a mere written statement of tenure would make a Russian university free. Society–not tenure– makes a university free.

Now, knocking tenure may seem as petty as knocking an aborigine's fertility doll. If those big brave profs feel that it will help them to speak the truth more forthrightly, then why not let them cling to it. Well, the problem is that tenure is stultifying the university. It may very well work to discourage free speech, because it's almost used as a reward for good behavior. Young teachers who desire job security (read: tenure) are better off if they restrain themselves. Although his departure does not bring tears to my eyes, Michael Parenti might be teaching here now, if he hadn't been outspoken, while on the road to tenure.

Secondly, tenure seems to be undermining job mobility. There are so many tenured professors that it's hard for young teachers to break into the ranks. The Faculty Affairs Committee's response to this problem was to encourage the initiation of a system of early retirement. That's neat. They get paid for nine months work. They go on sabbatical every seventh year. And now this. I can't think of three better arguments for becoming a teacher.

Finally, tenure guarantees job security, no matter how shoddy the performance. There's a better chance that the President will be impeached than a tenured teacher fired. Now, there's a rumor that tenure is tied to performance. But that's preposterous. Everybody has had teachers who are less interesting than watching trees grow, and who are as prepared for classes as the U.S. was for Pearl Harbor. Just for fun recall whether they had tenure. Then name the last time they were denied a paycheck because of substandard work.

Tenure ought to be treated as just another idea–not dogma–in the marketplace of ideas, and recognized for the problem it is.

Views Of SAGA : It Isn't So Bad

by Scott Bauer

This title may sound pretty hard to defend but I'll give it a try! Maybe it should say "SAGA could be worse...Much Worse!" Try eating at other college cafeterias some time and I'm sure you'll be astounded. I really believe SAGA at UVM is unique in many aspects.

One of the major factors determining the quality of any large organization is the administration. SAGA at UVM is unique. Fred Smith, director of SAGA Food Service, mentioned some interesting facts. SAGA maintains an open system of decentralized planning so that before decisions are made all people concerned are involved. Smith feels that they are "restricted surprisingly little by the national SAGA administration." He believes that SAGA at UVM is "not a traditional food service" because it is receptive to student reactions.

I worked for SAGA at Harris-Millis dining hall for one and one-half years and I'd really have to agree with him. It's just a fine place to work. The thing that makes producing bunches of food for starving students bearable are the good feelings that everyone who works for SAGA has for each other. Just simple things like fooling around while we're working and the ease in finding a substitute whenever we can't work.

Sue Vittum, the manager of Harris-Millis dining hall, believes this philosophy of good inter-personal interaction. She is just really pleased when a student employee calls her from Florida over spring break to tell her his car broke down and he'll be a day or two late (the person didn't even call collect!) She notices the sense of freedom in her job. Restricted very little by the other administrative forces of SAGA, she feels that Harris-Millis is a home. For three years she's worked there and has enjoyed it very much. Her husband, Steve, says he doesn't exactly like her time commitment. I can agree with him––I sure wouldn't want my wife leaving bed at 6:30 or 7 a.m. five days a week and not returning until 7 or 8 p.m. Also she must be gone Sundays from 1 to 9. Now that's a lot of time away from home!

Jack Lundie, the first cook at Harris-Millis, believes the "lines of communication are always open between everyone that works here." People have "a sense of purpose" and know what they have to do. Jack really enjoys working with food and believes technical problems are one of the factors which keep him from producing things most efficiently. If machines aren't working properly you just can't use them to create the best quality food.

George Marchacos, who keeps the Harris-Millis dining hall looking nice, says he really likes working there and there are very good people working with him. He's very happy with the students at Harris-Millis and said they don't leave much of a mess. He thoroughly enjoys his job because he works until 9:30 p.m. and "he's alone with no bosses" to watch over him.

Well O.K., what about the quality of the food? Simply mass-producing anything removes some of the appeal. There are other things involved like the large companies that sell the university their kitchen equipment, (equipment which always seems to breakdown one day after the one year warranty is up). There are also personal feelings involved. I'm sure if I've had a rough day with college and other things the food won't taste as good as it might be. Since the food is produced by a small number of people their feelings will also be reflected in the food.

Some people aren't too happy with SAGA's new meal plan. It will be more expensive but there are reasons. I hate to be critical but we rip off SAGA pretty well. $25,000 a year for things ripped off and replaced because of breakage is quite a few pennies. If you don't have the cash to buy the minimum number of coupons then get together with friends and buy them together.

SAGA is going to continue to improve if you don't think they're doing it––let them know.

The Gay World : The Closet Is Indeed A Frightening Place

by Louie Crew

Reprinted from the Chronicle of Higher Education

For centuries the academy in the West has made quite clear the only terms on which gay persons could be accepted professionally at any level: complete invisibility. Gay men and women have been force to pass as straights. Our unique sexual orientation has been shoved into a closet.

Many of us have learned thus to survive, even to prevail, some of us even to forget, except for very frantic moments, that we are really gay. By playing the game of invisibility we have held every possible position of leadership; we have been major forces in the arts, in literature, in science, in technology, in every discipline. Some of us have even grown smug with the awareness that more and more generations of straight academics are now enlightened by mild doses of psychological liberalism. Straights now sometimes even tolerate our few accidental lapses into public visibility. Furthermore, there seem to be fewer scandals, fewer arrests for "moral turpitude." The media have helped by defining our place. We and the general public have been told that gays can now frequent clubs of our own. The impression is that there is now less risk of blackmail when academics discreetly go to such places.

Some gays argue that we have never had it so good, that we now even have power. Many straights concur, even saying that gays have too much power, that too many bosses are gay and that straights often learn too late the sexual politics of the game of invisibility. The one constant is the game itself, invisibility, passing, closeting, wearing the heterosexual mask, reassuring straights that all is really right with the world.

From the Anglo-Saxon hal are derived three modern English words whole, hale (healthy), and holy. So much is sexuality a part of one's wholeness that some of us are now questioning whether we can ever be hale, much less holy, so long as the academy and the society require our sexual invisibility.

While straights themselves have a very unimpressive record of establishing publicly their wholeness, their situation is not exactly parallel to that of gays. In the Western culture most people assume that a person has a heterosexual orientation unless he indicates otherwise. The price for indicating otherwise remains typically the complete disenfranchisement, the removal of the offending gay from the academy. Merely to assert that one is gay has been taken regularly as a radical confrontation worthy if not of medieval torture, at least of absolute oblivion. Very recent history reminds all that the Nazis baked gays by the thousands and that a morally bankrupt academy (not to mention Judaism and Christianity) has yet to raise even a whimper of protest.

Small wonder, then, that so many gays accept invisibility. Gays have played the game so long that there is very little gay community, almost no gay family. Despite the stingiest estimate that close to two in ten persons have had some gay sexual encounters, most gays, like most straights, get their verbalized understanding of their gay experiences from books written by straights. Such is the censorship in the so-called helping professions that even now a candidly gay identity will bring dismissal from almost any graduate school of psychology, social work, or the pastoral ministry. The few gay writers who do gain acceptance are often those that either reaffirm theories of straights or otherwise serve straights' prurient entertainment.

As a gay professor, I feel an obligation to free straight colleagues and students from their logical misconceptions about my sexual identity. A five-minute statement at the beginning of the term is sufficient. I feel no need to indulge in long accounts of my personal sexuality. Yet so much is passion – including sexual passion – a part of my learning experience and judgment that I feel my students and colleagues have a right to know the source of my biases. Just as important, my own growth as a whole person demands such clarity.

It is not as if sexuality is really forbidden in the classroom, particularly for those of us who teach literature. I could hardly teach most literary works adequately without references to sex, both gay and straight. Particularly vicious has been the systematic way in which great gay writers have themselves been forced to pass for straights in the standard texts. In discussing gay writers as gays, I would only compound the confusion and deprive my students of my special vantage if I were to refer to the writers with the pronouns they, them, and their when I really mean we, us, and our.

Of course, I am but one of many gay academics now asking for the right to be whole persons on the job. Recently, over Thanksgiving, 325 of us met in New York City at the first national conference of the Gay Academic Union, with the theme "Scholarship and the Gay Academic Experience." Such dialogues are beginning all over the country. The call is clearly for sexual honesty, from straights and gays alike. To reveal a hidden sexual identity with pride is tantamount to saying, "I have my guts on the table; where are yours?" The result, it is to be hoped, will be discovery, not just more power politics.

Gay intellectual honesty is one of the first good breezes in the rankid air of the academy in years. It could well open many new discussions about sexuality and the total human experience to enrich human experience for decades. At the very least, thousands of other gay brothers and sisters in the academy and elsewhere may not need to remain lonely, alienated, and afraid for as long as some of us chose to do.

When I informed my Georgia classes and administration of my gayness, one of the persons most visibly affected was a closeted gay friend. In tears he proclaimed, "I respect the hell out of you, but I resent the implication that others can have no integrity without so doing. I could never take off my clothes before so many people who don't give a damn. I can't even tell my wife! And closet is such a fierce word, so very unfair; it makes me feel that everything I am is insignificant!"

The closet is indeed a frightening place. The decision to leave it is a very personal one, clearly not one that anyone should be pressured into. In a culture as stifling as ours, many gay persons may never feel safe to come out. Only six months ago, at 36, I would have committed suicide had more than a select few known about my gayness. For me only the love and respect of one great man, together with the rallying of increasing numbers of gays and straights, gave me the impetus completely to declose. Each person knows best his own timetable.

Now unclosetted, like many others I have found the rewards richer than anticipated. I am free forever from all threats and reality of blackmail. I no longer waste time wondering whether people like my well-fashioned mask of the "real me." I am free to get on with the important task facing all people, to develop my "real me," which includes the sexual as well as the professional, simultaneously.

As a white man loving a black man in rural Georgia on a state black-college campus, I have not suffered a single open reprisal in my six months here, nor has my lover, a business executive. Students have been very protective of both of us. White and black colleagues have welcomed the opportunities to discuss issues, to entertain us, to be entertained by us. One administrator has stated privately his admiration for my courage. Head counselors at the college have applauded my volunteering my services as a responsible, reasonably happy, very productive gay resource person available for talking with gays or with counselors. Extremely gratifying has been the report of one of the gay students, who said, "Things have changed for us since you've been here; we feel a lot better being who we are."

For me the anticipated risk most feared was always the rejection that I associated with visible gays. Now visible myself, I find myself not rejected. I have the pleasure of knowing that I am accepted for who I am. When the time comes for contract renewal or tenure – well, that was never safe or a sure thing. I can sew, I can act, I can write, I can cook, I can dig ditches; in whatever field my society forces me to survive, I will survive as a whole person. I know that I shall always somehow be teaching, and always learning in the context of my gay experience. Perhaps the biggest lesson that I want to turn my attention to now is the genesis of the sick homophobia rampant in our society.

Rips Off Students

by Wynn Gold

It seems to me that SAGA, under the guise of "responding to student requests" is once more tipping us off! All any student has to do is to carefully compare the present cost of meals with the cost under the proposed system to recognize the impending rip-off.

Let's take a quick look of the costs. The present 20 meal plan costs $578.00 per year, or $289.00 per semester. The proposed plan calls for a base price of $247.00 per semester, and entitles the student to 420 coupons, or 28 coupons a week. In order to eat 20 meals a week under this plan, a student would need 69 coupons a week, or 1035 coupons. This is a total difference of 615 coupons for the semester, over and above the original 420. In real money, this works out to be between $112.00 and $140.00 more than the basic charge, or between $359.00 and $387.00 in board per semester. This could lead to an increase of between $140.00 and $196.00 over what you are now paying for a twenty meal plan.

With an increase in tuition inevitable, is this potential increase of almost $200.00 in board what the students want? I think that when investigated in this light, the students will realize what a rip-off this really is. It seems to me that the students should be given the option of staying with the old plan at the same or adjusted price, or choosing to try the new plan with all its "conveniences."

Impressive Line-up At Third Annual Blues Festival

The Third Annual Blues Festival, probably New England's most exciting blues concert production, is set for Saturday, April 27 at the University of Vermont's Patrick Gym. This year's lineup, the most impressive yet, will have Howlin' Wolf and Band, the Luther Allison Blues Band, the Otis Rush Chicago Blues Band, Johny Shines, Eddie 'Cleanhead' Vinson and Boston's Roomful of Blues Band.

This year's Festival, thought by many critics to be the best blues lineup assembled since last summer's Ann Arbor Blues Festival, is already scheduled to be covered by Rolling Stone, the Boston Globe, Boston's Phoenix and Real Paper and Billboard.

Luther Allison

This year's festival will be produced by the Community Media Project, producers of the first and second annual festivals, and UVM SA Concerts will be co-producing. Booking is being co-ordinated, as in the past, by Dick Waterman of Avalon Productions, Hank Albarelli, Jr. of Community Media and Doug Beardsley and Dave Horwitz of SA Concerts are in charge of promotion and production.

Howlin' Wolf (born Chester Burnett) has had one of the greatest impacts on blues, and has been a major influence on Mick Jagger, Bill Wyman and Charlie Watts of the Rolling Stones, all of whom have backed Wolf on various albums. Howlin' Wolf will appear in Burlington with a full band and has played in the past with Eric Clapton, Steve Winwood, Ian Stewart, Klaus Voormann and Phil Upchurch to name just a few. Wolf headlined the 72-73 Ann Arbor Blues Festival. His best known compositions are, "Highway 49", "Evil", "Smokestack Lightin'," and "Killing Floor."

Howlin' Wolf has managed to move with the times, retain power and can be placed right up there performance-wise with today's Johnny Winter in terms of excitement and power.

Luther Allison, the only black guitarist today being directly compared with the late Jimi Hendrix for sheer raw power and talent, will also be backed by a full band in Burlington. Allison stole the show at last year's Ann Arbor Festival.

The Otis Rush Chicago Blues Band (a five piece group) is one of the most exciting electric blues bands performing today. Rush fell sick two days before last year's festival and was unable to perform so he has been invited back this year. Otis Rush, leader and lead guitarist of the group, is a southpaw. He can play as smooth as B. B. King and as raw as the great Hound Dog Taylor. Rush is often compared to Albert King. Popstars such as Eric Clapton, John Mayall and Mike Bloomfield have all copied his guitar licks and songs.

Johnny Shines will represent the softer, acoustic sounds of the blues. Shines is one of the most respected black blues artists of today. A listen to "Dust My Broom" on the Ann Arbor album gives a good idea of his amazing range. On the cut he is backed by Otis Rush and Jimmy Dawkins and band. Some of the same is expected in Burlington in terms of backing and range.

Eddie 'Cleanhead' Vinson, a tall, thin man with a shaved head and a Fu-Manchu beard will wail on sax. Vinson is rated by most to be the best of the big band jazz and blues saxophone players in the country. Besides the sax Eddie can dish out king size portions of the blues.

Roomful of Blues span the history of the blues in their performances, with heavy, churning riffs from the three saxophones filling in vocal gaps. Roomful of Blues, an eight piece band, plays material from the thirties, forties and early fifties reaching back to the pieces done by the Benny Goodman sextet, Duke Ellington and the R&B of Big Joe Turner. They have been named the most exciting pop group of 1973 by the Boston Herald.

The Blues Workshops will be held on the UVM campus the afternoon prior to the concert and are free and open to the public. Locations and times will be announced later; The concert will be held in the UVM Patrick Gym; starting time will be 7:30 p.m. Tickets are on sale now at the UVM Bookstore and Bailey's on Church Street.

Vermont Symphony Orchestra To Return In "Extra" Concert

The Vermont Symphony Orchestra will return to offer a Lane Series "Extra" concert April 21 during the Symphony's 40th anniversary year.

The concert of works by Beethoven, Brahms, Schubert and Ginastera will be enhanced by three guest soloists and guest conductor, Efrain Guigui of Argentina, making his first appearance in Vermont.

The American pianist David Keiser, Russian-born violinist Tossy Spivakovsky and Brazilian-born cellist Aldo Parisot will join the Symphony as soloists in Beethoven's "Triple Concerto," the Concerto for Piano, Violin, Cello and Orchestra.

Other works on the 3:30 p.m. Sunday concert in Memorial Auditorium will be Brahms' "Tragic Overture," Schubert's Symphony No. 5, and dances from the ballet "Estancia" by Ginastera.

Founded in 1934 by its music director Dr. Alan Carter, the Vermont Symphony Orchestra is the official state symphony of Vermont and the first of its kind in the U.S.

At 1:30 p.m. before the April 21 Lane concert the Orchestra will present a free "youth concert" under conductor Anthony Pezzano, assistant conductor of the Orchestra and director of its Symphony Day Programs for children.

The 1:30 p.m. concert will be co-sponsored by the Lane Series and the Friends of Music, a Burlington-area group.

Guest Conductor for the 3:30 p.m. Lane concert, Efrain Guigui, is associated with the Casals Festival of Puerto Rico and is a former conductor of the American Ballet Theatre Orchestra. He is also on the faculty of the Puerto Rico Conservatory of Music founded by Pablo Casals.

Reservations for both April 21 concerts, the free 1:30 p.m. youth concert and 3:30 p.m. Lane Series concert, are available from the Lane Office, Waterman Building at the University, telephone 656-3418.

In addition, the Friends of Music are distributing reservations at no charge for the 1:30 p.m. concert in area schools, but students may also obtain them from the Lane Office.

"P.J.Jones" Mixes Reality Of Drugs With Poor Stereotypes

by Peter Campbell

If P.J. Jones was taken seriously, then life in Harlem would be right out of a bad comic book. Instead of a socially realistic play about black people's lives, we watched a malignant step-child of Shaft and Superfly, two tongue-in-cheek action movies. But this cops and robbers stuff is a lousy vehicle for meaningful social statements. Instead of the "bitter side of Harlem," we saw a very superficial side of Harlem, and all the other black communities as well.

I assume that Darryl Lloyd, who wrote, produced, and directed P. J. Jones for the Third World Organization (i.e. the black students at UVM) expected a serious reception, so it was somewhat painful to hear the audience laugh at lines meant to be serious. This is inevitable when a young playwright tries to be profound right off the bat, as Mr. Lloyd has. He was directing a cast and crew that were largely inexperienced on stage and P. J. Jones was obviously a large undertaking for the students. But even with these considerations in mind, P. J. was hard to watch.

The actors clearly lacked good direction; they had to speak dialogue that went nowhere and there were some complications in the structure and plot that ignored some very basic rules of drama. Also, I am afraid that I strongly disagree with some of Mr. Lloyd's conceptions of the human race. For a man who wants to go into social work, I find some of Mr. Lloyd's ideas very strange.

The play does open with a nice ironic twist, where two junkies, (well played by Jose Santana and Clark Canella) mythify P. J. Jones, the man at the top killing them, as they stick needles in their arms. But the rest of the scenes lose this verve, there is no subsequent tearing away of the myth, and in fact there is no myth to tear away. P. J. Jones turns out to be a classic case of arrested character development. In his eagerness to make P. J. evil, Mr. Lloyd apparently forgot or did not know that a criminal of P. J.'s ilk gets to the top because he is a great actor every minute of his life. He cons people, he can turn it off or on at will to make things go his way. Instead, P. J. is characterized as a nothing who would have never even made it off his front door steps in the Harlem crime world. Lyle Ferguson, an experienced actor, could have done a lot more with P. J. in spite of the tepid words he had to speak. But he just muttered, occasionally growled, and struggled to remember his lines as he dragged about the stage. So, when P. J. died at the end of the play the audience could not have cared less; he was such a bore.

P. J.'s friends, "Bobo," the bartender and "Joey," his closest friend are slightly better characterizations and they were decently acted by Reginald Murray and Matt Coleman, respectively. But his girlfriend, "Gloria," played by Denise Glasco was a very poor characterization. I ask Mr. Lloyd, should your women have been represented by two morons and a girl who shrieked idiotically over the death of a thug she apparently did not even know? Plays can, and often do, deal with stereotypes, but only to set off the main characters, who should be real people with real motivations. Unfortunately, P. J. and Gloria were the least real. And the final turn in plot, where Gloria shot P. J. and gave Harlem over to the Mafia was just inane. If that ending were to be taken seriously, the audience would have to conclude that the great evil in the black community is not drugs, but women. But we never sympathized with P. J. anyway, so the whole story was a waste of time.

The one scene that was good, had nothing to do with the plot where the girl-addict is begging for some junk from "Eldorado Eddie." Jackie Patterson gave an excellent performance as a hip and calculating pusher. Here we saw how effectively junk can drag a human to the lowest, and just what it does to human relationships. A simple scene, but it showed what good drama is all about. P. J. Jones and his scotch-sipping cohorts were far too removed from the plight of the junkies. P. J. could have been in the hot car-parts business for all that it mattered. And his sudden wish toward the end that Captain Wright would clean up Harlem was totally without motivation. One does not turn from a criminal to a good citizen in a split-second.

In P. J. Jones, Mr. Lloyd has ignored the real problem of the drug world, the cold, hard fact of addiction, which apparently makes people give up everything else to have, that includes the material greed, sex and power drives which Mr. Lloyd portrayed in his people. And he ignored the well-known fact that most drug-pushers are also drug-users. Then the question of who is good and who is evil is much less simple. Instead, Mr. Lloyd advocated the methadone treatment, which may have created more problems than it has solved. It is a dubious salvation and is much too complex a subject to insert in a play. But Mr. Lloyd showed people driven only by sexual lust and material greed. This belief in the doctrine of the pre-damnation of people's souls which was the time's prevalent view in medieval times but that would be an odd way for a modern social worker to feel. Does Mr. Lloyd the social worker hold the same views of Mr. Lloyd the playwright? I hope not.

With all the great plays that have come out of New York in the past ten years, I cannot understand why the Third World Organization chose something as poor as P. J. Jones.

Vermont's Marlboro Music Festival saw the sensational debut of a string quartet to be featured as the final Lane Chamber Arts Series concert of the season on Wednesday, April 17.

The artists will be the Cleveland Quartet, presenting a concert in Ira Allen Chapel at 8 p.m. The program will consist of Mendelssohn's Quartet in E Minor, Op. 44, No. 2; Haydn's Quartet in D Major, Op. 64, No. 5; and, finally, Beethoven's Quartet in B flat Major, Op. 130.

The members of the Cleveland Quartet have all won prizes in international competition and were on the threshold of most promising careers when their love for chamber music drew them together during the Spring of 1969, to form a permanent group. Musicians and patrons of music who attended their debut concert at Marlboro in the summer of 1969 are still talking about the Quartet's perfect ensemble, dazzling technique, and profound music-making.

stage. So, when P. J. died at the end of the play the audience could not have cared less, he was such a bore.

P. J.'s friends, "Bobo," the bartender and "Joey," his closest friend are slightly better characterizations and they were decently acted by Reginald Murray and Matt Coleman, respectively. But his girlfriend, "Gloria," played by Denise Glasco was a very poor characterization. I ask Mr. Lloyd, should your women have been represented by two morons and a girl who shrieked idiotically over the death of a thug she apparently did not even know? Plays can, and often do, deal with stereotypes, but only to set off the main characters, who should be real people with real motivations. Unfortunately, P. J. and Gloria were the least real. And the final turn in plot, where Gloria shot P. J. and gave Harlem over to the Mafia was just inane. If that ending were to be taken seriously, the audience would have to conclude that the great evil in the black community is not drugs, but women. But we never sympathized with P. J. anyway, so the whole story was a waste of time.

The one scene that was good, had nothing to do with the plot where the girl-addict is begging for some junk from "Eldorado Eddie." Jackie Patterson gave an excellent performance as a hip and calculating pusher. Here we saw how effectively junk can drag a human to the lowest, and just what it does to human relationships. A simple scene, but it showed what good drama is all about. P. J. Jones and his scotch-sipping cohorts were far too removed from the plight of the junkies. P. J. could have been in the hot car-parts business for all that it mattered. And his sudden wish toward the end that Captain Wright would clean up Harlem was totally without motivation. One does not turn from a criminal to a good citizen in a split-second.

In P. J. Jones, Mr. Lloyd has ignored the real problem of the drug world, the cold, hard fact of addiction, which apparently makes people give up everything else to have, that includes the material greed, sex and power drives which Mr. Lloyd portrayed in his people. And he ignored the well-known fact that most drug-pushers are also drug-users. Then the question of who is good and who is evil is, much less simple. Instead, Mr. Lloyd advocated the methadone treatment, which may have created more problems than it has solved. It is a dubious salvation and is much too complex a subject to insert in a play. But Mr. Lloyd showed people driven only by sexual lust and material greed. This belief in the doctrine of the pre-damnation of people's souls which was the time's prevalent view in medieval times but that would be an odd way for a modern social worker to feel. Does Mr. Lloyd, the social worker hold the same views of Mr. Lloyd the playwright? I hope not.

With all the great plays that have come out of New York in the past ten years, I cannot understand why the Third World Organization chose something as poor as P. J. Jones.

Sensational String Quartet Performs At Marlboro Music Festival

Vermont's Marlboro Music Festival saw the sensational debut of a string quartet to be featured as the final Lane Chamber Arts Series concert of the season on Wednesday, April 17.

The artists will be the Cleveland Quartet, presenting a concert in Ira Allen Chapel at 8 p.m. The program will consist of Mendelssohn's Quartet in E Minor, Op. 44, No. 2; Haydn's Quartet in D Major, Op. 64, No. 5; and, finally, Beethoven's Quartet in B flat Major, Op. 130.

The members of the Cleveland Quartet have all won prizes in international competition and were on the threshold of most promising careers when their love for chamber music drew them together during the Spring of 1969, to form a permanent group. Musicians and patrons of music who attended their debut concert at Marlboro in the summer of 1969 are still talking about the Quartet's perfect ensemble, dazzling technique, and profound music-making.

Their successes leave no doubt that the Cleveland Quartet will become one of the most important chamber music ensembles America has ever produced. One indication of the profound impression made by this quartet is the fact that, following their New York City debut, Hunter College decided to present a special series of four concerts by the Cleveland Quartet during the 1971–72 season. Such series are only presented by the world's most distinguished chamber groups.

The members of the quartet were Artists-in-Residence at the Cleveland Institute of Music, from 1969 to 1971. In the Fall of 1971 the quartet accepted an invitation to succeed the Budapest Quartet as Artists-in-Residence at the State University of New York at Buffalo, one of the most prestigious positions in the field of chamber music.

Donald Weilerstein, violinist, has been soloist with orchestras in the United States, Canada, and Europe, including the Montreal Symphony and the Belgium National Orchestra. He was presented in an enthusiastically received New York debut in 1967 and has given recitals in many cities, including Boston, Baltimore, and San Antonio. A Juilliard graduate, Mr. Weilerstein studied violin with Ivan Galamian and chamber music with the Juilliard String Quartet. In 1968 he won the highest prize in the Munich International Competition.

Peter Salaff, violinist, studied at the Eastman School of Music where he was awarded a Performer's Certificate and was soloist with the Eastman Rochester Symphony Orchestra. Later at the Yale University School of Music he appeared as concertmaster and soloist with the Collegium Musicum. His teachers were Cedric Bennett, Sophia Pimenides, Joseph Knitzer and Broadus Erle. His summers have been spent at Aspen, the Yale Summer School of Music and Arts and at Marlboro. Mr. Salaff served an exciting three years in Chile as a member of the Peace Corps, where he taught at the Universidad de Concepcion and performed as soloist with orchestra and in chamber music recitals.

Martha Strongin Katz, violinist, was the highest prizewinner at the 1968 Geneva International Viola Competition and soloist with l'Orchestre de la Suisse-Romande. At this time she was also the recipient of the Max Reger Award. She has performed at Tanglewood, the Mozarteum in Salzburg, and at Marlboro. She also has participated in the "Music from Marlboro" tours.

Paul Katz, cellist, has studied with Gregor Piatigorsky, Gabor Rejto, Janos Starker, Bernard Greenhouse, and Leonard Rose. In 1962 he was selected nationally to perform in the Pablo Casals Master Class at Berkeley, California. In the summers he too is a regular participant in the Marlboro Music Festival.

Tickets, $3 each, are available at the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For reservations, telephone 656-3418.

Marshall Tucker Lp: Impressive Debut

A New Life
The Marshall Tucker Band
(Capricorn CP 0134)

by Doug Collette

It's just not enough to say that Marshall Tucker's lp was the most impressive debut of all 1973. Nor is it exaggeration to state that with the release of their second, A New Life, The Marshall Tucker Band are more thoroughly impressive than were the Allman Brothers Band at the time of Idlewild South.

Marshall Tucker's got everything they need: plenty of exceptional original material authored by Toy Caldwell; harmonious intermeshing of voices and instruments; a keen sense of style and a cautious but nonetheless adventurous approach to their music.

A New Life is more subtle, more intricate than the first record. Now that Marshall Tucker's got our attention, they're gonna show us things we might never have dreamed they could do. And do them they do with a freshness and muscle that's infectious enough in its own right. It's a bit more reserved too, which isn't to say the music is lazy or mellow, but that this time 'round, Marshall Tucker's decided to reveal additional assets and channel their strengths into more diversity.

The meat of the album is contained in the three extended cuts. There's so much going on when a band of this calibre plays, it's difficult to choose what to listen to. It's beautiful to hear musicians maneuver themselves as individuals and as a cohesive unit: With Jerry Eubanks' feathery flute hovering above, Toy's leads coax the group through the title tune; if you were to fuse the styles of Duane Allman and Dicky Betts, you'd hear the guitar playing of Toy Caldwell.

"Southern Woman" ambles along easily before it slips into lilting jazz changes, interchanging Caldwell's precise, muted picking with sax that skips all around. Marshall Tucker doesn't just riff monotonously behind the soloists; the fact is, it's almost as fascinating to listen to Tommy Caldwell's fast-fingered bass runs, George McCorkle's exact rhythm guitar or Paul Riddle's nimble drumming—the music flows as strong and as sure as a river.

Marshall Tucker is driving dynamite in concert, but they're not only willing to use recording as a whole different medium, but with the help of producer Paul Hornsby (whose keyboard playing adds so much additional texture and color), they're in full command of the studio's resources. Now that is something extraordinary, and not just because Marshall Tucker is a young band. So many groups have enough trouble capturing their sound with any accuracy in sterile environs, but here we've got a group that can bring out facets of their music that can only be unfolded in the studio. It's almost like Marshall Tucker has an alter ego that only comes out in recording.

But surprisingly (or, come to think of it, perhaps not), that alter ego complements the live band with tracks like the superbly-constructed "You Ain't Foolin' Me." The sensitivity they display in combining caressing electric guitar, glowing pedal steel and a cascade of mellotron strings is nothing new for this band, but the depth of it is something that could only be done on a recording. Any old way you choose it, it's one more piece of music destined to bring tears to your eyes everytime you hear it. Tears to your eyes and rhythm to your blood.

The other five cuts are concise, disciplined numbers cementing Marshall Tucker's mastery of the basics of their music. "Blue Ridge Mountain Skies" is a bluegrassy piece fit for singing along, spiced with banjo and Charlie Daniels' fiddle; "Too Stubborn" is a vintage barroom lament, complete with weeping pedal steel; "24 Hours at a Time" glides effortlessly with the purity of early dawn air and "Fly Eagle Fly," the simplest of all, gains its emphasis from Toy's guileless vocal.

"Another Crdel Love" is an absolute stunner though, built on a grand-loping riff that, smartly spurred on by the horns, never fails to deliver me into the hands of ecstasy. Doug Gray's deep, pliable voice is as much of an asset to this band as Caldwell's guitar and it never sounds richer or more resonant than here.

Marshall Tucker would be one of my half-dozen favorite bands even if they were still unknown, but knowing that so many people are enjoying their music only adds to my pleasure: a pair of successful singles captured them an audience and A New Life is bound to widen it. If the Marshall Tucker Band maintains the pace they've set for themselves, the Allmans aren't the only rock and roll group that's gonna to be forced to keep trying harder to stay ahead.

Dylan Hates As Well As Loves

by Peter Campbell

I guess it's about my turn to say a few things about Bob Dylan. If Dylan is writing a lot of love songs now, don't forget that he has written a lot of hate songs too.

If you view singing as I do, as a constructive way to let go of emotion, then the emotion of hate is just as valid as the emotion of love in a song. And Bob turned out better hate songs that anyone. Remember such beauties as "Positively Fourth Street," "Don't Think Twice," or the classic, "Like a Rolling Stone." He was even better than the Rolling Stones, because he usually avoided gender. They sang songs like "Stupid Girl," whereas "Don't Think Twice" and "Positively Fourth Street" refers to no one in particular, and were thus applicable to anyone in particular. Vicious, but effective.

Dylan could also write alienation songs better than anyone else. If he ever did have a "message" for his times it was one of alienation. With his poetic gift he brought the music of alienation – formerly a rock stronghold (remember "Summertime Blues" and "Jail House Rock") out of adolescence. At the height of his alienation period, he created Highway 61 Revisited and Blonde On Blonde, to me, still his most powerful albums. That particular style is still being copied. Just think of "Stuck in the Middle with You" by Steelers Wheele or "All the Young Dudes," by Mott the Hoople. I am not denying that Dylan was not other things, folk singer, country singer, blues singer, and yeah, writer of a few love songs. It was all there, but not with the same prominence as the alienated rocker.

I think the appeal of Dylan – whether folk singer, poet, media hero or what – all lies in the fact that he has gone further out than anyone else has dared to.

For the media, watching Dylan has been watching a tight-rope walker – always waiting to see what he will do, always waiting for him to fall. In 1965 he was the electric Rimbaud, a young Prometheus who took the fire away from everyone else in folk and rock. Then he had his motorcycle accident and calmed down. We got John Wesley Harding, which was an acoustic Highway 61, and then Dylan completely turned around and recorded Nashville Skyline and he was into his "cute" period, with New Morning and Self Portrait. Don't misunderstand me, I like those albums, I just do not consider them to be the potent Dylan. I do realize Dylan could not keep the pace of his Highway 61 days without burning out. ("This wheel's on fire, going down the road," he wrote at the time.)

The next thing everybody learned, Prometheus had a wife and five children. Now everyone knows that domestic life is just not good for rock singers. When they start singing for their wives all the tension and consequently all the dynamism leaves the music. Mushiness starts to seep in and they get corny and uninteresting (except perhaps to their wives). Lennon and McCartney are the two notable examples of this particular phenomenon. Since the breakup of the Beatles, their music has been a pale effort compared to the likes of Rubber Souls, or Sgt. Pepper. They not only crooned to their wives, they even attempted to make them musical partners with ludicrous results.

At least on his recent tour, Dylan did not have his wife back him up on the spoons. On the other hand almost all of the new songs on the new album, Planet Waves are devoted to her. And they are all love songs, but unlike the previous three albums, they are imbued with a highly personal content.

There is a sharper edge apparent in Dylan. One factor could be his voice which has noticeably changed back to the nasal. Perhaps he has taken up smoking again, but who cares? The Band joins Bob, but they hardly help him. After their first three albums, they started sounding lame and here, they are not any better. They do not intrude, but one should expect more than what they give on this album. Compared to his slick Nashville albums, Planet Waves is the homiest yet. In fact it is so downright rustic, you would almost expect Abe Lincoln to be credited with backup vocals. It has its good points, though, and the album grew on me.

The opener is a little ditty called "On a Night Like This" which sounds exactly like "To Be Alone With You" from the Skyline album. After that we start getting into the changes. Many of the other songs leave that smug, self-contented world of blissful love into a broader, more emotional context. He actually looks to the past and future, especially in "Forever Young" (which has the feel of a prayer), in "Durge," my favorite on the album. Here, Robbie Robertson plays some nice flamenco-ish guitar behind a minor key piano, while Bob sings in a Brechtian manner: "The crystal ball hasn't told me nothing yet. I've paid the price of solitude but at least I'm out of death."

While a few others are mournful love songs such as "Going, Going, Gone" or kitchy as in "You Angel You," the best song – "Wedding Song" – is a blend of the old and new and it is the finest. Dylan plays alone. It is an unabashed love song to his wife, but it is in a minor melody, sung with such intenseness and solemnity it has meaning rare in a love song.

"Ever since you walked right in, the circus has been complete. I said good-bye to haunted rooms, and faces in the street. I love you more than madness, more than dreams upon the sea. I love you more than life itself. You mean that much to me... It's never been my duty to make the world at large, nor is it my intention to sound the battle charge. Because I love you more than that with a love that does not bend..."

This song is interesting. For the first time the ever-evasive Dylan has really made a stand, and said something directly about himself. As usual one wonders where he will go from here. I have some hope that he and the Band will really get together next time.

As usual Dylan is still promising, still protean, and maybe still Promethean.

Flash Gordon To Fly At Lane Film Series

Flash Gordon in the movie "Spaceship to the Unknown" will be shown on Friday, April 12, in the Lane Film Society Series "Science Fiction Movies." Featured actors in the movie are Buster Crabbe as Flash Gordon and Jean Rogers as Dale Arden. Also appearing in the film are Charles Middleton and Frank Shannon. There will be two showings of the 1936 movie in Marsh Life Sciences Building Auditorium, at 7:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. Running time is 97 minutes.

Seeking to avert the impending catastrophe, Flash Gordon and beautiful Dale Arden, together with the scientific genius Dr. Zarkov, board a rocket ship and make a desperate attempt to land on the madly on-rushing planet in order to thwart its disaster-laden course. So begins the death-defying, cliff-hanging adventures of the Prince of Justice. Into the claw-like clutches of the merciless Emperor Ming fall Flash and his flock, forced to battle a Herculean gorilla and contend with a weird prehistoric beast resembling a dragon.

As if that's not enough, our hero then must escape the grasp of Kala, King of the Shark Men, by defeating him in mortal combat. Aided by King Thun of the Lion Men, Flash manages to stop the marriage of Ming and Dale Arden (perish the thought) in the nick-of-time. Another fierce battle ensues when our hero is trapped in a huge flooded chill chamber and he must fight the deadly octopus to the death. Barely able to withstand the torture of the Tunnel of Terror, the effect of the 'drops of forgetfulness' and lash of flames from the Sacred Fire Dragon, Flash alarms Prince Barin and King Vulcan of the Sky City and united they save the day.

Tickets, $1 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door. For reservations, telephone 656-3418.

The final movie in the Lane Science Fiction Movies Series will be "The Fly," April 19.

University Trustees Involved In

by John Franco

The University of Vermont Board of Trustees had a $12,380,000 conflict of interest in Fiscal Year 1973. The conflict of interest involved $11,722,000 which UVM deposited in banks of which UVM Trustees were both directors and stockholders; UVM stock holdings of $408,399 in corporations of which trustees were directors and stockholders; and UVM stock holdings of $250,290 in corporation of which the business associates of UVM trustees were directors. The conflict of interest involved a loss of $20,600 for UVM, in the form of lost interest on bank deposits and inordinately high checking account balances. These same bank deposits and checking account balances, if for example were loaned out on car loans, would have made $571,663 in gross revenues for the two banks involved.

The University of Vermont is big business. It is not only run by big business in the interest of big business, but it is in its own right a big business. With annual expenditures of tens of millions of dollars, with a payroll which is the third largest in the state, with annual capital expansion programs involving millions of dollars, there are hundreds of thousands to be made off UVM. And many of the UVM Trustees, the representatives of Vermont's powerful vested interests, have made a bundle.

Banking

The trustees' conflicts of interest involves basically two areas, banking and endowment investments. It has been the banking from which most of the money has been made. The university, like any other corporation, has income it receives and bills it must pay. But the two do not occur at the same time.

For instance, at the start of each semester UVM is paid tuition money. But that money is to be used not only in the months of September and January, but to pay various expenses during the whole year. So the money has to be invested somewhere on a short-term basis. Simply put, it's got to go in the bank before it is spent. And here is where the trustees and their banks pick up a lot of money.

But the University is not like you or I. It has far greater resources than the average consumer, so its banking needs are a little different. The sums UVM deposits in the bank usually range from a quarter million to a million dollars, and this money is deposited for a very short period of time, usually a month. So UVM gets what are called Certificates of Deposit.

Certificates of Deposit are popularly advertised as "notice accounts," "90 day notice accounts," etc. The interest earned on Certificates of Deposit involving smaller sums, such as $500 to $1000 is regulated by federal law. But interest on Certificates of Deposit involving sums exceeding $100,000 is subject only to the negotiation of the depositor and the bank. The interest received on such accounts varies from time to time depending on the condition of money markets, and also varies for the length of time the money is deposited. UVM's Certificates almost always involve sums larger than $100,000, and thus are subject to bargaining with the bank.

It is with these Certificates of Deposit that the Chittenden and Howard Banks, and therefore their directors and stockholders, have made their money off UVM. Banks make their money by first attracting depositors who put thier money in the banks at certain interest rates, and by then loaning out that money at interest rates higher than those paid to its depositors. For instance, the Howard Bank made most of its money in 1973 from this kind of "interest differential." Therefore, the more money deposited with a bank, the more money the bank has upon which it can make money.

In Fiscal Year 1973 the University has 63 separate Certificates of Deposit with the Chittenden Trust Company and 18 Certificates with the Howard Bank. The sums deposited, as mentioned, ranged from $100,000 to over a million dollars, most of it invested on a monthly basis. The Certificates UVM held with the Chittenden Trust in 1973 amounted to $58,659,000 invested for one month. The time element of a month is very important because, roughly speaking, a half million deposited for two months is worth a million deposited for a month. In order to get a yearly figure, one has to compute these "dollar/months" into terms of "dollar/years." Thus, UVM's $58 million plus dollar/months are equivalent to 4,888,000 dollar/years. In plain English, UVM's deposits in the Chittenden were equivalent to $4,888,000 deposited for one year.

The University also had similar Certificates of Deposit with the Howard Bank. Though the number of Certificates held by UVM with the Howard were not nearly as numerous as those held with the Chittenden, they were deposited for much longer periods of time. And as the saying goes, especially with banking, time is money. UVM had 80,209,488 dollar/months with the Howard, or the equivalent of $6,684,124 dollars deposited for one year. The University's deposits with the Howard are especially important for that bank, and have composed a startling portion of the Howard's total Certificates of Deposit. In 1973 the Howard Bank had, according to its 1973 Annual Report for Financial Analysis, a daily average of $24,018,000 deposited in Certificates. For the second half of Fiscal 1973, UVM's daily deposit average with the Howard was $4,953,000. In other words, UVM's Certificates of Deposit with the Howard Bank amounted to 20 per cent of that bank's total!

The University, by putting its eggs in these two baskets, has not been necessarily getting the best deals it could. For the first three-quarters of Fiscal 1973 the interest rates obtained at the Chittenden and the Howard were generally commensurate with the prevailing rates, and in some cases were higher. But in the last quarter of fiscal '73, from March through June, the rates of Certificates of Deposit given to UVM by both the Chittenden and Howard were ½ per cent to 1 1/4 per cent lower than the prevailing rates as quoted in the Wall Street Journal. Because of these interest differentials, UVM lost $7,600 in interest to the Chittenden and $3,000 to the Howard, totaling $10,600 lost in interest in late 1973.

The huge sums the University deposits in these banks is only part of the picture. Virtually every nickel UVM spends ends up in the Chittenden and the Howard not only as bank deposits, but goes through again in the form of checking account balances. UVM pays, of course, by check. When a payment is due, when a payroll is to be met, money is taken from the Certificates of Deposit and placed in the checking accounts. UVM has its payroll account with the Chittenden and its checking account, which pays all other expenses, with the Howard. Money circulates, and "we want you to know how money works."

Both the Chittenden and the Howard are commercial bank. Unlike savings and loan associations, commercial banks are corporations which issue stock like any other corporation. Federal law regulates the interest rates commercial banks and savings and loan associations can pay on regular savings accounts. Because of the corporate nature of commercial banks, federal law allows savings and loans to give slightly high interest rates on savings accounts.

Thus the commercial banks rely heavily on checking accounts as a source of capital with which to operate. The checking account balances in the Chittenden are 95 per cent as large as the savings accounts. In the Howard, checking accounts are 85 per cent as large as savings. The critical advantage of these checking accounts is that the banks pay absolutely no interest to its depositors for them. The banks can then loan out the money at high interest, virtually at no cost. It is with checking accounts, especially with commercial banks like the Howard and Chittenden, that they make most of their gravy. It is for this reason that the UVM checking accounts are such plums for these banks.

UVM has been quite judicious with the spoils. For instance, for at least the nine months, July 1972 through March 1973, UVM carried a $100,000 balance in its payroll account at the Chittenden. This balance is not only inordinately high for any checking account, but especially so for the payroll account because the University knows ahead of time what its payroll expenses will be, and they are paid on a regular basis. The effect of this inordinate balance has been to loss $100,000 to the Chittenden to invest for nine months, free of charge, and to lose $4,500 in interest. (This would be an even greater loss if the balance lasted the whole year.)

In March 1973, the University carried a $900,000 balance in its Howard checking account. This gave the Howard a near-million to invest, while UVM lost $5,000 in interest just in the month of March. At this writing, it is not known whether this balance existed for the whole year. The balance certainly didn't fall to zero. If this balance did exist for the whole year then the University lost as much as $55,000 just on this checking account.

The banks, of course, take this money and reinvest it. If the Chittenden and the Howard loaned out its UVM money, that is the Certificate of Deposit sums and checking account balances, on car loans to people with top credit ratings, the Chittenden would have made $228,400 and the Howard nearly $343,200 in revenue. UVM gave up $8,400 in interest to the Howard, and $12,200 to the Chittenden in interest. In short, UVM lost at least $20,600 (and probably much more) to the Chittenden and Howard in interest while those banks in return made $571,600 in revenue off UVM money.

And what is even more outrageous about this is that the Howard Bank, according to its 1973 Annual Report for Financial Analysis, has paid no income taxes since 1969! Not a bad trick for a corporation with assets of $187 million.

Who Benefits?

As mentioned in previous articles of this series, the UVM Board of Trustees and administration are composed of vested interests, the most outstanding of these being the representatives of the Chittenden and Howard Banks. And as mentioned, President Andrews, Trustee Howard Allen, Development Vice President Barbara Snelling, and George Little, who was a trustee until February, are directors of the Chittenden, and were so in 1973. Trustees Fred Hackett and Tom Candon are one, a Howard Bank director, and the other a branch officer. Also among the other directors of these two banks are other former UVM presidents, trustees, and Vermont businessmen who have a wealth of interconnections.

Not only do these trustees and administration officials have a vested interest in manipulating UVM funds into their banks for the sake of the profitability of these banks as corporate entities, but they have, as stockholders in these banks, each a personal financial stake in that profitability. In short they have been in the position, as both trustees of UVM and as stockholders in these two banks, to operate UVM's finances in manners which result in their personal aggrandizement. The $571,663 made for these banks results in the appreciated value of their bank stock and in high dividends paid to them as stockholders.

The positions of public trust held by the trustees have been used for their self-aggrandizement. This is what is known as "conflict of interest." The following two charts list the stock holdings of the Chittenden and Howard directors as of their 1973 stockholders meetings. It should be mentioned that the Chittenden proxy statement was obtained as great effort. (The office of Chittenden President Hilton Wick specifically refused to have this information released to the Cynic. It was obtained from federal authorities.

UVM Trustee Allen held $150 thousand of Chittenden stock...

...while President Andrews held $1,000 of stock in the Chittenden.

This list of stock ownership shows that the profitability of the Chittenden and Howard banks involves high stakes as far as certain UVM. trustees are concerned. What this chart does not show is the amount of Chittenden stock held by Howard directors, nor vice versa. Nor does it show the stock ownership of Trustee Thomas Candon in the Howard, because he is not a Howard director, simply an officer. Nor does it show the stock that other trustees and administration officials own in these two banks; that is not public information.

UVM Stock Investments

That is the banking side of the picture. But there is another side. The University of Vermont has an endowment. Endowment is generally funds donated to the University for investment. It is a method by which the University picks up a little extra spending money, usually through stock dividends and appreciation. Because of its endowment, the University is a big investor – and thus also an additional source of capital for the corporations of UVM trustees. In Fiscal Year 1973 UVM trustees picked up over a half million dollars of this capital — $408,399 in direct conflicts of interest, and the business associates of UVM trustees picked up $250,290.

MacAusland Outline

by Barbara Frankel

Newly elected S.A. President, Peter MacAusland has several plans for the upcoming year. At present, MacAusland is investigating the proposed underpass on Main Street.

MacAusland was recently told by Richard Powers, Dean of Students, that his "credibility could be questioned if he did all the work and the tunnel still went through." MacAusland, however, has been receiving support from the student body to continue his investigation. He is tentatively planning a forum in late April in which administration members who support the tunnel and townspeople who oppose it could publicly air their differences.

MacAusland also hopes to form a student committee, possibly with some faculty input, which would act as an "effective means for students to compliment or complain about teachers." The committee, which would work through the S.A. Senate, would, first, try to smooth things out between the student and the teacher. If that was not possible, they would go to the Dean's office.

Additionally, MacAusland would like to add student input to the plans for the new addition to Gymnasium. "The he stated; "which mostly recreation will require studen higher athle MacAusland wan out if students ar pay the additional ...concerned. Not only do the corporations pick up additional capital which they can invest, but the sizable amount of UVM stock ownership in trustees' corporations helps to further appreciate the trustees' personal stock in those corporations. UVM ownership also has other advantages. Stockholders of a corporation elect the board of directors on the basis of one share, one vote. By having the University own a sizable number of shares, and by also sitting as trustees of UVM and thus controlling its stockholder vote, the trustees can maintain themselves and their associates as directors of their own corporations. The trustees can also choose not to have the University vote at stockholders meetings, which usually means in the business world that you are by default going along with the existing management. With UVM owning stocks, essential stock-votes are effectively put on ice by the cosmetic of "neutrality."

These possibilities in the case of UVM are by no means simply theoretical. UVM held in 1973 4,046 shares of the Chittenden bought for $64,250. UVM thus owned nearly one per cent of the Chittenden's voting shares – which in most stockholders meetings is a pretty big chunk. UVM plus the Chittenden directors controlled nearly 7 per cent of the Chittenden's voting shares – which in most corporations is enough to keep ones self on the board of directors. UVM held a whopping 3 per cent of the Howard's voting shares in 1973, and with the stockholders together controlled over 10 per cent of the voting stock, which is again by most precedent in the business world enough stock to keep oneself on the board of directors.

There is also an additional payoff for Wick, Andrews, Little, Hackett, Candon, and Company. By making UVM a stockholder in their corporations, they effectively blend the perspectives of the University with the perspectives of the Howard and the Chittenden. This becomes a very handy arrangement when it comes time to maintain the proper ideological climate on the campus, especially when that climate depends on the jobs of a few outspoken faculty members.

But the Chittenden and the Howard are by no means the only culprits. Trustee Luther Hackett held $20,900 of stock in the Howard Bank.

UVM held $181 thousand of stock in Trustee Burke's corporation.

The companies of the associates of the UVM Trustees also picked up UVM investment money. They include Vermont Hardware, Blodgett Supply Company, the Merchants Bank, the Health Insurance Company of Vermont, and the Government Employees Insurance Company. The sum of these investments, as listed below, amounted to $250,290. The company to pick up the largest piece was Government Employees Insurance with $156,000. As to the direct conflicts of interest, these indirect conflicts supply the corporations of friends and neighbors of UVM Trustees with much needed investment capital. The investment is pretty extensive. For example, UVM investments are put into two categories: that endowment which can be pooled, and that endowment which must be invested separately (separate investments.) In UVM's separate investments there are 11 corporations invested; 6 of those corporations, that is nearly one-half, are direct or indirect conflicts of interest.

Concluding Comments

In short, we see that the picture conveyed by UVM's public relations department, by This Week, and the administration and trustees is very different from the reality. The University would have us believe that the administration and trustees are skilled, dedicated, selfless servants with the interests of enlightenment and higher education in mind. We are told to believe that the trustees deserve their positions because they are the "best," the most qualified to perform the duties a trustee must fill. And fundamentally, we are coddled by sweet talk not to question the trustees' authority, are occasionally handed a crumb when that authority is in fact questioned, and too often expelled when it is actually challenged.

The reality is indeed far different. The trustees come from a tiny, powerful, fat, and, it seems, despotic section of society. Some call it vested interests, some call it the power elite, some call it the ruling class; choose your favorite. But UVM's trustees not only come from a small segment of the population, but are in fact friends and croneys, too often intimate acquaintances who travel in the same circles of privilege and influence.

They call themselves "the best qualified" when in fact they are an oligarchy uttering the same worn self-justifications that all ruling groups have used. They claim to be benefactors of the University and community when in fact it is their wealth that is left untouched by this "philanthropy." They appoint their associates to high positions in the University while pretending that it is high qualification that wins them the jobs. But finally, they contend they must rule UVM because there is so much money to manage, when in fact that money is "managed" into the right banks and corporations making the "right" profits for the "right" people. It is this stark contradiction between the prevailing mythology and the grim reality that has, in this writer's mind, warranted the theme of this series "Watergate in Waterman."

MacAusland Outlines Plans For Year

by Barbara Frankel

Newly elected S.A. President, Peter MacAusland has several plans for the upcoming year. At present, MacAusland is investigating the proposed underpass on Main Street.

MacAusland was recently told by Richard Powers, Dean of Students, that his "credibility could be questioned if he did all the work and the tunnel still went through." MacAusland, however, has been receiving support from the student body to continue his investigation. He is tentatively planning a forum in late April in which administration members who support the tunnel and townspeople who oppose it could publicly air their differences.

MacAusland also hopes to form a student committee, possibly with some faculty input, which would act as an "effective means for students to compliment or complain about teachers." The committee, which would work through the S.A. Senate, would, first, try to smooth things out between the student and the teacher. If that was not possible, they would go to the Dean's office.

Additionally, MacAusland would like to add student input to the plans for the new addition to Patrick Gymnasium. "The addition," he stated, "which will have mostly recreational facilities, will require students to pay a higher athletic fee." MacAusland wants to find out if students are willing to pay the additional money.

Should the S.A. finance athletic teams? The LaCrosse club has asked for $3000 of S.A. funds. At this time, MacAusland feels the best solution would be to have the S.A. sponsor the club on a short-term basis, with the understanding that the Athletic department reimburse the Student Association in a few years.

MacAusland is looking into the new SAGA food coupon plan. He is worried that the coupons, which give students with meal tickets greater accessability to the Den, will overcrowd Billings and make things more difficult for off-campus students.

"I have been in constant contact with Waterman," commented MacAusland. "I am now learning the proper channels to go through to get things accomplished at this University."

MacAusland has appointed Donna Vershay, a freshman from Snyder, New York as S.A. Treasurer. Chris Milaneal, a sophomore from Chester, Vermont will remain as Secretary of Elections, while Pat Black, a junior from Amherst, New Hampshire will become Secretary of Student Activities.

Jim Breece, a freshman from Yardley, Pennsylvania, will be Secretary of Communications.

Three-Day Women's Forum Addresses "Roles For Transition"

by Melanie Choukas

A host of women (and some men too!) will participate in an exciting three-day forum presented by the UVM Women's Caucus next week. The forum, entitled "Roles in Transition," is a vast effort to address a vast topic – what it means to be an active modern woman.

Teachers, administrators, students, physicians, psychologists and others will conduct a series of informed workshops from Tuesday to Thursday, April 16 – 18, which all are invited to attend. Workshop topics range from health to art.

U.S. Congresswoman Elizabeth Holtzman of New York is the featured speaker of the forum. Ms. Holtzman, reknowned for filing suit against the U.S. bombing of Cambodia, is the youngest woman ever elected to Congress. She will speak in Ira Allen Chapel April 18 at 8:30 p.m.

Jennifer Cover, oral interpretation artist and Communications and Theatre instructor at UVM, will lead an informal performance and discussion of women in literature Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in North Lounge, Billings. Ms. Cover and three of her students will orally interpret female characters from the works of Shaw, Tennessee Williams, Robert Frost, and others.

Immediately following the interpretations, a multi-media presentation entitled "The Medusa – a Theatre Piece" will be given by Robin Lloyd and Doreen Kraft. The piece depicts womankind from the mythological past until the present.

First in the series of workshops is "The Undergraduate: Where to go for Help and Support." From 9 a.m. until noon on Tuesday, a panel of three (Dean Jan Folta of Arts and Sciences, Nancy Magnus, Counseling and Testing, and Edith Deck, a professional nurse) will address the needs of undergraduate women at UVM. The workshop is in North Lounge. Undergraduate women are urged to attend with their questions.

"The Myths of Women's Health" is the next slated workshop topic. On Wednesday, also in North Lounge from 9 until noon, Dr. Emma Wennberg of the Vermont Women's Health Center will lead a panel of six in a discussion about women and their bodies.

Dr. Wennberg feels that many modern women are still victims of old myths and fears.

A "Women's Educational Fair" will run Wednesday from 11 a.m. – 4:30 p.m. in Memorial Lounge, Waterman. Women interested in graduate and undergraduate opportunities at UVM will be able to attain information and advice.

The forum will include financial aid advising and information for older women wishing to continue their education.

Wednesday night at 8 p.m. in Marsh Lounge, a workshop with the theme title of the forum, "Roles in Transition," will get underway.

Judy Samuels of the Vermont Institution of Community Involvement ("VICI") and Connie Albee of Trinity will join Johannes Troost, UVM grad student in leading a discussion about the changing roles of women.

The final forum workshop "After Graduation... Employment Realities and Practical Experiences" will take place Thursday from 9 until noon.

Sharon Frink of VPIRG will moderate a panel of four: Sister Camdon, President of Trinity College, Mary Skinner, director of Montpelier legal aid, Kay Schmucker, UVM psychologist, and Larry Simmons, Director of Placement at UVM.

The panel will discuss professional possibilities for women. They will also talk about the Equal Rights Amendment and what it will mean to women seeking employment.

This workshop will continue with two women of the UVM faculty, (Linda Rood of the psychology department, and Edith Henley, assistant professor physiology and biophysics). Ms. Rood and Ms. Henley will discuss what happens to women after they get jobs.

The forum will conclude with the lecture by Congresswoman Elizabeth Holtzman. Ms. Holtzman is sponsored by the S.A. Speaker's Bureau.

Jerry Bellush, a student and member of the Women's Caucus has headed the organization of the forum.

SAGA Attempts To Obtain UFW Lettuce

by Randy Janson

Fred Smith, director of SAGA, was approached by the UVM student part of the Vermont Farm Workers Support Committee (VFWSC) on the possibility of using United Farm Worker's (UFW) lettuce in UVM's cafeteria. Difficulties and information about UFW's lettuce were discussed by VFWSC and Fred Smith.

UVM's lettuce is picked by the independent farm workers in California and Arizona and belong to the AFL-CIO Union. Most other lettuce is picked by non-Union workers or the Teamster Union.

A big headache if the availability of UFW's lettuce. Of the 10-25 cars per day of non-UFW lettuce comes in, only 4-5 cars per week of UFW arrives from the west. According to a local produce dealer, UFW lettuce is not as fresh as the other, because Teamster workers refuse to unload the non-Teamster lettuce. Local marketers must hire non-Teamster workers so there is a delay in getting the lettuce out to market.

Besides low availability, UFW lettuce is higher in price by about $.50 – $1.00 a box on the Boston Market and $2 – $3 a box on the Albany Market. The only person who receives UFW lettuce in the Burlington area is Larry Kupferman of the Onion River Food Co-op, who sells it for $5.50 a box. SAGA currently pays $3.00 a box for its lettuce.

The VFWSC presented Fred Smith with 1100 signatures from meal ticket holders (about 25 percent). The petition stated that the students would prefer to have UFW lettuce or do without lettuce altogether.

Smith says he is willing to use UFW lettuce, but with certain specifications. He maintains that he can't cause SAGA to spend more money. He urged that students be willing to accept other kinds of lettuce which might be needed to fill SAGA's demand (if enough UFW lettuce isn't available).

SAGA is going to attempt to obtain UFW lettuce and try it out for a few weeks.

Carter Addresses Media's Changing Role

by Pamela Hogarth

On Wednesday, April 3, the ACE program presented Val Carter, radio announcer for WDOT, Burlington. Carter spoke of his experiences with the media and what he felt was the role of the media today.

Carter began by saying that in the last ten years there have been numerous changes in the people involved in radio – in their moral views and language. Many people, he felt, have trouble adjusting to these younger styles.

The greatest role of the media is to serve the public Carter stated. He would like to see more objectivity in the media. "Oftentimes," Carter informed, "a newspaper will create a story, someone will contradict it, and nothing more is ever heard about the issue." People are willing to accept what the media presents because they feel it is the media's responsibility to know.

Carter would like to see the media follow up stories and print punishment as well as the front page crime stories. He felt the media has a responsibility of showing the end product of, for example, the vivid, graphic displays of the hassels a drug addict encounters.

Expressing his views of the media and politics, Carter thought that the press can make someone look good or bad depending on the questions asked. "Politics on the lowest level has its little games and money has great influence," he stated.

As in the Watergate situation Carter felt alot of people in media are out to make money only. "Nixon is being tried by the press," he stated, "and not by the proper methods." Carter thought the government news should be given from the government's view and all states should have a station where the government could talk to the people. This however should not interfere with the regular local news he stated. He questions why people believe politicians are always the dishonest ones and not the newsmen.

Carter discussed a few other problems the media faces. One of these problems was a method called subliminal advertising where pictures are flashed so quickly on the television screen that one cannot see them, but your mind retains the information. Another issue he talked about was that people or companies may hold interest in more than one AM radio station or television station. At the present time one can have control in five or six stations which could have frighteningly potential power.

Val Carter actually got an accidental start in media which began in Ithaca, then Syracuse, and finally Burlington. When Carter came to Burlington in 1946, WCAX was the only radio station in the city and was associated with the University.

After spending seven years with WJOY Carter started WDOT on April 19, 1954 and was the first pop formulated station in the area. Burlington, however, was still rather stoic, he stated, and people revelled against this new form of radio show. At Daytona, Florida, Carter met Walter Cronkite while they were both working on forming a radio station.

Carter finished by stating there is a crying need for people in media, especially in the advertising field.

"Unfortunately," Carter stated, "media is controlled by money and what it can do depends on the amount of money available." He also felt the sad fact that people are changing their attitudes toward one another. He said they seem only concerned in the tiny sphere which they have influence over.

Realistically media is a money making business according to Carter. Unless this changes he feels media will not really be totally a community service.

Vietnam Veterans Still Fight Against War

by Wyatt Kash

It was an extraordinary spectacle to behold. Indeed, no spectator could possibly have witnessed the mass of humanity which blanketed the university green without experiencing a spontaneous sense of pride and exhilaration which evolved from participating in the first of the 1969 moritorium movements against the war.

In what turned out to be one of the largest demonstrations for peace in Vermont, the October 15 rally ignited a growing discontent with the U.S. support of an undeclared war.

One month later, the culmination of an unprecedented state effort found twenty of Vermont's leading citizens, including three corporation presidents, four college presidents, Lieutenant Governor Thomas Hayes and twelve others aboard a chartered plane bound for Washington, D. C.

Vermonters came from all over the state right behind to join thousands of others in what was to become the largest demonstration for peace (and one of the finest examples of American dissention) in the history of this country. The unity of peoples' discontent established that November 14 and 15 that the sentiment against the war was not maintained solely by the young and the radical.

But not long after so dramatic a display of public opinion, the movement on the college campus began to lose momentum and much of the concern over issues that once were enough to prompt student strikes gradually faded into the past. What remains now of that spirited wave of conviction are frustrated ripples in an even greater sea of discontent with the Nixon administration.

In the meantime, the Paris peace agreement has served no more than to sweep the war under the rug. And let's face it, not even wall to wall carpeting can hide the fact that the issues at hand during the late sixties, which were seemingly resolved by the Peace Agreements, have only evolved into a new set of more complex issues.

But of the few remaining anti-war groups, one of those ripples has started to well into a solid new wave of momentum. It seems ironically fitting that its source is the veterans of Vietnam themselves.

The Vietnam Veterans Against the War began in New York City in 1967 when six anti-war veterans marched beneath the banner "Vietnam Veterans Against the War" during one of the city's first anti-war demonstrations. By 1970, VVAW had become a national concern. In mid-winter 1971, Detroit became the scene of 150 veteran testimonies about war-crimes that had been committed with regard to Lt. Calley's trial. The investigation- known as the Winter Soldier Investigation- brought out clearly the fact "My Lai was not an aberration but the calculated result of American imperialistic policy."

Their continuing work in lobbying, going into communities, taking part in both the Democratic and the Republican conventions, and their show of seriousness of intent (Christmas 1971 found the Statue of Liberty held captive by 16 VVAW members) gave VVAW a strength few national organizations acquire. With the addition of the Winter Soldier Organization, the VVAW/WSO now has a membership of 40,000.

In an interview with veteran Dave Ross who represents the New England region for VVAW/WSO in Burlington related a brief history of the VVAW. Mr. Ross emphasized that "...The most basic and important participant in the operation of VVAW/WSO is the individual member." The member's view is represented through local, regional and national coordinators through democratic elections. One of the VVAW/WSO issues of major importance is the advocation of a Universal Unconditional Nonpunitive Amnesty, which is an attempt to upgrade all less-than-honorable discharge to one single type, to give amnesty to deserters and to expunge all records. It is premised on several factors. First, the brass receives a de facto amnesty for most of the war crimes they commit (save the occasional scapegoat such as Lt. Calley) and indeed they have committed many. Deliberate targeting of civilian hospitals, widespread use of torture and abuse of prisoners, use of chemical defoliants and other toxic chemicals and the illegal relocation of civilians are all direct violations of the Geneva Accords and the Neremburg Trial provisions. Secondly, said Ross, "It is a simple matter of moral responsibility not to commit war crime. The VVAW/WSO feels that this is valid reason for all concerned to have the right to amnesty.

With the exception of 1968 and 1971, more people died last year than any other year in the war. For the fiscal year of 1974, the United States will be supplying $1.6 billion in aid; $1.4 billion for the military and $19.5 million in aid for the police. Without this aid, the regime of Nguyen Van Thieu would collapse. Elections have still not been held and probably won't be as long as we keep having our money pumped in there...for it is well known that the results would outstandingly support the Provisional Revolutionary Government and this after all the lives that have been lost, after all the money that has been spent would be a slap in the face that the past three administrations might not be able to take.

VVAW/WSO objectives are straight forward enough. They call for immediate cessation of fighting in Indochina, immediate termination of all other government and business operations designed to repress the struggle for liberty and self determination and for reparations in an acceptable program to the Indochinese for all damages done. While the VVAW/WSO is also working for provision of their constitutional rights not now afforded them under the Uniform Code of Military Justice, for equal treatment of all races and to both sexes, and for more appropriate VA aid, the objective for implementation of the Peace Treaty Agreement and to give the Indochinese the right to decide for themselves is an objective that should not be considered unique to an organization such as VVAW/WSO, but one that should be common to all of us who cherish our own freedom.

As the interview slowly transformed into a conversation, one characteristic seemed to stand out about VVAW/WSO ...the dedicated conviction, the personal kind as opposed to the bureaucratic strain which was reflected in a final thought, "If people will get off their ass and work for what they believe, democracy would live up to its meaning instead of its myth."

A&S Symposium

"Decade Of Disjuncture, 1910-1920"

by Rick Steinberg

On Tuesday, April 16, the third annual University of Vermont College of Arts and Sciences Spring Symposium will open. This year's theme is "A Decade of Disjuncture, 1910–1920." Past symposiums have dealt with Copernicus and Newton. There will be four separate sessions to be held on April 16, 23, 25, and 30.

The programs are being coordinated by Dr. H. J. Steffens of the History Department. Steffens believes that the symposium will present an occasion for students to hear professors from several departments speak on a common topic. It will bring together professors from the zoology, physics, history, religion, philosophy, art, and music departments. Steffens feels the symposium will also provide an opportunity for professors from various departments to get together.

The symposium is designed for non-specialists and is open to all. The talks will not be technical and will be geared toward the layperson.

The four sessions will be divided into four general areas dealing with the overall theme. The first session on April 16 will be concerned with science. Talks will be presented by Professor Howard Rothstein (Zoology), Professor Dan Cohen (Physics) and Professor Henry Steffens (History).

The second session on April 23 will look at philosophy and religion within the "decade of disjuncture." Speaking to this point will be Professor Luther Martin (Religion), Professor Alan Paskow (Philosophy), and Professor William Paden (Religion).

On April 25, two history professors, Robert Daniels and Peter Seybolt, will address themselves to social change, 1910–1920.

The final session on April 30 will deal with the arts. Speaking on the subject will be Professor Nina Parris (Art), and Professor Thomas L. Read (Music). In conjunction with Read's talk, music will be performed.

The symposium will be held on the aforementioned dates in Memorial Lounge in Waterman from 3:00–5:30. Refreshments will be offered.

Senate Adjourns Early-No Quorum

by Bruce Maddem

No official action was taken at this week's Senate meeting because there was no quorum. Informative discussions were heard from Peter MacAusland on the proposed tunnel, the addition to the gym, and a university calendar for '75 – '76.

MacAusland, the new SA president, told the senators of his recent work on preventing construction of the tunnel. He said that he had meetings with architects, engineers, and students which supported his opinion. He hopes to make a presentation to the Board of Trustees at their April meeting.

He also stated that a spokesperson from the Dean of Students office would be at the next meeting. Calendar proposals for '75 – '76 are now being planned and he asked that the Senate take action on the proposals made by the administration.

Dan Haslam, student representative to the Board of Trustees Development Committee, spoke on two proposals he will make to the Board of Trustees. They concerned student input into the development office and the creation of student liasons with the development office to help inform students of what that office is doing.

Alan King, Fiji senator, told the Senate of various proposals he had to help clear up problems with financial policy in the S.A. Chiefly, they were aimed at dividing SA organizations into categories to help make allocations easier. Under new business he offered a motion that senators be given free passes to Concert Bureau events if they maintained good attendance.

The meeting concluded at 8:15.

by Mike Schwartz

It is not often that I would like to comment on professional sports since the aim of this weekly column has been the college scene at UVM, but the recent events of this past week are an obvious area to comment on.

Henry Aaron has finally received all the publicity that he might ever want during his lifetime. Henry Aaron has tied the once unbreakable record of Babe Ruth as he banged number 714 over the left field wall in Cincinnatti in his first time up.

But during this buildup to the record tieing clout, Aaron has become part of the ever increasing commercialization of sports. Not only has Aaron corralled a five year promotional contract with Magnavox television that makes his salary higher than the president of that company, but the furor over when and where he should play is part of this business orientation.

The commissioner of baseball has dictated where Aaron should play, namely two of three opening games before his team, the Atlanta Braves, goes home for a long home stand. Of course, the Braves would rather Aaron play at home so that they can get a full house. As Aaron himself has said, he is the only thing the team has going and they might as well take advantage of it. Indeed, probably after the Braves hit 715, Atlanta will find it hard to draw fans.

The way the commissioner has had to jump in and issue an edict does not seem to be the way to handle the problem. The decision should be left up to the manager as to whether or not Aaron plays. The fighting between the team and the commissioner tarnishes the image of a man who has made a name for himself in baseball without a great charismatic charm in the manner of Mays or Mantle. It seemed a good idea to play Aaron in Cincinnatti at least once and the pressure from the higher office was not needed. For Atlanta, home run number 715 at home would probably be the only thing to cheer about all season. They at least deserve that. It is a pity that the commercialization has hurt the respectable image of a great ballplayer.

Another topic that has been brought to my attention is the women sports reporter. This past week I filled out a questionnaire from another college as to the policy concerning women reporters at UVM. To my surprise I realize that the Cynic really doesn't have a woman sports reporter. Although the sports department has a working agreement with the women's athletic department to have someone write an article, no one has covered any major male varsity sports. One of these girls has been asked if she wanted to cover any other sports but she declined due to her already heavy schedule.

But what goes without saying is that any girl who feels she has a good writing style and enough knowledge about sports is welcome to write. Although I receive phone calls here and there from males I have yet to get one from a girl. Indeed, the columns of the Cynic are open to anyone who wishes to write, even if it is about the male football team. It is quite possible that a woman would probably be a better writer than many of the males already on the staff. One can only know if they try to find out. There is a place for a capable female sports reporter. As a side note, a glance at a recent New York Times sports section revealed a whole page devoted to women's sports. They did not have one article on this page written by a woman.

Since the writing of the above, Henry Aaron has hit number 715. He now ranks as a living immortal and a folk hero of baseball. He is deserving of the fame and the gratitude which he shows an appreciation for, that is seldom seen in sports. Just to see an opposing second baseman or shortstop shake your hand as you circle the bases is a sight to behold in sport. It was too bad that this pure image of achievement in sport was somewhat tarnished by the fighting and bickering preceding the momentous occasion.

Baseball Opener Washed Out

by Mark Teirstein

After back-to-back rainouts with Norwich and Castleton State, the UVM Club Baseball team will try to open its inaugural season with a doubleheader at St. Lawrence University, Saturday. When the UVM lead-off hitter steps into the batter's box, it will mark the first time that the Catamounts have played inter-collegiate baseball since the sport was cut from the budget, four years ago.

With the possible exception of some of the freshmen who may have played high school ball last year, most of UVM's players have been away from organized baseball for several years. This would probably affect their hitting more than their fielding. For the precise timing and split second judgment that is so essential to a good batter, he must face challenging pitching and keep practicing. The players who have not faced live pitching recently may have difficulty adjusting.

"We will concentrate on basic plays," said head coach John Stanton. "Solid defense and lots of running and hustle – that's a winning formula." He expects the toughest opponents to be St. Michaels, Siena, St. Lawrence, and "probably Norwich because they are all veterans." All of last year's Cadet players are back again.

Playing time for the Cats is the most important consideration in this spring campaign. "Next fall we will probably do better," said Stanton, "because we will have more experience." This spring there will be only two "veterans" on the squad. Catcher Scott Simmel and first baseman Paul Vey, now seniors, played on UVM's last baseball team, during their freshman year.

The first home game is scheduled for Monday, April 15, when the Catamounts will host Castleton State at Centennial Field.

competing for the honors including Cornell, UNH, Penn State, Plattsburgh and Skidmore.

This year there were eight categories. The competition began Friday night with the Beginner Small Group category in which UVM captured fourth place. Each routine was judged based on its style (taking into account costumes, title and appropriateness of music to the title) and execution (the degree of perfection of the routine).

Vermont took seventh place in the Beginner Large Group category, eighth in the Intermediate Duets, eighth in the Intermediate Group, seventh in the Advanced Solos, and fourth in Mixed Groups.

In the final team results Geneseo State finished first. UVM collected enough points for a seventh place finish.

If you have never seen a synchronized swim competition or show, the chance will come on April 18-20. Details are to be found in the announcement on this page.

Cross Presents His Views ...

had these comments: "I usually try to recruit four or five real good players each year and this is no exception." He noted a couple of recruits he has landed including Bill Koch's brother, Randy and Chuck Ross, a native Vermonter. Some others have yet to make committments.

Cross never pressures potential talent into making quick decisions or any decision at all. "The kid has to like the school, the area, and the kids he's going to be teamed with." He added that recruits try to keep track of Vermont's hockey program over the year and want to know who else is coming to Vermont to play.

The question of scholarships or lack thereof, does not faze the Coach. Few players have gone elsewhere because they could get more money. Although some Division I teams receive as many as six to nine scholarships per year (24 in all), Cross concluded, "At Vermont, 11 have received financial aid this year. 14 didn't receive any, and nobody here has gotten a full ride."

This brings us to the final highlight of the evening. Commercialism in college was discussed, though rather briefly. It became a fad a couple of years ago for fraternities to advertise post-game bashes on the Zamboni. This past season a new wrinkle was introduced when the Howard Bank turned the trick by placing catch ads on the Zamboni walls for quite a price.

Gripes about the new commercialism in the sport of hockey as with the above, were voiced in the media. Hockey cannot support itself and at UVM it helps support other sports programs. Coach Cross defended the advertisements. "We need all the help we can get and it's right out there waiting. The revenue received from that small lot of publicity could mean financial aid for a talented hockey player who normally could not get it."

The Friends of UVM Hockey administer the money raising ventures and have done a good job at it. They also plan to install slots for ads on the new scoreboard they are building. The Friends' judgments and efforts have been worthwhile to hockey in the past and will continue to be in the future.

Coach Cross should be lauded for the fact and talent that he exhibited as a speaker and also for his success as the UVM hockey coach.

Lacrosse Club Loses Two

"Sure I'm disappointed," replied one member of UVM's new lacrosse team following last Saturday's loss to St. Mike's. "That's only natural. Everyone likes to win," he continued, "but, I'm also satisfied. Hell, I had fun; it was a good time – a little chilly but good. Besides, the UVMer concluded, "I'd be asking for a one-way ticket to the nut house if I'd only be happy with a win." Along with the rest of his team the tired lacrosse player continued stomping down the chunks of mud and grass torn up from the Southwick field during that afternoon's wet game while he explained that he'd certainly go insane with disappointment if he expected an undefeated season. "This is a brand new team," he reasoned, "and new teams take a while to get it together. I mean, you can have nothing but ringers like Humphries and Sheketof, Blumberg and Basil over there, but it's still going to take a year or more to build up a team that works well together. So the best thing to do on a new team is try like hell, but enjoy yourself and not get down on losing."

It's fortunate that UVM's lacrosse club has taken a mature approach to losing. In Saturday's opener a small, coordinated squad from Saint Mike's beat UVM by two points, 7-5, but only after trailing UVM in the first part of the game and deciding that winning wasn't going to come easily. UVM fought hard and made an impressive show of potential strength before a hundred or so freezing spectators who, despite the cold, seemed to enjoy watching the hard-hitting action as much as UVM claims to have enjoyed participating in it.

Two days later on an even frostier Monday, another good crowd witnessed the crack Castleton Varsity put away three quick goals in the first few minutes of play. Undaunted and handicapped by injuries from Saturday's game, UVM managed to hold Castleton to a total score of 14 – no small feat considering Castleton's high ranking in the New England Lacrosse league – as well as tally two points of its own (for a 14 to 2 game). Spirits were high despite frozen toes and multiple goals, and one Castleton defenseman reportedly complimented UVM on its determined play. According to that defenseman, it has taken Castleton five years to make it big in lacrosse, with the first two years, as he put it, "chalked up to experience."

Spring Football Practice Starts

...."Our main objective this spring will be to establish an effective running game and work thoroughly on fundamentals and individual techniques," said University of Vermont football coach, Carl Falivene, as the Catamounts prepare for the opening of the spring football session, April 15. The workouts will continue (four practices a week) until the annual alumni-varsity game, May 4, at Centennial Field (1 p.m.).

....Forty-nine candidates are currently on the varsity prespring roster, led by captain-elect for 1974, Bob Weiler. Weiler heads 22 lettermen returning for spring drills.

...."We expect to practice Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays right up until May 4," said Falivene. "If that warm weather comes in soon, then we expect to accomplish a

Cross Talks At ACE Program

by Charlie Grace

On Wednesday evening, April 3, Jim Cross, Vermont Hockey Coach, spoke to students about the Catamount hockey fortunes of the past and future. His talk, held in the MAT Lounge was sponsored by the ACE in the Hall program.

About 15 interested students and a few adults attended. After a brief introduction, Coach Cross opened the floor for an hour of questions and answers. Among the topics were talent not recruited by Cross, summer hockey schools, the "B" hockey team next year, the proposed scoreboard, and the new seating plan. But the most timely comments dealt with scheduling, recruiting, and commercialism.

On scheduling, Cross stated that the Notre Dame hockey team will not play the Cats next season. The Irish are in the middle of a personnel change on their hockey staff. "Although we are very anxious to play them they have been cool to us in our contacts with them." Cross voiced hopes that the two schools can get together in the future.

Even in the East scheduling problems have tainted the team in its move to the Division I. Cross revealed, "B.C. won't play us yet, neither will Brown and Yale. And after several years, Cornell and Dartmouth are considering playing us." Mr. Cross revealed the attitude of many E.C.A.C. coaches in telling this short anecdote; "When asked if he would like to arrange a game with Vermont, the B.C. coach said that the seven hour bus trip each way was too long for his kids. After it was pointed out that Burlington is only a four and a half hour ride from Boston, the coach replied, "Well, it's still too far.""

The tight-knit Ivy League and other eastern schools have had to use similar ridiculous excuses. These teams would rather fill their schedule with pick-up games as with Dartmouth scheduling Norwich. Said Cross, "That's why Harvard played us three years ago." It will be a while before every major college team will play UVM. Next year the schedule features four games against Western Conference teams, two each against Wisconsin and St. Louis and 15 Division I games. The hockey program here does have committments to Division II teams, especially state rivals Middlebury and Norwich. Cross disclosed plans for nine Division II games next season. Colby and Merrimack are not included on the schedule.

Coach Cross spent time speaking about new proposals for leagues in the E.C.A.C. He said it would still be a few years before plans could begin for a Yankee Conference league. "Maine and Rhode Island are still several years away from fielding Division I teams," he stated. He moved on, noting last year's proposal for new scheduling and sectioning of E.C.A.C. Division I hockey. There would be three sections, a northern league, a southern league, and the Ivy league. Vermont would be part of the northern league with St. Lawrence, Colgate, Clarkson and others. Boston area teams would comprise most of the southern league. The Ivy league would have the traditional schools. Teams in the same section would be required to play each other twice during the season. Single games would be arranged among those teams not in the same section. Cross stated, "This could mean an automatic 20 Division I schedule for Vermont. We like this very much. Intersectional games would make a requirement that each team play every other team in the East at least once." Cross then explained a very complicated playoff system. No matter how complicated the idea, the Ivy league threw the proposal out the window and into the North Atlantic ocean last week.

Coach Cross said that the Ivy league rejected the ideas for revised schedules and tournaments in a discussion with this reporter a few days after the MAT talk. Although it is still too early to decipher the motives of the Ivy league coaches, it is an indication that UVM will continue to have problems scheduling Ivy opponents.

On recruiting, the coach talked about how he scouts talent. The hockey mentor (continued on page thirteen)

Tubbs Enlivens Hockey Banquet

by Fred Coombs

The second annual Friends of UVM Hockey banquet was held in Simpson Hall, on Saturday night. An open bar got the overdressed "Friends" loosened up. A surprisingly fine spread by SAGA and Tri Delta sorority's winsome waitresses helped kill the cafeteria atmosphere along with some dynamite decorations. In no time at all, the group began to get giggly, setting the stage for the Elliot Tubbs Jr. Show.

Elliot, sometimes called "Eli" or "E" looked smart in his "Gatsby" look and Caribbean tan obtained in South Carolina. He won the hearts of all the girls with his devilish grin and cute quips about life with the team. Eli also took home the Horses Award for the second straight year. If he wasn't graduating, he probably would retire the trophy next year.

Willie MacKinnon received the Most Valuable Player Award from the Friends and a special presentation was made to Charlie Catamount (Kevin Reese) for his valuable contribution over the past couple of years.

The seniors were honored as Ted Castle, Ted Child, John Kiely, MacKinnon, Chris Miller and Whit Watts picked up trinkets for their good work over the past four years. The all-ECAC Division II team was announced as UVM placed four on the first team. Ted Castle, Willie MacKinnon, Tim O'Connell and John Murphy were named to this team.

Movies of the playoffs were shown and plans for a new seating arrangement on the sides, new compressors to allow year round ice, and a new pro-type scoreboard were also announced. Coach Jim Cross will be going to Finland this week to watch the World Class A Hockey Tournament and perhaps steal some new ideas. The Vermont team is noted for the use of the Russian type power play. Cross plans on watching how the foreign teams conduct practices to gain some new ideas.

Still to come is the breakup dinner where more awards will be presented and next year's captain will be introduced.

EISA Team Announced

...Late last week, Vermont coach, Chip LeCaine, President of the Eastern Intercollegiate Ski Association, announced the selections for the 1974 EISA team. Five of them were from Vermont, six from Middlebury and Dartmouth each, two from St. Lawrence and one from Harvard. The team follows: First team Alpine – John Macomber of Dartmouth; John Jacobs and Rod Bicknell of Middlebury; Ben Steele of Harvard and Brian Vorse of St. Lawrence. Nordic – Peter Kongsli and Trygve Roiseth of Vermont; Doug Peterson of Dartmouth and Brent McDougal and Dave Lantz (nordic combined) of Middlebury. Second team, Alpine – Peter Anderson of Dartmouth; Dick Erdman and Chris Brown of Vermont; Peter Ord of Middlebury and Mike McGlynn of St. Lawrence. Nordic – Chris Nice, Don Nielsen and Arne Nielsen of Dartmouth; Greg Ward of Middlebury and Tom Lantz of Vermont.

...The lone All-American selected from Vermont was alpiner Dick Erdman of East Dorset, Vt. Erdman was the only Easterner picked to the first team. John Macomber and Arne Nielsen, both of Dartmouth, were honorable mention selectees.

Two Students Pick UVM For Basketball

...Head basketball coach, Peter Salzberg, has announced that two players have signed up to enroll at Vermont this fall. The two are Kevin Kelly, a 6–7 forward from Westmont, N.J. and Bill De'ney a 6–4 guard from Providence, R.I., "We are very happy with their decision to attend Vermont. They are the type of players we need to be contenders in the Yankee Conference," said Salzberg. Kelly, a senior at Haddon Township High School, scored over 1,000 points (1,073) in his high school career, averaging 19.8 points and 13 rebounds a game his senior year. His club finished at 21–5 and Kelly was named to the New Jersey All-South team. Delaney, who will enroll in pre-med this fall was the backcourt leader of the LaSalle Academy team that finished at 22–4. Kelly averaged 15 points and 10 rebounds a game. Over the last two years, LaSalle recorded 49 wins against only seven losses. Salzberg is expected to announce more signees in the next few weeks.

Net Season Begins

A young University of Vermont tennis team opens its 1974 spring season hosting a veteran Middlebury squad, April 10, at the Gutterson Fieldhouse indoor courts, beginning at 2 p.m. Led by captain Bob Merritt, the Catamount netmen only have three players that can be classified as "experienced college players," Tom Lenci, Peter MacAusland and Merritt. Vermont Plays Indoor Soccer

by Mike Schwartz

The Vermont soccer team played in an unusual tournament this past weekend. The Cats finished second to the host Plattsburgh State team in the Plattsburgh Invitational Box (Indoor) Soccer Tournament last Saturday.

The rules of the game are altered in this unusual form of soccer. The games were played in the Plattsburgh fieldhouse on a rubberized surface. The dimensions of the field were 60 yards by 40 yards. Each game was thirty minutes long with a five minute overtime period if the games were tied after regulation. If the game was still tied, penalty kicks would be used. The teams were limited to five players and the goalie. The goal itself is much smaller and some rule changes included the use of a pass in instead of a corner kick. Passing becomes more important due to the smaller field. The whole tournament was played in one day and the action started at 12:30 and didn't end for the Cats until 10 p.m.

The Cats lost the first game to Plattsburgh "A" by 3–1 and then went through the losers bracket until losing again to Plattsburgh in the finals by 3–2 on penalty kicks. In winning all their lower games to make the championship, the Cats beat St. Lawrence "B" 3–2, St. Michael's 2–1, Oneonta 1–0, and Plattsburgh "B" 3–1. Oneonta in the outdoor fall season had made it to the NCAA college division tournament before bowing to Eastern power Hartwick. An indication of the enjoyment of this tournament came from Vermont wing, Bob Buzzell, who said that he really got to know the players better than during the season and expressed an interest in this new form of soccer. The UVM performance shows the excitement the indoor soccer tournament brought out.

Field Events Look Best In Track Opener

The outdoor track season opened this past week for the University of Vermont team. Although they performed well in field events the Catamounts were defeated by a strong Springfield College squad by 101–53.

The Cats picked up four first place finishes in the field but only one on the track. Jeff Lindgren won the high jump with a 6'2" jump. Steve Lynch finished second. In the pole vault Mark Iverson took up where he left off in the indoor season as he jumped 13'6" to capture first place. Mike Bilza captured the shotput with a toss of 48'2" and finished second in the hammer throw. Co-captain Devon Craig threw the javelin 194' to finish first.

In the field events the Cats showed promise in the 220 yard dash. Jeff Burke won the event in a time of 23.1 seconds with Tom Harrington finishing second. Harrington also finished third in the 100 yard dash behind two Springfield runners. Co-Captain Mike Berry placed third in the mile and second in the 880 run. McCann captured the mile for Springfield in a time of 4:23.2.

For the Cats the big names seem to be Bilza, Iverson, and Berry. What is needed now is more consistency and better performances in some other events. The sprint results of Harrington and Burke are an indication of the possibilities. The Cats return to the track on April 17 in a tri-meet with UMass and UNH at Massachusetts. The day after the Cats will host Norwich.

Due to the recent snowfalls and heavy rains the river is flowing very rapidly and there is great optimism for a very exciting race.

To help the race run more smoothly, there are a few restrictions that should be noted by the spectators and the racers alike. The access road to the starting line is narrow and travel along it will be limited to one direction only from Waterbury to Jonesville. Proposed Addition To Gym Could Force Fee Increase

by Bruce Maddern

Alterations to the rink are also included. Among these alterations are additional compressors and locker space.

There are two possibilities for financing the project, according to Snyder. They are: increasing the present athletic fee or receiving an appropriation from the state. Snyder explained that the present fee could cover the cost of the first part but would not cover the estimated $2 million cost of phase 2. State appropriations are not likely, he claimed, as the proposal was defeated this year.

Snyder explained that UVM needs the expansion because the present facilities were built for only 4,400 students. There are now about 7300 students attending the university.

In other business, Peter MacAusland announced his cabinet for next year. They will be: Donna Rouleau, treasurer; Jim Breece, Secretary of Communications; Chris Milanesi, Secretary of Elections; and Pat Black, Secretary of Student Activities.

Additionally, the budget for next year was submitted

Winooski Raft Race To Be Run Saturday

The seventh annual Winooski River Raft Race will be held this Saturday, April 20. Starting time is 8:00 a.m. from the Bolton Falls Dam area. The race course is six miles long and includes both rocky sections and areas with rapids. Due to the recent snowfalls and heavy rains the river is flowing very rapidly and there is great optimism for a very exciting race.

To help the race run more smoothly, there are a few restrictions that should be noted by the spectators and the racers alike. The access road to the starting line is narrow and travel along it will be limited to one direction only from Waterbury to Jonesville. Spectators should not try to reach the starting point via the Jonesville Bridge. They are urged to bike and use car pools to help alleviate some of the traffic problems. Last year, numerous complaints were received about spectators crossing Interstate 89 to reach the river. This is illegal and very dangerous. The State Police have issued warnings against this and are prepared to fine and/or arrest any violators.

The race is sponsored by the UVM Outing Club and is known throughout the Northeast. In addition to student entries there will be rafts from New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts and New Hampshire. Rafts in the past have varied from beer keg construction to fiberglass. Last year a discarded VW body also made its way down the course. There are mixed, female, and male divisions and trophies will be awarded to the best finishers in each of these divisions. Rescue squads from UVM, Richmond, and Waterbury will be on hand to help out if necessary. The height and speed of the water are greater than in the past and the infamous trestle will as always be waiting to devour the less wary.

Watergate In Waterman? Administration Attempts Conflicts Cover-Up

by John Franco

The UVM administration, in answering charges leveled by this reporter concerning Trustee conflicts of interest, was caught up in its own public statements during this past weekend.

UVM President Edward Andrews and Treasurer George Clerkin contended in a Friday Burlington Free Press interview that excessive checking account balances in the Chittenden and the Howard did not exist.

Andrews stated that the story was false, commenting "Our checking account balances are small for the amount of business we do." Treasurer George Clerkin commented in the same article that the $900,000 Howard Bank checking balance did not exist. "I don't let money sit around like that," he said. "We never had a $100,000 balance (in the payroll account)... that sure is inaccurate."

That same day this reporter, in a Montpelier press conference, produced a letter dated November 12, 1973 from the University's auditing firm Coopers and Lybrand, addressed to the State Auditor of Accounts and the Board of Trustees. The letter stated "Throughout the month of March 1973 the University's daily cash balance per the ledger was excess of $300,000, whereas the daily cash balance per the bank approximated $900,000. We also noted during the period from July 1972 to March 1973, the daily balance in the payroll account per the bank was never below $55,000 and usually exceeded $100,000.

The University should review its existing policy for reimbursement of the payroll account in order to minimize bank balances and increase the amount of cash available for investment."

It was precisely this letter, upon which this writer based his calculations of interest lost in checking accounts.

In a Saturday Rutland Herald interview, Andrews began to change his story, admitting that the checking account figures reported in last week's Cynic were indeed accurate, but he contended that the auditor's letter was "a relatively minor thing... a comment." He added "the balances vary tremendously from day to day and minute to minute. There are days when it is higher than it ought to be. Other days it's virtually overdrawn."

This still directly contradicts the auditor's letter which pointed out that the Howard balance was "usually" $900,000 in the bank and that the Chittenden payroll account was never below $55,000 and usually exceeded $100,000.

On that same day, Treasurer George Clerkin was asked by the Burlington Free Press to account for his statement that UVM "Never had" a $100,000 Chittenden balance, and his comment that the Cynic claim was "sure inaccurate." Clerkin's response was that the $900,000 balance in the Howard wasn't actually a balance because UVM's records indicated all but $300,000 had been written in checks. But this answer, too, contradicted the auditor's letter.

The difference between what UVM had written off in checks and what was actually in the account is what is termed "float." For instance, if a check is written to Oregon, it'll take a while for that check to make it back to Burlington. But the sum was subtracted from the University's books the day the check was written. This time-discrepancy is called the "float."

Big institutions like UVM are supposed to call the bank every day and find out what the balance in the bank actually is, and invest it daily, or they lose a lot of money. Any Accounting I student knows that. And, the auditor's letter pointed out, it was precisely this "float management" which UVM wasn't undertaking.

"We recommend that cash in the banks in excess of predetermined operating requirements be automatically transferred to a savings account or invested on a daily basis. Short term investments should consider a portion of the 'float'."

However, this discrepancy in the Administration's public statements is more involved than meets the eye. This same auditor's letter was Item 2 on the agenda of the November 29, 1973 Trustee Audit Committee meeting. At the meeting were the Coopers and Lybrand accountants, committee chairperson Thomas Candon, Luther Hackett, President Andrews, Treasurer Clerkin, and others including myself. It was precisely this auditor's letter, the same letter whose existence Andrews was forced to admit, the same letter originally used by this reporter, which was the topic of conversation for half of that three hour meeting.

This fact has important implications. It substantiates that Hackett, Candon and Andrews, all of whom were charged with conflict of interest involving the Chittenden and the Howard, were aware of the letter as long ago as last November, and thus were aware of the inordinately high checking accounts when they made their initial public denials. It also demonstrates that the balances reported in last week's Cynic were on public

Youngest Woman In Congress To Appear At UVM

Elizabeth Holtzman

The 1972 Congressional elections brought to Congress the youngest woman ever elected. Congressperson Elizabeth Holtzman, at the age of 31, defeated Emenuel Celler, a 50 year veteran of the House of Representatives, in a primary in the 16th Congressional District of Brooklyn, New York.

Recognized as committed to liberal, social legislation and to an end of all United States involvement in the war in Southeast Asia, Congresswoman Holtzman obtained a precedent-setting decision from a U.S. District Court which ruled that America's bombing in Cambodia was "unauthorized and illegal." Although the decision was eventually reversed by a U.S. Court of Appeals, Representative Holtzman declared her intention to appeal the case to the Supreme Court in order to firmly establish the limits of presidential authority to wage an undeclared war.

Rep. Holtzman was born in Brooklyn, New York on April 11, 1941, the daughter of a lawyer and a professor of Russian. Her first political contest was a joint effort with her twin brother for the presidency and vice-presidency of the student government at Abraham Lincoln High School. Her campaign slogan was "Win with the Twins." Rep. Holtzman attended Radcliff College, majoring in American History and American Literature, and then continued on to Harvard Law where she was one of fifteen women in a class of five hundred men. After working for a few years as a litigating lawyer in a firm in New York City, she became a mayoral assistant to Mayor John V. Lindsay. Through her work in the bureaucracy of N.Y.C. politics and the Democratic Party in New York, Rep. Holtzman became aware of the "apparent disregard" of Rep. Celler for his constituency, and so was stimulated to enter the tough primary race of June 1972.

Congresswoman Holtzman will speak on Thursday, April 18, at 8:30 p.m. in the Allen Chapel on the UVM campus in a program sponsored by the Speakers Bureau of the Student Association and the UVM Women's Caucus, as part of the Women's Forum: "Roles in Transition." The public is invited.

President Andrews Gives His Side Of The Story

by Peter Campbell

Q. In last week's Cynic, an article by John Franco contended that the University's Board of Trustees, which includes yourself, is in a conflict of interest involving over $12 million. In your opinion, was there any conflict of interest?

A. Oh, of course not. Virtually every eleemosynary institution — universities, hospitals — that have boards of trustees almost invariably have members of the local business community on their boards, and to imply or infer that this kind of connection is for the financial benefit of the business and banking community is completely unwarranted. I have been on a variety of boards, and it is my experience that these people are there because of their interest in the college, the hospital, or whatever it may be. It depends on your basic assumptions. Especially with this University the question of conflict of interest is less of a problem because all of the committee meetings are held in public, with student, faculty, and non-academic employees represented — as well as the press. So there is no question of hankey-pankey.

Q. Does the University plan to take any legal action against Mr. Franco?

A. No.

Q. Do you feel that Mr. Franco's article had any redeeming merits?

A. I think it is fine for students — or anyone for that matter — to do the research and get the facts... Obviously, John Franco was suspicious and did some research, but I don't think it was complete. For example, he talked about the bank balances being excessive. He did not know, or if he did, he did not point out that those bank balances in the general account are generally federal funds, which we cannot invest for the University's gain, and neither can we invest the float the checks. So there will be a balance for several days of two to three hundred thousand dollars — that's the float.

Q. But still, if it is illegal to reduce the checking account balance, then why did the University do it this year, and not the year before?

A. We did do it the year before. One other thing that has not been brought out is that a couple of years ago we could not invest our funds nearly as closely as we do now because the computer system was not up to speed with the accounting office. We just did not know where we were. But now, every day we get the balance, and George Clerkin, the University's treasurer, plays it very close.

Q. You stated in your written statement Monday, that UVM got competitive rates on certificates of deposit in the last fiscal quarter of 1973. Yet Mr. Franco contends that the Howard and Chittenden rates were actually 1/2 percent to 1¼ percent below prevailing rates, which resulted in a loss of over $10,000 to the University.

A. Very honestly, I cannot answer that, because I do not have any influence over the day-to-day investments. George Clerkin does it independently, without any direction from me whatsoever.

Q. Do you feel that your 21 shares of Chittenden stock are not a conflict of interest?

A. It's a state or federal law — I can't remember which — that a director of a bank has to own a certain number of legally.

Q. But in last Friday's Free Press you made a flat denial that the check balances exist, you said, "we don't let money sit around like that," when now you are saying that it would be illegal to invest that money — isn't there a discrepancy in this?

A. No, not at all. I think we should invest every single dollar we legitamately can. So, if we write a payroll of $500,000 today, and we know that the checks will filter in over a period, I think it would be illegal for us to delay making the deposits for those checks when we write

An Open Letter

The Hon. Kimberley Cheney
Vermont Attorney General

The Hon. Patrick Leahy
Chittenden Co. State's Attorney

Gentlemen:

On Thursday, April 11, 1974 we the Vermont Cynic ran an article whose principal contention was that the UVM President and certain UVM trustees are involved in a grom violation of the public trust. It is unnecessary to outline the items of that contention here for they have become public knowledge.

We were dismayed by your public reaction to our contentions. You said that although much of what we contend is true, there is neither any conflict of interest nor malfeasance evident. We cannot understand this instant legal analysis on your part.

We, as UVM students, would like to remind you that in April, 1973 UVM Student Association President William Sisco and other Student Advisors to the Board of Trustees presented a request for student voting representation on the UVM Board. The Office of the Attorney General ruled that student voting representation on the Board would constitute a "conflict of interest," and that it was on these grounds that the students' request was denied.

Now, after a lengthy investigation of the UVM Trustees, and, we feel, a thoroughly documented article, you have publically stated that conflict of interest does not exist as a legal principle in the State of Vermont. We cannot believe that on one hand we as students who contribute heavily to UVM's finances, and who are daily affected by University policy, would be found in conflict of interest if we had even nominal voting rights on the UVM Board, and that on the other hand the UVM Trustees, whom you have publically admitted are closely interconnected with various corporations, are not in conflict of interest while they are accumulating revenues for themselves and their corporations by their management of UVM capital. Is democratic control over University decisions in conflict of interest at the same time profitmaking by the Board of Trusteess not in conflict of interest? We feel that such logic is at very best specious.

Do not misunderstand us. We are not asking you to make an instant legal ruling in support of our contentions. We are asking you to make a thorough public inquiry into the matter.

We have not made our assertions lightly. We are not journalistic "streakers" who monger headlines by imputing motives and reputations. We think the matter is serious, especially in light of public statements made by the UVM administration which are in direct contradiction to evidence on public record with the State of Vermont. We, as journalists, stand by the contentions of our newsstory, but we also recognize that you must weigh our assertions for yourselves.

In short, we feel that the prima facie evidence that we have produced and publicly documented without a doubt warrants a public inquiry. UVM is a state and federally funded institution, and we feel that the taxpayers, not the Trustees who hold their public confidence, deserve the benefit of the doubt.

Therefore we, the Vermont Cynic urgently request a speedy and thorough public investigation of this entire matter.

Nice Hot Bath

by Elliot Freeman

look out the window where the picture of the night time hangs. come closer & stand awhile and watch the artist with his brush of time sketch the dark features of the face that hangs tight and cold upon the hard-as-nails bone skull skeleton of a February night. quiet & stand & watch...

The town is sleeping. The window eyes of people and buildings are shut fast (tight dark eyes lost in slumber covered by blanket protection). The streetlamps fake diamonds of the sky, shine their lights, sprinkle their sparkle and bounce white beams off the slick black pavement. The wind whirls and curls around the red brick of buildings and through the naked fingers of the treetops, whistling a tune (a big hit in the early forties) a song long forgotten. Two road makes grapple in the dark and cross, tied forever at that spot by the three-eyed monster hung from a metal pole (red light green yellow caution). On the corner, a phonebooth (box of long time voices calling) is begging for a mouth to come along and speak (the deaf-mute wants a voice, the scarecrow wants a brain, the tinman wants a heart and I want to go to sleep before I go insane). A faceless shadow, drunken, stumbles on the sidewalk, creeping sidestep past a mailbox towards a pillow where he can lay his head.

The radio plays real softly some guitar and a gravel voice. The radiator heat wheezes and coughs. The boy standing staring out the window sneezes, looks around for a tissue and finding none picks up a dirty tee-shirt off the floor and blows his nose in it, then tosses it into a corner of the room.. He lights a cigarette and turns back towards the window. The room (a small cell) four walls holding and keeping safe all possessions and most secret thoughts from the grimy claws of the outside world. A bed, a bookshelf, a worktable, an old table lamp and a chair; the only furniture. The floor (a scattered mess) covered with clothes (tee-shirts, pants, shoes, boots, socks, underwear, a sweaty sweatshirt) held down with books and papers (a three week old issue of T. V. guide, national geographic, notes... go to the store ketchup/butter/papers..... letters written unmailed) laced together with an assortment of garbage (cigarette butts and ashes, candywrappers, empty matchbooks, soda cans, apple core, empty box of pretzels). Pictures and posters and maps hanging off the walls, blankets and sheets falling off the bed, darkness seeping in the window, everything mixed and muddled...the organic extension of an individual's personality or the rotting stink of the compost heap of weird existence?

STATEMENT: Peter MacAusland
SA President

In last week's Cynic John Franco wrote an article concerning "conflicts of interest" within the university. I support the newspaper's decision to print the article.

A conflict of interest may not exist if a university trustee is also a member of a local business, yet if the university carries on business transactions with that local business then a conflict of interest may exist. In President Andrews' statement of April 15, he points out it is "the responsibility of the University to provide an adequate system of checks and balances to protect the University from actual conflicts of interest of its trustees..." If an adequate system does exist, the University should release in detail the nature of this system. Andrews continues that it is also a university responsibility to provide a system to "protect its trustees from the appearance of any such conflicts."

How does the University carry out this protection? The University should release any available information regarding this effity issue for all to get a better understanding.

he artist lights a candle and holds a knife blade in the flame[a minute] then a shaking hand runs the blade (why me lord?) across the palm of his left hand[fingers roll and melt around the hot metal as it cuts deeper into his skin (what have I ever done?) right hand panicked drops the blade grabs the brush off the table[catching the stream of rich red blood color as it begins to pour from the hole in his hand (what have I ever done?) and with a stroke of genius paints his picture of the night.

The boy stands at the window thinking, he stands there smoking. Only wearing an old favorite tee-shirt (torn and holy) he is naked from the waist down. An ash falls off the end of his smoke and catches him on the inside of his thigh. He curses (fuck) and stubs the butt out in the ash tray. He hits the light switch on his way into bed and lays there, flat on his back, gazing into the dark void of the ceiling. The dark void of the ceiling stares back (the picture on the wall behind him was making faces, two pair of boots in the corner were telling jokes, the guitar put on a coat and went down to the drugstore to get a soda, the bed was bleeding rather severely from a gun-shot wound that it had suffered during a slight misunderstanding with a drunken soldier who had wandered into the room, a couple of over-sexed shirts were enjoying anal intercourse as an interested leather belt looked on.)

The ghost of the night creeps through the holes in my bones. The american night hero is dead...fucked over, polluted, addicted to junk, strung out on late television movies, a mad raper, fat-faced with cancer and chemical food. Dead. I loved him. As a boy I would sneak out late when nobody was watching and see him standing on the corner downtown...brown suede jacket, black pants skin tight and stretching down to the tops of a pair of black leather boots...a hip abe lincoln splitting the scenes with the face of an angel, the eyes of a saint and smell of a hero. I loved while he lived and hate him for his death. So bow down the heroes of the lightning bolt pictures of the past! Farewell to the graven image, pass away old laurals and give up the trophies that we gave you! Swing low sweet chariot! the time of common crowds surrounding you and throwing up their salutations will vanish from this time on! Oh the army will bitch no more saviors from its deceased womb! The scholars will perform feats of knowledge running backwards at speeds of up to one hundred miles per hour while carrying twenty stories of published works! High school football stars will knit the letter sweater of no ambition, while the town council compels the simple townsfolk to come on out for the big home game this thanksgiving weekend! All the superstars are held captive so I will not hold any idol above my head until they are set free from us and we from them. Wave the autographed picture of yourself high and I will sign yours if you promise to do the same for mine. Touch the beauty in the mirror, for it is your picture that will hang in the hall of fame and you who should take the time right now to let all the fans know how much you love them! Cosmetic lies cause you to idolize folks who you might despise if you could for one moment look through their eyes and see what they are seeing. And you pretend that they're your friends whose lives you must defend as if your life depended on them and they don't even know that you are alive or willing. Like dice thrown upon a warehouse floor you'll take the chance you want some more and when the point is made you're afraid it is the same as before except this time you are involved in something different...

Burning hot he jumps out of bed, throws on the light switch and paces in front of the window. The tension in his

Letters To The Editor

The Gay World

To the Editor:

Congratulations on a grade A issue of the Cynic. Especially endearing to me was the excellent article about the gay world, since that is the pigeon hole wherein I reside, when all the hairsplitting and qualifying buts and howevers are swept away. Hopefully, in the post-apocalyptic future, people will realize that all ethno-racist- sexual-spiritual categories are bullshit; that differences over which we posture and quarrel are nothing when compared to the ultimate force that binds us all together.

ROTC Credit

To the Editor:

Throughout my four years at the University of Vermont I have witnessed a general lack of concern and consideration for the students by the administration. Perhaps no situation proves this point as well as the one involving ROTC credit. Since 1969 the College of Arts and Sciences has denied ROTC credit to the students of that college. Their argument was that the courses offered by the ROTC Department were not academic. That has been far from the truth for the last three years. The Professor of Military Studies has developed a curriculum in the area of world military affairs of the highest quality. He has developed courses that are in demand not only by ROTC students but by non-ROTC students as well. He, with the help of other university officials, has selected a group of instructors of the highest caliber. An extensive study by the Ad Hoc Committee on Military Studies of the College of Arts and Sciences has shown these facts and has thus eliminated academic arguments for denying credit.

So what are the reasons for which the college of Arts and Sciences denies credit? Many of us seek the answer. Students in all other colleges at UVM receive at least credit for the first two years and some receive full credit. It's about time that the students in the College of Arts and Sciences received the rights to which they are entitled!

This denial of credit for ROTC is not only a discriminatory act against the students in the College of Arts and Sciences, but it is also an insult to all students at this University and to the people of the State of Vermont. This denial of credit is in direct contrast to the principle of academic freedom, a principle to which the College of Arts and Sciences claims to hold in such regard. The students of this University must not be denied academic freedom any longer! The issue has been studied for four years. I ask you, does it need to be studied for four more?

Sincerely yours,
Douglas E. Bullard

The Underpass

To the Editor:

The Cynic of April 4 contained an article, a "news analysis," an editorial, a "letter to the editor," and a correction notice, all on the proposed Main Street pedestrian underpass. In view of such extensive coverage on the subject, I would like to make a few observations and correct some misinformation.

The Office of Administrative Resources is responsible for the coordination of the planning of physical facilities, the obtaining of required approvals and permits (such as District Environmental Board, and planning commissions), and the monitoring of compliance with permit conditions. To my knowledge, none of the authors of the editorial/articles/letter ever contacted this office to get information, check facts or look at plans. We would have been pleased to spend the time reviewing the project and answering questions.

In early 1972 a joint committee composed of students, staff and faculty of the University, members of the Burlington Planning Commission Design Review Committee, and the South Burlington Planning Commission, met several times, and agreed upon design criteria for pedestrian crossing of Main St. This report included general design criteria for all crossings (over, under, or across) and specific criteria for each, but did not specify a single solution or even suggest a preference.

On February 18, 1972 the Board of Trustees of the University voted to recommend to the Burlington Planning Commission that the pedestrian crossings of Main Street be "on-grade" with pedestrian actuated walk lights.

On March 17, 1972 the Burlington Planning Commission unanimously voted to adopt the design criteria recommended by the joint committee, and to apply these criteria to all pedestrian crossings in Burlington. At the same meeting, the Commission rejected the University's proposal that the solution to the pedestrian crossing of Main Street be the installation of two, on-grade pedestrian actuated signalized crossings, and passed a resolution that:

"The Commission accept the pedestrian signal but not remove the requirement for grade crossing separation at this time as a requirement as a condition to construction of the Living and Learning Center."

The Land Use Permit No. 4C0025 (Living and Learning Center), issued to the University on April 17, 1972, by District Environmental Commission No. 4, states that condition No. 5 of the permit is:

"The applicant shall provide two pedestrian crossings across Main Street one of which shall be an underpass (below the grade of Main Street). The two pedestrian crossings must be in operation before the expiration of this permit. Final plans for the two pedestrian crossings must be submitted to and approved by the District Commission No. 4 and the Burlington Planning Commission."

No exceptions or alternatives are provided by the Environmental Commission.

The letter to the editor refers to "the hiring of two additional policemen," which underscores a basic misunderstanding. To provide a more central campus location, the University Security offices are going to be moved out of Waterman Building into a permanent facility which is a part of the underpass. Since Security operates 24 hours a day, continuous monitoring of the underpass will be available without staff additions.

I apologize for the length of this letter, but feel that it is important that the campus community be aware of these facts, and realize that the University does not have the flexibility in selecting solutions to this problem that has been implied.

I would be pleased to meet with anyone wishing to review our current plans, and answer any questions which you may have.

Very truly yours,
Larry L. Snyder
Director

Editor's note:

Two of the authors did contact Proctor Lovell's office and obtained information and reviewed the plans. Also, the joint committee in 1972 listed four solutions in order of their preferences, which they prefered the 'on-grade crossings' over the simple underpass, contrary to the above letter which states no preferences were made.

Irrational Restrictions

To the Editor:

On Monday, April 15, while swimming at the gym, I asked permission to use the high diving board and was refused by the lifeguard. I went to the chairman of the Athletic Department to find out why, with less than ten persons using the pool, diving from the high board is not permitted. I was informed that it is a "standard regulation for pool safety," though I suspect that it has simply been made standard by the Athletic Department.

I have had the opportunity of swimming at Bucknell University and Penn State and in neither case was such a "standard regulation" present. There is, furthermore, no time allowed for a student not on the swimming team to use the high board regardless of the fact that each of us pays $30.00 yearly for such equipment.

The underlying reason for this restriction seems to be the fear of a lawsuit against the University by an injured student. But if the dangers of diving are taken in perspective, then most of the equipment in the gym should be off-limits to students. How is it that hockey and football, where injuries are a common occurence, should be supported and even encouraged? I mean not to berate either sport, but, comparatively, the dangers of diving are negligible. If one accepts that the average student has the basic intelligence to know enough not to swim under a diving board and that the pool is staffed with competent lifeguards, then there seems to be no rational reason for this restriction.

I grow incredibly tired of being confronted by irrational, meaningless restrictions made by the pencil-pushers of the Athletic Department who probably haven't seen a diving board in the last thirty years. I do not pay an athletic fee every year to watch the swimming team use the diving board.

Thanks For Nothing

To the Editor:

An open letter to the person(s), and I use the term loosely, who stole a knife and a freshly baked cake, from B110 of the Living/Learning Center, Friday night, April 5, anywhere between 11 and 11:30 p.m.

Thank you, I guess that's about the best compliment I'll ever receive on my baking. However, that cake was made with love, for a special someone, whose birthday it happened to be, not for two hungry thieves.

Thank you for the few crumbs left on the plates. (Thanks for the plates.) Thank you for making my effort, time, and money a complete waste. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to explain to a friend why his borrowed knife can't be returned.

And lastly, thanks so much for lowering my opinion of people and humanity one more notch. There aren't many left to go.

P.J. Jones...

To the Editor:

In order to become a good writer, the author should write from the knowledge he has acquired from experience. In reading your critique of P J Jones we can see that you have very little knowledge of black life in Harlem and drug pushers. Consequently you, were not qualified to review the play. Next time before you decide to review a piece of art, abstain if it is above your experiential level.

Sincerely,
Beverly J. Goodwin

...A Qualified Apology

To the Editor:

It has been brought to my attention that my review of P J Jones was a personal criticism of Mr. Darryle Lloyd, the play's director.

This issue raises a lot of questions about the ethics of criticism. Ordinarily, a work of art is to be judged solely on its own standing, with no personal judgment of the work's creator involved. My criticism of P J Jones may have overreached the proper bounds – that I will concede. However, I felt that P J Jones was a special case for several reasons which I would like to clarify.

In our interview for the preview of P J Jones (March 21 Cynic) Mr. Lloyd was more eager to talk about social problems than the play itself; he told me twice – at the interview and the day I bought a ticket for the play – that he hoped I would not judge whether the play was good or bad, I should judge whether I had learned anything. On the play's program it was mentioned that Mr. Lloyd is a social welfare major, hoping to go to graduate school; on the back of the program Mr. Lloyd rather pietistically listed doctors, lawyers, and social workers as part of the "sweet side of Harlem." Also, Mr. Lloyd wrote, directed and produced P J Jones. Such a heavy influence of one individual is rare in a dramatic production.

Because Mr. Lloyd's play was so obviously personal, and because Mr. Lloyd seemed to ask for recognition as both a playwright and a social worker, I responded in like manner. I wish to make an apology to Mr. Lloyd for this misunderstanding. Otherwise, I stand by what I wrote in my original review of P J Jones.

How is it that hockey and football, where injuries are a common occurrence, should be supported and even encouraged? I mean not to berate either sport, but, comparatively, the dangers of diving are negligible. If one accepts that the average student has the basic intelligence to know enough not to swim under a diving board and that the pool is staffed with competent lifeguards, then there seems to be no rational reason for this restriction.

I grow incredibly tired of being confronted by irrational, meaningless restrictions made by the pencil-pushers of the Athletic Department who probably haven't seen a diving board in the last thirty years. I do not pay an athletic fee every year to watch the swimming team use the diving board.

On the play's program it was mentioned that Mr. Lloyd is a social welfare major, hoping to go to graduate school; on the back of the program Mr. Lloyd rather pietistically listed doctors, lawyers, and social workers as part of the "sweet side of Harlem." Also, Mr. Lloyd wrote, directed and produced P J Jones. Such a heavy influence of one individual is rare in a dramatic production.

Because Mr. Lloyd's play was so obviously personal, and because Mr. Lloyd seemed to ask for recognition as both a playwright and a social worker, I responded in like manner. I wish to make an apology to Mr. Lloyd for this misunderstanding. Otherwise, I stand by what I wrote in my original review of P J Jones.

An open letter to the University of Vermont and the people of the State of Vermont

On April 11, 1974 I ran an article in the Vermont Cynic contending that the UVM President and certain trustees are in serious violation of the public trust, specifically that they were involved in conflicts of interest during fiscal year 1973, which involved $12 million.

On April 15 UVM President Edward Andrews released a public statement concerning my assertions. I would like to respond to them personally, and not in the name of the Vermont Cynic.

First, I believe that I have made my contentions on the basis of thorough, serious, lengthy, and well documented research. I have not made them "on a lark because it's spring," as Dr. Andrews contended. They were the result of six months of intensive investigative work.

I believe I have also made them in good faith. I called my press conference of April 12 not only to make my allegations known to the public outside of the university community, as Dr. Andrews noted in his statement, but also to produce thorough documentation publically to the Vermont press. I have also, on several occasions, waived my journalistic privilege of maintaining the confidentiality of my sources by offering to share every item of documentation in my possession with the proper authorities.

President Andrews made several points in his release. He still contends that the checking account balances which were held by UVM in the banks of which he and certain trustees were directors and stockholders were not excessive. I would like to point out that last Friday Andrews and the UVM Treasurer absolutely denied their existence. However when I documented in my press conference that the University's auditors, in fact, considered those balances excessive, the UVM administration admitted both the existence of the letter and the accuracy of my checking figures as originally reported in the Cynic. That letter, dated November 12, 1973 from Coopers and Lybrand of Boston addressed to the State Auditor and the Trustees, pointed out, not that the balances were necessary as Dr. Andrews still contends in his release, but that they were excessive and were losing interest money for UVM. Dr. Andrews now says that it would be illegal to invest these balances because of some sort of federal funds equity.

I must take exception to this new line of defense. First, we are now expected to believe after several public denials which have proven to be false, that the UVM auditors were unaware of this "law." Secondly, this indexed auditors' also contained not only the auditors' comments, but also UVM's responses to them. No mention was made by the University of this "law" in its replies. The reply to the suggestion that the check balances should be invested was "The University will review existing policy to minimize its bank cash, particularly its payroll account, to increase the amount of cash available for investment. The University will reduce its $20,000 imprest payroll account (per the books) to zero."

In sum, Andrews first denied absolutely that those sums ever existed. Now he contends it would be illegal if they did not exist. Both stories contradict the facts on public record.

Dr. Andrews also contends that "All short term investments are placed competitively for the best return. When rates are comparable the University places its funds locally..." This again is directly at odds with the facts. The UVM Treasurer informed me in an interview last December that UVM would place its deposit certificates wherever the highest rates could be obtained. However, the Wall Street Journal listed prevailing money rates on certificates of deposit which were greater than those received by UVM in either the Howard or the Chittenden during the last quarter of Fiscal 1973. Again, we see that UVM has not, as Dr. Andrews contends, been doing its shopping even in the State of Vermont, but has stuck with the Chittenden and the Howard through thick and thin, rain or shine. This is precisely the point of my conflict of interest assertion. How can these two banks offer UVM rates in a disinterested manner when all three are so closely interconnected? I would also like to point out that these same two banks maintain near monopoly control over Vermont money markets. Of the top ten Vermont banks, these two had in 1972 combined assets greater than the combined assets of those ranked 5 through 10.

Andrews has asserted, as did Mr. Bingham Humphrey, the UVM Board Chairman, that trustees abstain in votes involving potential interest conflicts as part of an "isolating mechanism." I contend that this is a hollow assurance. I have documented that 1) all the trustees implicated sat on trustee committees involving aspects of university finance; that 2) those committees are also staffed with men who, because of their other connections with directors and officers of these same two banks, cannot be considered disinterested in their actions; and that 3) if we accept Andrews' explanations we are naively asked to believe that $12.3 million of the University's money ended up in these corporations, either in the form of check balances, deposit certificates, or stock, by coincidence.

I contend that the consistently high correlation of Chittenden and Howard Directors in top posts at UVM rules out any possibility of coincidence. I have, in past Cynic articles, illustrated that this arrangement is not a one-shot occurrence, but is part of a consistency pattern that goes as far back as 1958. The fact that a significant proportion of the UVM Board is chosen, not publicly, but behind the closed doors of the notorious 'self-perpetuating' process, further substantiates these contentions.

In brief, I stand firmly by my contentions as a journalist and as a native of Vermont. I feel that I, and not President Andrews, have acted in good faith and honesty throughout this entire controversy.

Sincerely,
John Franco

A Rebuttal On P.J. Jones

by Darryle Lloyd

At first, I started not to write this rebuttal to Peter Campbell, because of all the fine commendation I have received from faculty, students, janitors, maids, store owners, the Vermont Academy of Arts and Sciences, Ed Feidner and requests by Johnson State College and Windham College that Third World Organization bring P J Jones to their schools so that it could be performed.

Next, Mr. Campbell fails to realize that the Third World Organization chose my play because the play had a message, not simply because it was a "black play." We had our reservations about doing it primarily because of the response by Vermonters who have had little or no contact at all with black people and their problems.

But I ask Mr. Campbell, just what kind of play do you think the TWO was going to pick? Some fantasy about men jumping across the stage with tights and wiglets on? or maybe a musical version of "Mary had a little lamb" with an all black cast? They picked my play because it dealt with truth and reality, black struggle, and black frustration.

I worked on P J Jones for eight months, I talked to addicts, hooked and unhooked, ministers, priests, cops, community leaders, social workers, and gangs all over New York about the drug situation and the fact that I was writing a play about a drug pusher and his demise.

I did the best I could for such a big task. I held motivation practices with members of my cast, right in my room; I worked double time with six, and 23 actors at a time. I designed the poster, the programs, the sets, got in touch with the major media, wrote, produced and still directed the play as well.

Actually, it's one year of hard work, and you come in for one night, and you distort my work, my personal views, and the organization that I am proudly a member of.

This was a play review, not a time to attack a person, or question my integrity as a social worker. Mr. Campbell, if in doubt, should check my credentials at the College of Education and Social Services; I think he will find them most impressive.

Still, Mr. Campbell watched this play for two hours and still did not comprehend anything. Gloria, did not turn over Harlem to the mob, Detective Wright and the police force prevented that from happening and helped clean the streets up of drugs. There were good performances from all my actors, not just two or four of them. My play was not like "Shaft" or "Superfly" because in this play, all the drug dealers get caught or get killed or get pressured by Detective Wright. Therefore, they are no longer around to push drugs in poor black areas ever again.

Mr. Campbell says it was "painful" to hear the audience laugh when they weren't supposed to. On the contrary, they laughed just when they were supposed to, and sometimes even more which made me feel good as a writer.

The girl who "shrieked idiotically" according to Mr. Campbell, did so because she was frightened at seeing a man stabbed to death. We rehearsed it that way, and it came across beautifully. Mr. Campbell knows nothing of people and their reactions to seeing a murder. My hat goes off to Eddie Mae Woodley for such a good job.

Mr. Campbell also again failed to get in print the white actors who were in the play did great jobs, Mark Sherman as Captain McKinley, Kevin Kerane as Salvatore Maranzano, and Dick Stillson who played one of the cops, and not to forget, Ed Tracy, Don Jarrett, and Dave Yuella. And Ny Campbell, who Clark Canella? perhaps it's Kent Canella.

Stereotypes? these drug pushers are alive and kicking now! They are wantonly spreading their drugs all over poor black and white communities in America. They are for real. I know, I see the P.J. Jones, the Eldorado Eddies, the Joey Bennetts, and the Captain McKinleys, every time I go back home. And I ask Mr. Campbell this, just where were there any "lustful sexual" black people in my play?

If you walk through Harlem right now, you won't find any "comic book characters," only live ones, and they will be doing their thing. Mr. Campbell stated that the scene with Jackie Patterson and Lynn Harvey (who were both great) had nothing to do with the plot. Well the girl addict was hooked by P J and the pusher worked for P J. The girl addict helped straighten out a brother who was also hooked by P J. When the drug war broke out, Eldorado Eddie was killed because he worked for P J, yet Campbell stated that the scene and the characters had nothing to do with the plot. Weird, huh?

Next, to clear up another one of the distortions. A smart, hip, alert drug pusher does not take drugs, only the small time pimps and pushers do. P J was a big time dealer. And he played straight.

It was also stated in Campbell's messy review that the character I created, P. J. was a bore, and that in order for P.J. to make it, he would have to con people. Well, P.J. conned "Sammy the Pimp" who turned out to be an addict played by Jose Santana. Remember? P.J. was a great actor with McKinley, Gloria, and Bobo, and to prove how ruthless and vile P.J. Jones was he even had his best friend, his right arm man wasted because he did not see things P.J.'s way. Yet, according to Mr. Campbell, P.J. Jones would have been better off baby-sitting.

It was stated that P.J.'s "sudden wish" that Detective Wright clean up Harlem was unreal. If Mr. Campbell would have listened to the dialogue, he would have heard P. J. tell his story of how he became a pusher, and why he felt the way he did. Besides, the drug war was over, and P.J. finally looked back and saw the damage he had done. He was then able to cop a plea which he did do. This is another fact that was distorted in the review.

Inexperienced? Yes, we were, so was I as a director and a producer. I think we did an excellent job for non-theatre majors, although some of the TWO's members have acted before. Owen Keefe and I did everything ourselves, and I think the cast will support us and give us good ratings as directors.

I think Mr. Campbell, found it appropriate to debase, and to use a feral method to distort this play, the Organization, and my personal standing as a black social worker.

The play was intentionally distorted so much, I couldn't believe what I was reading! Ann Curran, of the Burlington Free Press didn't agree with some of my ideology, but still she gave us a good, solid, fair review. The attack of the TWO was uncalled for. It's just too bad that we had to have a critic who is definitely uninformed about poor black life.

After our last performances it was really sad. The actors, the crews, and the actors' families along with Owen and myself were signing nice things about each other on posters that were left over from publicity. As a matter of fact, people from the audience were asking me for my autograph, which I embarrassingly gave. Pretty impressive for such a "poor play." We were almost sold out for Friday night, sold out for Saturday night, and again almost sold out for Sunday night. When it was over, I cried. I cried because I was happy and proud of the Third World Organization and its members.

Mr. Campbell attacked my views about methodone, saying it was a cop-out. In New York for addicts, it's methodone, or life in prison. Mr. Campbell really went too far. Stating that I was trying to imply that "women are the problems in black communities, not drugs." This is untrue, and I never tried to say such a thing. I know because I share companionship with a beautiful black sister back in New York, who's an inspiration to me. I feel that Mr. Campbell did a great injustice to black women in his statement. Black women are the power behind black men, not their enemies.

The attempt to downgrade me went for naught. I have gotten phone calls from faculty, students, and members of the cast who have expressed their anger of the rap Mr. Campbell gave me and the TWO, not the review of the play. They have given me their support.

I got my message across. I'll be willing to bet that if we took a check right now, and asked how many students understood and liked the production, I am sure it would be in favor of the production 85–90 per cent.

Finally, I am sorry that we had to have such an uninformed person review this play. I feel that it was not a review, but a blatant attack on myself as a playwright/social worker. It was cheap, nefarious, but mostly it was misunderstood by the critic. I can only hope that this rebuttal will straighten and clear up the distortions and misconceptions that were read from the review that appeared in last week's Cynic.

I hope I have made myself clear.

The Bar Review: Fraternity Parties At UVM

Having survived through both another dreary spring vacation week and a near-critical athletic injury – a sprained ankle, incurred, naturally, while falling off a barstool in shock as the NHL's best excuse for a roller derby team on skates, the Philadelphia Flyers, finally defeated our beloved Bruins – the Bar Review has decided to count our blessings, give Burlington's tavern owners a week's respite from our acid pens and tackle a familiar, yet formidable, drunken foe: the fraternity party.

For whether you want to admit to it or not, and regardless of whether you were disgusted or delighted by the whole affair, the odds are that sometime during your four year vacation at Camp Catemount, somewhere between that fateful September day when you stood in awe of the endless registration line at Patrick Gym and the fearful May day, four years later, when Easy Ed gives you the inalienable right to contribute to the alumni fund, you've probably been to the ole Frat house beer blast. Unless, of course, you're the type who has lived in the dorms for four years, eaten breakfast at SAGA every morning, never smoked dope or missed an education class and packed up your suitcase and headed home for Rutland or some other such exciting place every weekend; in this case, read no further and turn immediately to the Doctor's Bag, as you won't comprehend what follows.

In any attempted study of a frat party, our inebriate sociologist informs us that we must first scrutinize the social groups that comprise your usual frat crowd. Also, we undertake this analysis fully expecting that UVM's Sociology department, in its eternal quest for relevance (and class registrations) may add to its list of Special Topics courses, along with its planned seminar on the "Matriarchal Black Family in Bismarck, North Dakota" our old favorite, "The Sociology of Undergraduate Fraternity gatherings in Vermont." Again, we must keep in mind that the following social categories are overlapping, and, as this was compiled without the aid of Gary Nelson's punch cards and computer program, our conclusions may be totally inaccurate and inoperative.

The first discernable group that one will encounter at any frat party, whether it be an FADC, SESH, after-hockey game keg blast, football game fire-up or pre-streak Tequila chugging contest, are the notorious hammer meh. Their mission: self-destruction. For this crew, the fraternity party's chief asset is that it affords them the opportunity to get hammered to the gills at a price they can easily afford; most frat parties charge no more than a buck, and hammer men are adept at sneaking or bullshitting their way in for free in a pinch. Once inside the fraternity, the true hammerman arms himself with two or three sixteen ounce cups and doesn't leave the bar until either the beer runs out or he passes out. A hammer man always knows whoever is tending bar by his/her first name, is a virtual expert at tapping kegs and couldn't care whether you're serving Michelob or Moonshine, as he usually has imbibed two six packs or so at the hockey game. He's the one who'll skip his Friday afternoon lab and battle snow, sub-zero weather, and spurn his girlfriend's advances to be the first one at the F.A.D.C., and most likely won't quit drinking until Hannibal's closes at two a.m. Saturday morning. The hammerman does have real redeeming attributes though: unlike most of the regular frat crowd, he is completely without pretensions and remains slightly amused at what is happening around him. The hammer man is at all times aware of his mission.

No fraternity would be complete without another distinct class of social climbers – the ubiquitous sleazes. The genuine sleaze attends these events with one objective in mind: to avoid sleeping alone that evening. If male, a successful sleaze must combine the modesty of a Muhammad Ali and the honesty of a Richard Nixon with the tact of a fellow who gives his girlfriend an I.U.D. for her birthday. His dual motto: "Any port in a storm" and "How the hell did I know she was a BHS sophomore?" If female, a good sleaze must remain forever cognizant that she won't be leaving the party with a guy whose looks rival Robert Redford's. She must brandish the sexual naivite of an Xaviera Hollander and be as adept at talking about nothing for hours as Hubert Humphrey at a political fund raising chicken dinner. Her motto: "Well, he wasn't much but he was still better than a sawed off broomstick." Though UVM frat parties once provided the most fertile sleazing field this side of Green (Groin) Mountain Junior College, the downtown bars have somewhat usurped the Greeks' position in this realm of ramming. Yet, for a night of easy sleazin' and a guarantee of dirty sheets the next morning, the frat party is still hard to beat.

For all the excitement the hammer men and the sleazes lend to a fraternity blast, it is still a Vermont Verity that without a cadre of dazzling jockettes a frat party wouldn't be, well, a frat party. A jockette is your average Sue Sorority – elementary ed major who relishes being mentally undressed by every guy in the place the minute she strolls in the door. Though she hasn't missed a hockey game since the last time she spent a weekend a Dartmouth, and can relate from memory the numbers, hometowns, and jockstrap sizes of each player of the O'Connell–Mallette–Koch line, she usually doesn't know the difference between a hockey puck and a Smith brothers cough drop, and thinks a blue line is where her mascara is supposed to be applied. A jockette is as class conscious as Karl Marx and as clothes–conscious as the Macy's women's apparel buyer. She sports a body fashioned by Enzo Farrari and a mind molded by Mattel, thinks George Frazier is Walt's brother and is an avid reader of the engagement section of the Burlington Free Press – she too knows her mission. For a jockette, the frat party represents a mid-point in her career– she's too old for the high school cheerleading line and the junior prom, yet hasn't quite settled comfortably into the suburban country club scene. A real jockette comes to a frat party to be seen, and revels in bee-bopping around Sig Nu's living room to the 50's grease music, preferably Sha-Na-Na. Even the cup she casually sips her drink from is plastic.

Even the uninitiated freshman can pick out our next group of fraternity party degenerates, the Hog-men, at first glance. The Hog-man is more blatantly recognizable than Tricia Nixon would be in a whore house, or Norman Mailer at a women's lib meeting, as you can usually catch him with his pants down. He's the guy whose mission is simply to gross out everyone else in attendance. A hog-man is the sort of fellow whose football coach pays him the supreme compliment when he calls him an "Animal," and who can always be counted on for actions that are in egregious best taste. He's the one who boasts of having met his chick while

by Scott Bauer

Perhaps it was just me getting more involved with VPIRG, but I got the feeling that interest was spreading throughout the campus. The Cynic seems to be printing more "public interest" information from all sources. My compliments to the staff.

Many people are at first skeptical of VPIRG because it is "just another organization." This might be the case but I believe it gives a person a chance to express his opinions. The ultimate decision on "environmental concerns" is finalized in the legislature. Legislators will listen to you but you must have a solid foundation for your viewpoints. You necessarily must have a diversified but representative sampling of opinions. This is a difficult and time consuming task to undertake on an individual level; VPIRG supplies the resources for broadening your basis of knowledge.

VPIRG can be as individualistic as you want them to be. I believe in the next legislative session there will be a shift from "anti-environmentalism" to a truly worthwhile session. This will take much concerned effort by all involved. We'd like your help.

The Great Gatsby:

In Search Of The Great American Film

by John Van Hoesen

The Great Gatsby is a spectacle. The $6 million film is a visual masterpiece, but will ultimately be remembered as another of thousands of modestly good films.

The film is a success in its staging and cinematography. Gatsby will be remembered for the elegance of the Newport restoration houses and the frailness of the love scenes between Daisy (Mia Farrow) and Jay (Robert Redford). Camera angles and sharp scene changes bring to the film some of its best momemts.

The awe-inspiring Gatsby mansion is only surpassed by Gatsby's silhouette against the night sky. As the gold-studded mansions blind the eyes, and the moisture from Daisy's lips reflects the sparkle in Jay Gatsby's pupils, the viewer is completely taken in.

But these moments, as pleasurable to the senses as they are, are secondary to the film as a whole. Robert Redford, America's new hero, is good. Although his lines are thin, Redford overcomes his physical appearance and honestly creates the society-orphaned Jay Gatsby. Redford turns skimpy wooden lines into a surprisingly good character.

As Fitzgerald would have had it, Gatsby never fits into this despicable rich society. Redford does well to create two characters, the rich and the secure character at his parties and the poor and insecure character in front of Nick Carraway's perceptive eye. As the rich get richer and the poor get children, Gatsby gets none of the fun. One sympathizes with Gatsby.

Daisy should be a hateful character, not, as Mia Farrow sees her, failing in her lack of strength. She should be hateful in her strong and adolescent desires for the best of everything. Farrow's Daisy Buchanan is a weak and confused little bird who flies with a broken wing. Yet, her doily- delicate personality adds a tenderness which at times reveals an innocent misunderstanding of human relations. In a photograph, Mia Farrow would be the perfect Daisy; it's when she pinches out her lines that we find her disappointing in not realizing Daisy's strength. Daisy's reaction to Nick Carraway, when she understands that he knows of the murder she's committed, is confusion, as far as Farrow is concerned. Daisy should have found strength in coldness.

The supporting cast is adequate. Sam Waterston's Nick Carraway is a fairly good attempt at normalism amidst the abnormal and neurotic rich clique. His narration is a positive accomplishment for director Jack Clayton.

Bruce Dern accomplishes the bull-headedness of Fitzgerald's Tom Buchanan successfully. He succeeds in carrying the big stick. Karen Black's Myrtle is a pathetic creature trapped by poverty and a husband she doesn't love — she is Fitzgerald's Myrtle.

The sound track is a combination of old favorites like "I'm going to Charleston" and "Five-Foot Two" with additional tunes by Irving Berlin and Nelson Riddle. Aside from Nick Lucas' raspy attempts at vocalism, the music is highly professional. The haunting theme song "What'll I do?" supplements Gatsby's ultimate tragedy.

The Great Gatsby is an attempt at the great American film. Like Fitzgerald who tried to publish the great American novel, director Jack Clayton and Paramount have made their bid. They met the same inevitable fate — failure. Despite its large scale publicity, its incredible attention to visual detail and its faithfulness to Fitzgerald's novel, the film is not an all-time great; it is, however, an all-time great spectacle. For that reason one must recognize Gatsby as a modestly good picture.

New Riders Perform Tight Country Concert

by Scott Cahoon

Skip Batton's t-shirt summed it all up the night of the tenth when the New Riders of the Purple Sage made their first visit to Vermont. "Unity" is what it said, and the label perfectly described the contents as the Riders played one of the tightest gigs ever at Memorial Auditorium.

It also described the band's relationship to the audience. "Vermont Green welcomes Panama Red" said the bedsheet hanging from the balcony overlooking the people pushed as close to the stage as they could get. "We sure appreciate that sign," said Marmaduke, "and we're sure glad to be here in Vur-mont." Likewise, answered Vur-mont with a big cheer.

Before groups like the New Riders and Poco came along, country music to me was something the rednecks and hicks listened to on their eight-tracks. I could do without Loretta Lynn's self-pitying whine and Buck Owens' offensive twang. The New Riders added the carefree excitement of rock and roll to down-home C&W without obtruding on its clean and economical licks. Even a song like "Last Lonely Eagle," a so-called "sad" song, makes me feel good when the Riders are on stage.

The floor of Memorial is flat, which isn't very desirable when everybody wants to get a good view of the band. The area in front of the stage was packed, and when the Riders came on with an old favorite like "Glendale Train" or "Panama Red," everyone

Blues Festival Set For Large Coverage

UVM SA Concerts and the Community Media Project report that the annual Blues Festival, now in its third year in Burlington, has gained national recognition from the U.S. Press Corps, has been cited by the Library of Congress as one of the most significant Blues Festivals in the U.S. and Europe, and drawn numerous requests from blues performers for personal appearances. Set to cover the festival is Rolling Stone, Montreal Star, Billboard, and Boston's top publications.

To date Mighty Joe Young, Koko Taylor, Albert King, Willie Dixon, Sonny Terry/Brownie McGhee and a host of others have expressed their interest in coming to UVM for the annual event. Invitations to all of these artists have been extended for this year if their routing is good for a Vermont stop and if they desire to perform for the exposure.

It should be noted that Howlin' Wolf will be appearing in Burlington with a full band backing him up as will Otis Rush, Luther Allison, and Eddie 'Cleanhead' Vinson. These artists are also expected to perform some acoustic numbers or to mix members of each other's bands for jamming situations. This was done in the past with Buddy Guy and Junior Wells backing Bonnie Raitt (Burlington '72) and the late Arthur 'Big Boy' Crudup (who died less than three weeks ago at his home in Virginia). One of Crudup's last festival appearances was in Burlington in 1972. Son House also made his last festival appearance in Burlington in 1972 and now resides in upstate New York.

Tickets for the Blues Festival are on sale at the UVM Bookstore for students and general prices (no limit) and at Bailey's downtown for general admission. Information for the Blues Festival may be obtained by calling 862-0705 or 656-2597.

The Great Gatsby:

In Search Of The Great American Film

by John Van Hoesen

The Great Gatsby is a spectacle. The $6 million film is a visual masterpiece, but will ultimately be remembered as another of thousands of modestly good films.

The film is a success in its staging and cinematography. Gatsby will be remembered for the elegance of the Newport restoration houses and the frailness of the love scenes between Daisy (Mia Farrow) and Jay (Robert Redford). Camera angles and sharp scene changes bring to the film some of its best moments.

The Fleming is now exhibiting some of its modern art works by such artists as Picasso, Jean Arp, Jacques Villon-Duchamp, Max Beckman, Jacques Lipchitz, Matisse, and Edouard Manet. Living American Artists Show

On the first floor of the Fleming an exhibition of paintings by living American artists is on display. These works are currently being considered for purchase by the museum. The pieces that will be purchased will depend on the tastes of those who attend the Spring Gala. Patrons who pay ten dollars for the affair will be able to vote for the works they would like the museum to own.

If you are interested in benefitting the Museum Acquisition Fund and playing an active role in the purchasing of the works, tickets may be obtained at the Museum. The party will be held on Saturday, May 4, 8 p.m.

The New Riders Don't Hit The Note

by Doug Collette

The New Riders of the Purple Sage Memorial Auditorium
April 10, 1974

It's difficult to write about something that doesn't move me much, but here goes anyway.

I was awfully disappointed with the New Riders' concert. The steady progression they'd made on their four studio albums led me to expect more than what I heard them play and sing. Being infectious is fun for everybody concerned and the Riders are surely infectious more often than not, but they never got past that level and what's worse, they didn't seem willing or able to reach for those upper levels.

Nearly three hours of New Riders music is a shaky proposition at best because the scope of their music is so limited. After the first forty-five minutes, during which the band had played at least two each of the three kinds of tunes they do – jumpy numbers like "Panama Red," things that skip along delightfully lightly like "I Don't Know You" and smooth ballads such as "You Should Have Seen Me Runnin'" – I was thoroughly bored and restless. From then on I couldn't distinguish one song from another and when that happens to me, when I'm as familiar with a band's music as I am with the New Riders, something's terribly wrong.

I thought the band had begun to hit their stride just before the intermission. Buddy Cage began to wail occasionally on the pedal steel, drummer Spencer Dryden let fly with a few sparks of his own and the whole band started to cook instead of merely simmering. After the break, though, the momentum was gone and from then til the end, listless is a better description than laid back.

A few fresh arrangements of familiar material would've been welcome, but the beautifully languid version of "Garden of Eden" was offset by a disjointed jam on "Portland Woman." A big surprise was the inclusion of Jagger/Richard's "Dead Flowers" which is tailor-made for the New Riders, but they didn't pick up much steam under that one either. Most of the new, original stuff came from Skip Battin who's just replaced Dave Torbert on bass; Battin's still writing the same kind of dumb songs he did with the Byrds (I'd be ashamed to let people know I wrote 'em much less sing 'em in public) and the last thing the New Riders need is another quirky voice to go with Maraduke's.

Marmaduke, in fact, is now the dominant force in this band and even Dave Nelson's deadpan C&W burlesques don't provide enough respite. I'm missing Torbert's original songs, clean pure vocals (the groups harmonies suffer especially now) and R&B influence (which means no more "I Don't Need No Doctor" or "Willie and the Hand Jive") the New Riders are eventually going to be severely handicapped.

Maybe with a bit more performer/audience exchange that night, there would've been some electricity in the air. But such a low-key version of a Chuck Berry song – "Nadine," a violation of the laws of nature if there ever was one – I guess that was too much to hope for.

White Chocolate

There aren't many people outside of southern New England who've ever heard of the Strawberry Fun Band. There guys are from Westport, Connecticut, and have been playing the club and bar circuit for the past few years, all the while developing tight, funky rhythms and tasty, lead riffs. Because of their performing habitat, the group developed a gutsy, raw vocal power that has become a trademark wherever they perform.

The Strawberry Fun Band landed a contract with RCA, went to New York and recorded a debut album under a new name, White Chocolate. This first recording brings to records a rare transcendence of that power and determination which makes them a club favorite. At the same time, Charlie Karp, unofficial group leader, producer, and session man who has done work with the likes of Buddy Miles, was intelligent enough to temper White Chocolate's primal appeal with some sophisticated studio enhancement, ranging from simple overdub tracks to some fancy vocal phasing.

White Chocolate is Charlie Karp, David Hull, and Jimmy Maher, in a musical recipe that combines guitar, bass, drums, and vocals as basic ingredients. Additional color is added by some session keyboards and horns. White Chocolate are one of the few recording bands not to get overwhelmed with production on a debut product, which results in a clear, clean first attempt.

The album White Chocolate is all good time music. The band possesses the behind them stood on their chairs. The view is fine from the balcony, but the acoustics stink; and the words sound like they're being sung during oral surgery. The best seats (or standing places) in the house must have gone to those who were waiting outside the door at 5:00.

Marmaduke (John Dawson, rhythm and vocals) referred again to the balcony-hung bedsheet during the second half of the concert. "Remember that you can grow it in your own back yard. We can change these forking laws," he said, and gave us a short rap about the power of the vote. "But in the meantime, my heart goes out to anyone who smuggles dope for a living, and this next song is dedicated to them." The song was "Henry," the saga of a brave young man who trucks to Acapulco "to turn the golden keys."

My personal favorite of the night was the Rider's rendition of "Portland Woman." As it had during the entire evening, Dave Nelson's work on lead guitar perfectly complemented Buddy Cage's soaring pedal steel riffs. My spirits soared with them: the New Riders certainly know how to "treat you right."

The Riders played for three straight hours with only one short intermission. When it was all over and they had played their encore, we winced as some jerk backstage turned on the lights. I felt like the guy on the Allman Brothers' Live at the Fillmore album who wanted the band to play all night.

Band Presents Spring Concert

The University of Vermont Concert Band will be presenting its annual spring performance on Sunday, April 21, 4 p.m., at Ira Allen Chapel. The concert is free to students and area residents.

The 55 member band, under the direction of Dr. Herbert L. Schultz has been rehearsing for this concert the entire semester and much of last semester. In addition to these several-hour rehearsals a week, the individual members of the band have been practicing the material on their own. Therefore one can expect quality execution of all the selections on the program.

A wide range of music will be offered, such as "Irish Tune for a County Derry" or the gaiety in the "Impresario" by Mozart. One piece, is an arrangement of Richard Rogers' musical, "Flower Drum Song."

Following the concert, the UVM Band will embark on a tour of Southern Vermont and Massachusetts high schools. The purpose of the tour is to enhance the on-campus program of the band and to generate, promote and spread a good image of the band and therefore the University it represents to high school students, their parents, and their teachers. To keep costs at a minimum, free meals will be provided by some of the schools. Also, food and lodging are to be given by the parents of students who play in their high school band.

Funded by the S.A. as a recognized member organization, the UVM Band has other activities in addition to its annual concert and tour. Spurred on by president Randy Wheeler and his fellow officers, the band played at the first Octoberfest held last semester. A voluntary activity of the concert band is the hockey band. Unfortunately, the four-day week forced the scheduled rehearsal time of the band to coincide with several of the home hockey games this past season, which was why some of the games were missed. Next year, with a reinstatement of the five-day week, the hockey band will be at every home game to lead the cheers as the Cats move into Division I play.

Other activities include marching and playing at football games, a fall car wash to raise needed cash, and as mentioned earlier, playing in the Octoberfest.

S.A. Concerts Presents Free Dance

SA Concerts invites everyone to dance to the outer Space Band this coming Sunday (April 21) from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. in Southwick gym (Redstone campus). It's FREE. (UVM ID must be shown at the door.)

The Outerspace Band, "a bunch of country boys with mud between their toes, music in their ears, and fingers in their noses," now lives in Wendell, Mass. Country living has brought on more traditional sounding music, and many acoustic instruments, that are blended with the core of blues and rock and roll. The nucleus of the band is in their sixth year playing together. Outerspace was formed in 1968 at Trinity College in Hartford, Conn., where everyone tolerated their schooling and looked forward to rocking. Graduation in 1972 took them to an abandoned day camp in Tolland, Conn. for the summer, and to the grounds of the Music Inn in Lenox, Mass. for the winter months. During these years the band has gigged from Maine to Washington D.C. to Nantucket Island in small bars, big clubs and lots of college dates. Some of the schools to date: Amherst, Assumption, Berkshire Comm., Boston U., Brandeis, Bridgeport, Connecticut Coll., Hampshire Coll., Harvard, Haverford, Hartford, Lafayette, U. of Mass., Mt. Holyoke, Nasson, U. of Rhode Island, Smith, Trinity, Tufts, Vassar, Wesleyan, and Wheaton College. Outerspace became a member of the National Entertainment Conference (NEC) in 1973, and was chosen to become a showcase act at the New England Convention.

"I've seen them take a bored mid-winter college crowd, get 'em up and dancing, and leave them cheering for more," says Gerrit Graham of Fusion, Cream, and Rolling Stone Mags.

Chief once described Outerspace music as country rock rhythm and blues. It's hard to dispute: a typical night would consist of some Outerspace originals (15 working numbers; many of which have been copyrighted), Taj Mahal, Jesse Winchester, the Band, the Grateful Dead, the Kinks, the Stones, Waylon Jennings, Hank Williams, Magic Sam, Ray Charles, Little Walter, James Cotton, Muddy Waters, Chuck Berry, Mose Allison, Junior Parker, Marvin Gaye, Martha and the Vandellas, and some traditional folk tunes.

Everybody Ought To Hear Montrose

by Doug Collette

Montrose
(Warner Bros. BS 2740)

Anyone who loves loud strong rock and roll as much as I do must dream about records like this. Montrose's debut album is one constant sonic assault from start to finish, a hyper-charged ride where there's deceleration in relative terms only, nearly forty minutes of cocky swagger.

I first heard Ronnie Montrose on Van Morrison's Tupelo Honey where the guitarist's tasteful fills and solos added so much to that album's mood of glowing contentment. I couldn't believe my eyes and ears when I saw and heard Montrose playing with the Edgar Winter Group, but I realize now that Ronnie was probably responsible for most of the hard-assed shots of true rock and roll energy that were that derivative group's only salvation.

I've never heard of vocalist Sam Hagar, but the rasp of his voice — a singing counterpart to the distortion of Montrose's guitar — his nonchalant reading of lyrics and the off-the-cuff attitude of his phrasing reminds me very much and very favorably of Rod Stewart. Sam's his own man though.

As are the rhythm section of drummer Denny Carmassi and another Van Morrison alumnus, bassist Bill Church. They're a devastiting duo who play with just enough deafening unpredictability to make them fascinating to follow.

These four are one tight, tight band and the tense, vicious energy of their music brings to mind the best of the Who and the original Jeff Beck Group, while there's also the monolithic quality of all the best heavy metal bands. No one man dominates here, but Montrose utilized his guitar especially well in the power trio format, from the way he fills out the sound to his well-placed intergalactic lead solos. Best of all, the Montrose band should have no trouble recreating all this in concert.

The recording is clean and clear and the production job, by the group themselves and Ted Templeman, has full presence and a superb stereo mix which only adds the luxury of great listening with headphones.

I'm surprised not to hear sonic booms when I play this album, but maybe that's because Montrose broke the speed of sound long ago and now they're approaching the speed of light. At any rate, you can't find any excesses here because Montrose is composed of eight short taut takes that explode like chain reaction time bombs. It's all original material, except Ray Brown's "Good Rockin' Tonight," but even that one echoes the group's own songs which are perfect marriages of raw music and coarse lyrics. The titles don't say it all, but they sure suggest enough: "Bad Motor Scooter," "One Thing On My Mind," "Rock The Nation," and "Rock Candy." And even further in the grand tradition of rock and roll, you'll have to fight to figure out the words. But that'll be no problem if Montrose connects with you, 'cause if it does, you'll be playing it constantly. I do.

There's people that'll say everything sounds the same on this record. Well, any band with a style of its own sounds that way if you only listen superficially. And sure, the music's simple, but the best rock and roll is, and always has been, simple. Simplicity is a difficult thing to master and it's even harder to breathe new life into something that's been so misused.

But for my money Montrose can already blow back all the new power bands I've heard and that includes Queen and Blue Oyster Cult. Compare "Rock Candy" to anything off Houses of the Holy and try to tell me this new group isn't heavier than Led Zep. Why I'd even go so far as to say that Montrose could throw Beak, Bogin and Appice for an eight count.

What more can I say. Montrose's music speaks for them and you can barely help but listen.

Blazing Saddles! It's The Three Musketeers!

by Peter Campbell

Mel Brooks' Blazing Saddles is being hyped as "the comedy hit of the year," and the public's enthusiastic response would seem to justify this claim — Saturday night's audience chuckled constantly, I did not. The humor was mostly second-rate borscht circuit, with a heavy reliance on ethnic gags and profanity. I find most ethnic humor degrading, and I got the feeling that whenever Brooks and his four collaborators ran out of ideas, they would just put a few swear words into the lines. It seemed to work, though. From the way the audience laughed, one would think the audience had never heard words like "nigger" or "shit" before.

The idea behind Blazing Saddles was good, to make a parody of every cliche you have ever seen in a western. A railroad is being built. They want to run through a town; the town resists, so a crooked lawyer secretly gets the state governor to alienate the town by hiring a black sheriff. Cleavon Little has a definite style as the sheriff, but neither he nor Madeline Kahn, who was great in Paper Moon, and does a good imitation of Marlene Deitrich here, could save this unbelievably slow-paced comedy.

I could not help comparing Blazing Saddles to the Woody Allen movies I saw the night before. In the time it took Mel Brooks to launch and beat a gag to death, Allen would have finished ten, and Brooks did not build the gags. Instead, the movie was a string of random ideas that drifted into total self-consciousness. Blazing Saddles has its moments, but you must sit through a lot of junk to get them.

More enjoyable was the new Three Musketeers, an action comedy with an all-star cast, including Michael York, Oliver Reed, Charlton Heston, Faye Dunaway, and Raquel Welch.

The Three Musketeers' director, Richard Lester, (A Funny Thing Happened On the Way to the Forum, Help, A Hard Day's Night) is fairly conservative compared to his previous directorial craziness. But the pace is still frenetic, and the beautiful scenery nicely blends historical realism with good comic flair. Note the scene where Louis XIII plays chess on the front lawn of Versailles with lions and white dogs for pawns.

Knowing we cannot accept the old Errol Flynn's D'Artagan who could scale tower walls like a human fly or fend off ten men at sword point, Lester resists the temptation to be camp. Michael York's D'Artagan is more real and more possible to laugh with, instead of at. Curiously enough, Raquel Welch is one of the few to have a good chance to show her acting ability. It is nil. She cannot even play her incompetent self well.

The Three Musketeers is a great movie for kids and the kid in me still loves anything with a duel in it, so I am looking forward to the coming sequel, Her Lady's Diamonds.

Bar Review...

he was third man on in a train, would drop his drawers and flash a moon during a Congregational Church meeting if someone would bet a case of beer on it. And loves telling the most beautiful jockette at the party to eff off, his face. The flog-man, however, is a universally tolerated scud who is never thrown out of a frat party no matter how gross he gets — his motto reads: "If you throw me outa here, I'll get naked and beat the shit outa all of ya."

Along with our hammer men, sleazes, jockettes, and hog-men, the rest of civilization is well-represented at frat blasts, but they don't add much life to these essentially lifeless affairs. Most of them don't know why in hell they came, and spend most of their time standing around watching our hammer men, sleazes, and hog-men. Like the audience at the Tom Salmon speech, they spend a lot of time yawning. With that TBR puts another column to sleep with the warning: See you at the next F.A.D.C.

Retrospective On Experimental Filmmaker

On Sunday, April 21, at 7 p.m. at John Dewey lounge, located in Old Mill, there will be a retrospective of the work of Maya Deren for the first time ever, an event that will remain in the hearts and minds of many for a long time.

Maya Deren has achieved a secure place in film history as the dominant personality and catalyst of the American experimental film movement of the Post War era. Joseph Campbell has writen of her:

"Miss Deren expands the art of film by reintegrating traditional principles of visionary search and realization that have been largely lost to contemporary film."

In addition to her films she has written an outstanding book on Haitian religion, The Divine Horseman, an anthropological study of Voodun ritual.

Ms. Deren's work will be shown in the company of two individuals who were, and still are closely involved with her work. Tiejo Ito: her former husband, now working at the Open Eye Gallery in NYC, an accomplished musician and composer who created many of the sound tracks for her films, adept at the Japanese flute and Haitian drums, and Cheryu Winnett: film editor and theatre director who is compiling the footage Ms. Deren shot on her trips to Haiti.

Teijo Ito will bring his drums and perform and explain the rhythms that are an essential part of Voodoo religious ceremony. Ms. Winnette will show and discuss the footage from Haiti. Ms. Deren's earlier films will be shown. In short the evening will be devoted to exploring in depth the work and life of a major American artist.

If you have any questions or would like to contribute some time or money, please contact Doreen Kraft or Robin Lloyd at 862-4929.

ability to get up and get off the seats and into the aisles. All the tunes from the album are catchy dance numbers, with strong, simplistic bass lines, dance floor percussion that keeps the pace in high energy, and tasty leads that supplement rather than dominate. Most new bands coming to the "big city" for the first time lose their distinctive sound, and any hint of regionalism somewhere inside the ampex. White Chocolate have been fortunate enough, and concerned enough about their music to bring the power and the glory of the local tavern into your livingroom, much in the early tradition of REO Speedwagon. Barroom weepers it ain't!

Elvis Anthology

RCA has released volume one of an Elvis anthology entitled A Legendary Performer. The first disc in the series covers Elvis' career from early 1954 recordings to his 1961 recording of "Can't Help Falling In Love." Other cuts from the period on this album include "Don't Be Cruel," "Love Me Tender," and "Are You Lonesome Tonight?" Also included in the package is a booklet of photos and newsclippings, recording dates, and data and some bits from old interviews. It's an interesting record, not only for Elvis fans and collectors, but for a whole new audience that never was exposed to his early work. It's a single record package, and retails for $7.98.

to the extent that the underpass is unnecessary. An interaction will always exist since the lights at the L/L crossing will remain.

If the lights can be coordinated more efficiently and the majority of students are willing to accept them and use them, then the proposed pedestrian tunnel would not be necessary.

I could not help comparing Blazing Saddles to the Woody Allen movies I saw the night before. In the time it took Mel Brooks to launch and beat a gag to death, Allen would have finished ten, and Brooks did not build the gags. Instead, the movie was a string of random ideas that drifted into total self-consciousness. Blazing Saddles has its moments, but you must sit through a lot of junk to get them.

More enjoyable was the new Three Musketeers, an action comedy with an all-star cast, including Michael York, Oliver Reed, Charlton Heston, Faye Dunaway, and Raquel Welch.

The Three Musketeers' director, Richard Lester, (A Funny Thing Happened On the Way to the Forum, Help, A Hard Day's Night) is fairly conservative compared to his previous directorial zaniness. But the pace is still frenetic, and the beautiful scenery nicely blends historical realism with good comic flair. Note the scene where Louis XIII plays chess on the front lawn of Versailles with lions and white dogs for pawns.

Knowing we cannot accept the old Errol Flynn's D'Artagun who could scale tower walls like a human fly or fend off ten men at sword point, Lester resists the temptation to be camp. Michael York's D'Artagun is more real and more possible to laugh with, instead of at. Curiously enough, Raquel Welch is one of the few to have a good chance to show her acting ability. It is nil. She cannot even play her incompetent self well.

The Three Musketeers is a great movie for kids and the kid in me still loves anything with a duel in it, so I am looking forward to the coming sequel, Her Lady's Diamonds.

he was third man on in a train, would drop his drawers and flash a moon during a Congregational Church meeting if someone would bet a case of beer on it. And loves telling the most beautiful jockette at the party to sit on his face. The Hog-man, however, is a universally tolerated soul who is never thrown out of a frat party no matter how gross he gets– his motto reads: "If you throw me outa here, I'll get naked and beat the shit outa all of ya."

Along with our hammer men, sleazes, jockettes, and hog-men, the rest of civilization is well-represented at frat blasts, but they don't add much life to these essentially lifeless affairs. Most of them don't know why in hell they came, and spend most of their time standing around watching our hammer men, sleazes, and hog-men. Like the audience at the Tom Salmon speech, they spend a lot of time yawning. With that TBR puts another column to sleep with the warning: See you at the next F.A.D.C.

Retrospective On Experimental Filmmaker

On Sunday, April 21, at 7 p.m. at John Dewey lounge, located in Old Mill, there will be a retrospective of the work of Maya Deren for the first time ever, an event that will remain in the hearts and minds of many for a long time.

Maya Deren has achieved a secure place in film history as the dominant personality and catalyst of the American experimental film movement of the Post War era. Joseph Campbell has written of her:

"Miss Deren expands the art of film by reintegrating traditional principles of visionary research and realization that have been largely lost to contemporary arts."

In addition to her films she has written an outstanding book on Haitian religion, The Divine Horseman, an anthropological study of Voodun ritual.

Ms. Deren's work will be shown in the company of two individuals who were, and still are closely involved with her work. Tiejo Ito: her former husband, now working at the Open Eye Gallery in NYC, an accomplished musician and composer who created many of the sound tracks for her films, adept at the Japanese flute and Haitian drums, and Cheryu Winnett: film editor and theatre director who is compiling the footage Ms. Deren shot on her trips to Haiti.

Tejio Ito will bring his drums and perform and explain the rhythms that are an essential part of Voodoo religious ceremony; Ms. Winnette will show and discuss the footage from Haiti. Ms. Deren's earlier films will be shown. In short the evening will be devoted to exploring in depth the work and life of a major American artist.

ability to get an audience up off the seats and into the aisles. All the tunes from the album are catchy dance numbers, with strong, simplistic bass lines, dance floor percussion that keeps the pace in high energy, and tadty leads that supplement rather than dominate. Most new bands coming to the "big city" for the first time lose their distinctive sound, and any hint of regionalism somewhere inside the ampex. White Chocolate have been fortunate enough, and concerned enough about their music to bring the power and the glory of the local tavern into your livingroom, much in the early tradition of REO Speedwagon. Elvis Anthology

RCA has released volume one of an Elvis anthology entitled The Legendary Performer. The first disc in the series covers Elvis' career from early 1954 recordings to his 1961 recording of "Can't Help Falling In Love." Other cuts from the period on this album include "Don't Be Cruel," "Love Me Tender," and "Are You Lonesome Tonight?" Also included in the package is a booklet of photos and newsclippings, recording dates, and data and some bits from old interviews. It's an interesting record, not only for Elvis fans and collectors, but for a whole new audience that never was exposed to his early work. It's a single record package, and retails for $7.98.

Everybody Ought To Hear Montrose

by Doug Collette

Montrose
(Warner Bros. BS 2740)

Anyone who loves loud strong rock and roll as much as I do must dream about records like this. Montrose's debut album is one constant sonic assault from start to finish, a hyper-charged ride where there's deceleration in relative terms only, nearly forty minutes of socky swagger.

I first heard Ronnie Montrose on Van Morrison's Tupelo Honey, where the guitarist's tasteful fills and solos added so much to that album's mood of glowing contentment. I couldn't believe my eyes and ears when I saw and heard Montrose playing with the Edgar Winter Group, but I realize now that Ronnie was probably responsible for most of the hard-assed shots of true rock and roll energy that were that derivative group's only salvation.

I've never heard of vocalist Sam Hagar, but the rasp of his voice — a singing counterpart to the distortion of Montrose's guitar — his nonchalant reading of lyrics and the off-the-cuff attitude of his phrasing reminds me very much and very favorably of Rod Stewart. Sam's his own man though.

As are the rhythm section of drummer Denny Carmassi and another Van Morrison alumnus, bassist Bill Church. They're a devastiting duo who play with just enough deafening unpredictability to make them fascinating to follow.

These four are one tight, tight band and the tense, vicious energy of their music brings to mind the best of the Who and the original Jeff Beck Group, while there's also the monolithic quality of all the best heavy metal bands. No one man dominates here, but Montrose utilized his guitar especially well in the power trio format, from the way he fills out the sound to his well-placed intergalactic lead solos. Best of all, the Montrose band should have no trouble recreating all this in concert.

The recording is clean and clear and the production job, by the group themselves and Ted Templeman, has full presence and a superb stereo mix which only adds the luxury of great listening with headphones.

I'm surprised not to hear sonic booms when I play this album, but maybe that's because Montrose broke the speed of sound long ago and now they're approaching the speed of light. At any rate, you can't find any excesses here because Montrose is composed of eight short taut takes that explode like chain reaction time bombs. It's all original material, except Ray Brown's "Good Rockin' Tonight," but even that one echoes the group's own songs which are perfect marriages of raw music and coarse lyrics. The titles don't say it all, but they sure suggest enough: "Bad Motor Scooter," "One Thing On My Mind," "Rock The Nation," and "Rock Candy." And even further in the grand tradition of rock and roll, you'll have to fight to figure out the words. But that'll be no problem if Montrose connects with you, 'cause if it does, you'll be playing it constantly. I do.

There's people that'll say everything sounds the same on this record. Well, any band with a style of its own sounds that way if you only listen superficially. And sure, the music's simple, but the best rock and roll is, and always has been, simple. Simplicity is a difficult thing to master and it's even harder to breathe new life into something that's been so misused.

But for my money Montrose can already blow back all the new power bands I've heard and that includes Queen and Blue Oyster Cult. Compare "Rock Candy" to anything off Houses of the Holy and try to tell me this new group isn't heavier than Led Zep. Why I'd even go so far as to say that Montrose could throw Beck, Bogert and Appice for an eight count.

What more can I say. Montrose's music speaks for them and you can barely hear but listen.

Blazing Saddles! It's The Three Musketeers!

by Peter Campbell

Mel Brooks' Blazing Saddles is being hyped as "the comedy hit of the year," and the public's enthusiastic response would seem to justify this claim — Saturday night's audience chuckled constantly, I did not. The humor was mostly second-rate borscht circuit, with a heavy reliance on ethnic gags and profanity. I find most ethnic humor degrading, and I got the feeling that whenever Brooks and his four collaborators ran out of ideas, they would just put a few swear words into the lines. It seemed to work, though. From the way the audience laughed, one would think the audience had never heard words like "nigger" or "shit" before.

The idea behind Blazing Saddles was good, to make a parody of every cliche you have ever seen in a western. A railroad is being built. They want to run through a town; the town resists, so a crooked lawyer secretly gets the state governor to alienate the town by hiring a black sheriff. Cleavon Little has a definite style as the sheriff, but neither he nor Madeline Kahn, who was great in Paper Moon, and does a good imitation of Marlene Deitrich here, could save this unbelievably slow-paced comedy.

I could not help comparing Blazing Saddles to the Woody Allen movies I saw the night before. In the time it took Mel Brooks to launch and beat a gag to death, Allen would have finished ten, and Brooks did not build the gags. Instead, the movie was a string of random ideas that drifted into total self-consciousness. Blazing Saddles has its moments, but you must sit through a lot of junk to get them.

More enjoyable was the new Three Musketeers, an action comedy with an all-star cast, including Michael York, Oliver Reed, Charlton Heston, Faye Dunaway, and Raquel Welch.

But the pace is still frenetic, and the beautiful scenery nicely blends historical realism with good comic flair. Note the scene where Louis XIII plays chess on the front lawn of Versailles with bears and white dogs for pawns.

Knowing we cannot accept the old Errol Flynn's D'Artagun who could scale tower walls like a human fly or fend off ten men at sword point, Lester resists the temptation to be camp. Michael York's D'Artagun is more real and more possible to laugh with, instead of at. Curiously enough, Raquel Welch is one of the few to have a good chance to show her acting ability. It is nil. S.A. Concerts Presents Free Dance

SA Concerts invites everyone to dance to the outer Space Band this coming Sunday (April 21) from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. in Southwick gym (Redstone campus). It's FREE. (UVM ID must be shown at the door.)

The Outerspace Band, "a bunch of country boys with mud between their toes, music in their ears, and fingers in their noses," now lives in Wendell, Mass. Country living has brought on more traditional sounding music, and many acoustic instruments, that are blended with the core of blues and rock and roll. The nucleus of the band is in their sixth year playing together. Outerspace was formed in 1968 at Trinity College in Hartford, Conn., where everyone tolerated their schooling and looked forward to rocking. Graduation in 1972 took them to an abandoned day camp in Tolland, Conn. for the summer; and to the grounds of the Music Inn in Lenox, Mass. for the winter months. During these years the band has gigged from Maine to Washington, D.C. to Nantucket Island in small bars, big clubs and lots of college dates. Some of the schools to date: Amherst, Assumption, Berkshire Comm., Boston U., Brandeis, Bridgeport, Connecticut Coll., Hampshire Coll., Harvard, Haverford, Hartford, Lafayette, U. of Mass., Mt. Holyoke, Nasson, U. of Rhode Island, Smith, Trinity, Tufts, Vassar, Wesleyan, and Wheaton College. Outerspace became a member of the National Entertainment Conference (NEC) in 1973, and was chosen to become a showcase act at the New England Convention.

"I've seen them take a bored mid-winter college crowd, get 'em up and dancing, and leave them cheering for more," says Gerrit Graham of Fusion, Cream, and Rolling Stone Mags.

Chief once described Outerspace music as country rock rhythm and blues. It's hard to dispute: a typical night would consist of some Outerspace originals (15 working numbers; many of which have been copyrighted), Taj Mahal, Jesse Winchester, the Band, the Grateful Dead, the Kinks, the Stones, Waylon Jennings, Hank Williams, Magic Sam, Ray Charles, Little Walter, James Cotton, Muddy Waters, Chuck Berry, Mose Allison, Junior Parker, Marvin Gaye, Martha and the Vandellas, and some traditional folk tunes.

Campus Security Tries To Change Its Image

by Andy Morse

The Campus Security Department at UVM is striving to become more professional and efficient, according to Chief Fred A. Barrett. Barrett explained that the Campus Security Department is losing its image of the door-checking, coal-shoveling, night watchman.

The main function of the Department is of course to protect life and property and Barrett pointed out varied programs to protect the University more efficiently. The major step taken has been an effort to work more closely with the Burlington Police Department.

Barrett explained that B.P.D. and Campus Security are now linked directly by radio, making possible quick efficient communications. Weekly training sessions are now required of all fourteen officers employed at Campus Security. At the sessions, guest lectures from other law enforcement agencies speak on new approaches to problems on campus such as disturbances, prowlers and emergency calls.

All of the Campus Security officers are Vermont Deputy Sheriffs and have graduated from the Vermont Law Enforcement School. The Department's officers have the power of arrest and detainment. This is used only in emergencies and when the Burlington Police are not available. Campus Security is not armed and hopes conditions on campus won't call for guns in the future. According to Barrett the colleges that have armed police on campus are in large cities where prowlers, thieves and rapists find the college as a lucrative night spot. Because of this many colleges are locked up. On some city campuses dorms are locked twenty four hours a day, with unarmed student patrols guarding the campus.

Barrett explained that on the Syracuse State University campus students, policemen, and police dogs patrol the campus daily. Barrett said that UVM at this point has no need for such decisive protection, as illustrated by the open dormatories here on campus. Barrett pointed out that although rip-offs have increased since dorms have been open, the students have not voted to lock the doors thus leaving them open.

Barrett explained that Campus Security does not patrol the Residence Halls or the Area surrounding them, emphasizing that Keith Miser, Director of Residence Halls, is in charge of the security in the dorms. To deter the increased loitering and robbery in the dorms, No Trespassing signs have been placed on every University building door.

Chief Barrett explained that the most frequent crime on campus is prowlers roaming residence halls testing and carding doors. There is nothing one can do if he finds one of these thieves in his room for all the prowler has to say is that he thought this was his friend's room and the door was open anyway.

But if a crime is ever witnessed, said the chief, one should call Campus Security immediately thus summoning the quickest aid. As part of the new program, the Burlington Police are called by Campus Security.

Barrett cited the department's lack of attractiveness to young men as its biggest problem. Because the job offers little excitement young men wanting a career in law enforcement will choose the more challenging municipal force. Officers on the Campus Security force are generally in the 40 to 60 year age group. Barrett pointed out the dedication of his officers noting that some had been serving up to fifteen years.

"The main function of the department is to serve the University in any way it can," stated Barrett. Random functions of the department range from investigating a robbery to finding a missing student to backing the Campus Rescue Squad with a Campus Security station wagon.

Campus Security, with student help, has designed, built, and will soon install an electronic fire map of the campus. One map will be installed in the Burlington Fire Station and the other at the Campus Security office. Every building on campus is color coded as to what it is, a classroom, laboratory, or a dormitory. Should a fire break out, the building's light would flash on the board indicating where the fire is and what kind of equipment is needed to fight it.

Barrett feels that projects such as these coupled with the weekly training sessions and improved cooperation with the Burlington Police, promise a professional and more efficient Campus Security Department in the future.

Financial Aid Procedures Explained

by Carol Dufault

Despite the present influx of financial aid applications at UVM, Ms. Deborah Wolk, financial aid advisor, set aside a few moments to explain the methods and procedures used by the applicant and the financial aid office to determine what university students qualify for financial assistance from the University.

Incoming freshmen are required to check a box on their application form if they desire consideration for financial assistance from the University, and a family financial statement is filed through the American College Testing Service. If the student applicant is accepted by the Admissions Office, personnel in the Financial Aid office constructs a folder which includes the applicant's confidential financial statement. Next, the Financial Aid Office screens the applicant's statement to determine what exactly his need is for financial assistance in regard to higher education expenses.

A number of factors are involved in determining the amount of aid awarded to each eligible applicant. Ms. Wolk pointed out that a common misunderstanding results when students think that because their parents' income exceeds $15,000, they are not eligible for financial assistance. The monetary contribution expected from parents toward a child's higher education is determined by subtracting money allowed for living necessities, taxes, social security, medical bills, and transportation if more than one parent works from the family's adjusted gross income. The more money the family has left, the larger the parents expected contribution toward a higher education. However, allowances are also made if the family has more than one child in college.

Step two involves compiling the assets of the applicant's parents. Total savings, house equity, stocks and bonds are added together to create the "net assets." Funds allowed toward retirement are subtracted from the assets, and a portion of the assets is added to the discretionary income to determine the expected parental contribution for a university education for their son or daughter.

Financial aid allowed for the out-of-state students is dependent on the amount of money allocated by the federal government, and the money left over from aid to in-state students is added to this fund. However, in the past, the only financial assistance to out-of-state students has been in the form of a loan or work-study. The loan, work-study forms of financial aid is determined by the amount of needed financial aid determined through the parents confidential statement, and the maximum loan amount is set by the government.

Ms. Wolk pointed out, that financial assistance in the form of grants are given out as much as possible, however the work-study program has proved to be a valuable source of financial aid. Students are usually given a choice of receiving financial assistance in the form of a loan or work-study. Problems have arisen in the current 1973-74 academic year because the total monies available through loans and grants were not enough to meet many work-study student's needs. These students were forced to turn to alternate means outside of university sources to obtain their estimated needs of $250 and $280.

In regard to athletic scholarships, Ms. Wolk noted that an estimated $200,000 was alloted for the athletic financial aid budget this year; but she was quick to note that all of the money was not used. In effect, the athletic department chooses the recipients of the athletic scholarships, and the Financial Aid Office merely rubber stamps the department's choices. In this regard, the Financial Aid Office is merely the middle man in the scholarship transactions, and also recipient athletes accept the financial award through the Financial Aid Office.

Because present admission policies encourage the application and acceptance of students from minority backgrounds, they are awarded large sums of financial aid, which take the forms of grants, loans, and work-study employment.

With present economic instability around us, students should be encouraged to apply for financial aid if they feel they are eligible for financial assistance, and Vermont students are reminded that they must apply to the Vermont Student Assistance Corporation as well as the University if they are in need of financial aid.

East-Asian Suite Openings Available

The Asian Studies which is rapidly growing at UVM involves interdisciplinary studies in History, Philosophy, Literature, Anthropology, Political Science, and Geography. Next fall, in addition to the Chinese and Japanese language programs, which will be based at the Living/Learning Center, there will be a chance for Asian Area Studies students to live together. Chinese and Japanese language classes will be held at L/L as well as some of the other disciplines.

It is the hope of those presently involved in this program that a community will continue to evolve from such a living situation. Things that have happened this year are the Asian Symposium, the East Asian Art Exhibit in Everyone's Gallery, an Indian Banquet for 100 people and new course designs. Ideas for next year include a continuation of the symposium which will include Baba Ram Dass, a Chinese music group, an Asian Film Festival and Japanese, Chinese, and Middle Eastern cooking classes at L/L.

Part of the deal with living in L/L next year will be a committment the student makes to him or herself. This will be in the form of a contract whereby the student will work out with the program directors what she wishes to do with this time and space. We feel that this center can be used by students studying the language or not, but who have a keen interest in the other side of the world and who wish to live together and actively participate in creating an atmosphere of learning and sharing.

Anyone interested in being part of this experience as a resident of L/L please come to a meeting on Friday, April 19, 4:30 p.m. Area and Int'l Studies Bldg., Main St. Anyone who can't come then, but is interested in Area Studies courses offered, come to the Area and Int'l Studies office.

Summer Session Catalog Now Available At Grasse Mount

The University of Vermont Summer Session catalog, listing more than 250 courses to be offered this year at the University and other locations throughout the state, is now available from the Office of Continuing Education at UVM.

"This year we have expanded the Session to include more course offerings and a variety of special programs and workshops," said John R. Bushey, director of the Summer Session.

Courses run from one to eight weeks in length, with seven different starting dates. Day-to-day schedules are flexible; in addition to those courses offered on the University campus, other programs will be located at sites such as Camels Hump, and the towns of Huntington, Berlin, Montpelier, Rutland, and East Monkton.

A great variety of programs are available, including:

Living/Learning Center workshops where the student combines the opportunity to explore a particular subject matter in depth while he lives with colleagues and friends in modern suite arrangements on the campus.

Experimental courses actively involve the student with actual experience as part of the learning process.

Programs for high school students are once again being offered by the University. Juniors and seniors in high school may take freshmen college courses for credit. Other special programs offered for high school students include a two week debate program, designed to improve debating performance in analysis, evidence, argument, organization and presentation.

Athletic camps in a variety of sports are offered for both boys and girls, and the Summer Adventure Day Camp for youngsters will be held for six weeks beginning in July. Children may be enrolled for all six weeks, or for two week periods.

Early Session workshops, starting May 20, designed for those who wish to earn those extra credits, but have summer jobs or other plans.

Registration by mail ends on June 12; but in-person registration may be completed on the first day of classes, as early as May 20, with other starting dates of June 17, through August 5.

Further information, applications and free copies of the catalog are available by contacting the Office of Continuing Education, Grasse Mount, the University of Vermont, Burlington, Vt. 05401; telephone 656-2085.

Mississippi, and Arkansas.

He was first elected to a seat created by reapportionment in the Georgia House of Representatives in 1965 but was prevented from taking office in January, 1966 by members of the legislature who objected to his statements on the Vietnam War. After winning a second election in February, 1966 to fill his vacant seat, a special House Committee again voted to bar him from membership in the legislature. Upon his third election in 1966, the United States Supreme Court ruled unanimoualy that the Georgia House had erred in refusing him his seat. After a year of harrassments, he was finally seated.

The prominence he had gained during this period was swelled immeasurably by his conspicuous role in the 1968 Democratic National Convention. Charging that Blacks were being excluded from significant participation in the regular delegation headed by Governor Lester Maddox, Bond and fellow State Representative Ben Brown led an insurgent delegation, the Georgia Loyal National Democrats, to the convention in Chicago. The irregulars won half of the 42 votes that would have gone to the regular (Maddox) delegation, and thus helped to defeat the unit rule that had stifled dissent at previous conventions. Seconding the nomination of peace candidate Eugene McCarthy, Julian Bond's name was placed in nomination for the vice presidency, although he was too young to accept.

Since 1968 Bond has been working in Georgia to make community politics a reality for his constituency.

Julian Bond's appearance on the UVM campus is free.

Andrews Den

President Edward C. Andrews released the following statement on April 11:

"During the last few months there have been several articles in the student newspaper which have alleged serious faults with the University administration. One, of course, expects to find articles of this type in a student newspaper. Generally speaking there is no need to make a response.

Last Thursday, however, the student newspaper printed charges of an extremely serious nature which would have been libelous and actionable had they appeared in the public press. On Friday the student author called a public press conference and repeated his allegations. The subject of the charges requires a response.

Specifically, the student author has charged the University with mismanagement of its funds and with conflict of interest on its Board of Trustees.

UVM is particularly sensitive to the fact that it must have trustees from the state community that are both knowledgeable and active in the state. It is also sensitive to the fact that, as the third largest employer within Vermont, it has a responsibility to do business within the state whenever possible. In acknowledging these two requirements, it is then the responsibility of the University to provide an adequate system of checks and balances to protect the University from actual conflicts of interests of its trustees, and to protect its trustees from the appearance of any such conflicts. We believe the record clearly shows the establishment and rigorous adherence to such a system of isolating trustees from decision making in areas where there could be conflicts of interest. The student newspaper has nevertheless, naively ignored these systems of safeguards and simply assumed that being a trustee and a member of the local business community necessarily is an automatic conflict of interest and an attempt to obtain personal financial gain.

Historically, all colleges and universities have drawn on the ranks of community leadership to find men and women to oversee and advance their programs. Over the years the University has benefited immensely from the experience and wisdom of its trustees. There is, in actuality, nothing material presented in student newspapers would justify a charge that any trustee acted in self interest. The charges are both unwarranted and unfounded. The record on matters under discussion follows:

1. Banking is under the direction of the University's Treasurer, and has been for many years, and are directed by the trustees.

2. In our general account we maintain deposits which are in excess of the amount required by the University for its own use. Only half to three days interest is lost to the University as a result of this practice. The balance is invested in roughly equivalent amount of time which the University is entitled to use under circumstances that would produce no loss to the University.

3. Funds are invested in the University's general account in amounts required to meet payroll checks and bills as they are deposited and at the time that they are issued.

4. All investments are made competitively to obtain the best return. When a comparable return is available, the University places its funds in the investment with the obvious benefit to the University economy.

5. Independent auditors, in a report dated November, 1973, have stated that the University has legally taken action to assure the fact that all contributions are not immediately lost to the University in the event that the trustees do not provide sufficient funds to the University to cover deficits. This action has resulted in lower interest income to the University on deposits. All of the above actions are such action is not illegal and a crime under the law.

Upon the basis of the above facts, I recommend to the public, press and the University community that the charges made by the student author are without foundation. I recommend that the University of Vermont's Board of Trustees, Executive Committee, Auditors, Treasurer, Controller, Director of Accounts and Investments, and the University administration be commended for their sound financial practices.

5. Investments of the University endowment funds are in three categories: (1) funds placed for investment purposes with professional investment counsultants, (2) funds managed by Associates of the University, and (3) those placed with the University.

With present economic instability around us, students should be encouraged to apply for financial aid if they feel they are eligible for financial assistance, and Vermont students are reminded that they must apply to the Vermont Student Assistance Corporation as well as the University if they are in need of financial aid.

Andrews Denies Franco's Charges

President Edward C. Andrews released the following statement on April 15:

During the last few months there have been several articles in the student newspaper which have alleged various faults with the University administration. One, of course, expects to read articles of this type in a student newspaper. Generally speaking there is no need to make a response.

Last Thursday, however, the student newspaper printed charges of an extremely serious nature which would have been libelous and actionable had they appeared in the public press. On Friday the student author called a public press conference and repeated his allegations. The critique of the charges requires no response.

Specifically, the student author has charged the University with mismanagement of its funds and with conflict of interest on its Board of Trustees.

UVM is particularly sensitive to the fact that it must have trustees from the state community that are both knowledgeable and active in the state. It is also sensitive to the fact that, as the third largest employer within Vermont, it has a responsibility to do business within the state whenever possible. In acknowledging these two requirements, it is then the responsibility of the University to provide an adequate system of checks and balances to protect the University from actual conflicts of interests of its trustees, and to protect its trustees from the appearance of any such conflicts. We believe the record clearly shows the establishment and rigorous adherence to such a system of isolating trustees from decision making in areas where there could be conflicts of interest. The student newspaper has nevertheless, naively ignored these systems of safeguards and simply assumed that being a trustee and a member of the local business community [illegible] automatic conflict of interest and an attempt to obtain personal financial gain.

Historically, all colleges and universities have drawn on the ranks of community leadership to find men and women to oversee and advance their programs. Over the years the University has benefited immensely from the experience and wisdom of its trustees. There is, in actuality, nothing in the material presented in the student newspaper which would justify a conclusion that any trustee has acted in self interest. The charges are both unwarranted and unfair. The record concerning the matters under discussion is as follows:

1. Banking transactions are under the direction of the University's Treasurer of 20 years, and are in no way directed by University trustees.

2. In our general checking account we maintain forward deposits which are equivalent to the average cash requirements of the University for from one and a half to three days. No interest is lost to the University as a result of this policy because the balance maintained is roughly equivalent to the amount of federal funds which the University is not entitled to invest except under circumstances which would produce no income for the University.

3. Funds are deposited to the University payroll account in exactly the amount required to cover the payroll checks written and are deposited at the same time that the payroll checks are issued.

4. All short-term investments are placed competitively for the best return. When rates are comparable the University places its funds locally with obvious benefit to the state economy.

Independent external auditors, in a report to the State Auditor of Accounts in November, 1973, advised the University that it might legally take advantage of the fact that all checks it writes are not presented immediately for payment and that the "float" thus provided could be used by the University as a device to lower its average cash deposits. As a matter of fact, such action would be illegal and a crime under Vermont law.

Upon the occasion of the public review of the recommendations of the Independent Auditors, Vermont's State Auditor of Accounts commended the University on its financial practices.

5. Investments of University endowment funds are in three categories; those placed for investment purposes by outside consultants, Jennison Associates of New York City; those placed in the "Common Fund," and those under the control of the University Treasurer. Investments under the control of the University Treasurer are comprised of stocks donated to the University as gifts from local estates and retained because of their investment value. This portion of the University endowment has appreciated 214 per cent since 1967. During the same period, both the Jennison investments and those of the Common Fund have declined in value in line with national stock averages. Clearly the University has benefited greatly from the decision of its Treasurer to hold shares of local bank stocks when those have been received as gifts by the University, and it is strange that the University or its trustees who serve on local bank Boards should be criticized for such action.

In any event, independent investment counselors, not University trustees, select, buy and sell securities of the Universities active portfolios in line with endowment fund investment policies.

6. The University has always had a policy of doing business locally whenever it finds services and costs comparable. As an example of that general policy in 1965 it placed its various insurance coverages with a group of local insurance agencies, and as a consequence, UVM has enjoyed excellent company of reasonable rates during a period when many other colleges were unable to obtain full coverage or became subject to skyrocketing rates. The University at all times has welcomed proposals from competing insurance agencies and reviews its insurance coverage and costs on a regular basis.

7. All trustee business is transacted either in committee meetings or Board meetings, all of which are announced and open to the public, and most of which are covered by the press.

In summary the charges made in the student newspaper and relayed to the public press unjustly assail the management of the University and the character of its trustees. The fact that the University Board has substantial representation of persons active within the Vermont business community does not and has not meant a conflict of interest. In addition to being unjust, the charges, if not promptly laid to rest, would tend to unnecessarily undermine public confidence in an institution and in people who have conducted themselves such as to deserve public appreciation.

Administration Attempts Cover-Up...

record with the State of Vermont.

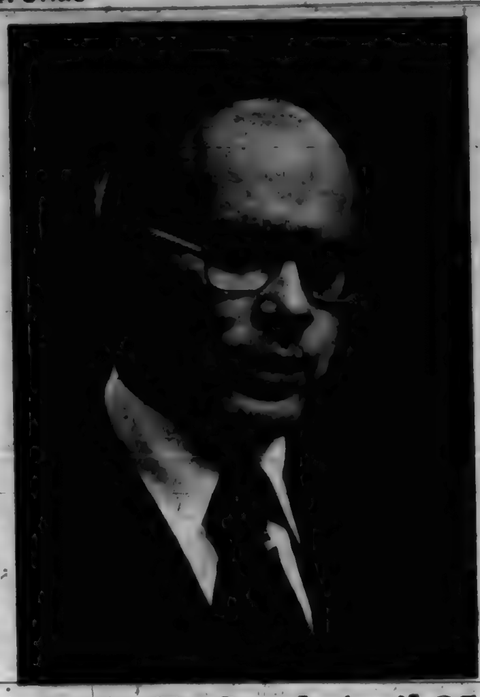
So much for Andrew's contention that he had "no direct day to day involvement with policies involving the University and the Chittenden." As President, how could he but know about the nine month, $100,000 balance? Is incompetence his excuse, when it is his job to be aware of these general facts, especially when they involve not day to day fluctuations but consistent balances over long periods of time?

But Andrews and Clerkin were not alone in the white-wash attempt. Howard Allen, Chittenden Director, owner of $150 thousand of Chittenden stock, claimed "no conflict what so ever." He sat on both the Finance and Budget, and Investment committees while they allowed stock investments, certificates of deposit, and high checking account balances with his bank. Both George Little and Daniel Burke, who were named by the Cynic as involved in conflict of interest, were also on the Finance and Budget Committee with Allen.

The Board of Trustees Chairman Bingham Humphrey contended in a Free Press article that Trustees "lean over backwards" in abstaining from votes that involve a conflict of interest. But this justification breaks down quickly.

All three of the Trustees Committees dealing with money were replete with the business associates of trustees with conflicts of interest. For example, Robert Boardman was a member of the Finance and Budget committee while his co-officer at Hickock and Boardman Insurance, Mr. I. M. Boardman, was a director and $1/5 million stockholder in the Howard Bank. Boardman also sat on the Investment Committee with not only aforementioned Howard Allen, but also Allen Eaton, who is a co-Director of the Central Vermont Public Service Corp. with L. Douglas Meredith, a Chittenden Director and holder of $42 thousand of Chittenden stock. So even if the Trustees named last week did abstain, they had enough of the right people on the right committees to sway the right votes which made for the Chittenden and the Howard over a half a million dollars.

Fundamentally, all these self-justifications fall apart. We are asked to believe that the $12.3 million, which is equivalent to 1/4 of the UVM 1973 budget, "just happened" to fall into the right laps, as though it dropped from the sky. Not only are our President and Trustees corporate executives, they are Burlington's leading dealers in crapola.



Leahy To Speak April 25

Student Association Speakers Bureau Chairperson Richard Cassidy announced today that Chittenden County State's Attorney Patrick Leahy will be the final speaker in this semester's Public Affairs Forum.

Appearing Thursday, April 25 at 7:30 p.m. in North Lounge, Billings Student Center at UVM, Leahy will talk about the "Role of the Watergate Prosecuter."

Patrick Leahy, who is currently the only declared Democratic candidate for the United States Senate, will be running against either Former Federal Power Commissioner Charles Ross or Congressman Richard Mallary in next fall's general election.

Leahy, 34, has been Chittenden County State's Attorney since 1966. He is a member of the Governor's Commission on the Administration of Justice, and he is Vice-President of the National District Attorney's Association. He serves on the association's five-man energy crisis committee.

Patrick Leahy's appearance on the UVM campus is free and open to the public.

Earth Day Fair To Debut Monday

As the energy crisis is conveniently misinterpreted and a "back to business as usual" malaise permeates our society, the environmental issues and achievements are de-emphasized and ignored.

As a countermeasure, Environmonth, Vermont Green-Up Day's successor, will kick off the month of May's statewide activities with an Earth Day Fair, April 22 at Burlington's Memorial Auditorium.

Since 1970, Earth Day Fairs have been a celebration of a newly aroused citizenship participation in environmental action. A revolution of change in the American way of life were recognized as the solution for our past ignorance and unchecked disregard for the planet, which we inhabit. To once again escalate ecological consciousness, the Earth Day Fair will focus attention on transportation issues. Some thirty displays will represent local and state planning agencies joined with public and private interest groups in order to explore future options. These groups are aware of each other's competing demands on transportation resources and services. The exhibit process will be a communications channel to discover mutual interests and areas of possible agreement.

Solutions to energy resource problems and developing transportation alternatives entail social, economic and political decisions with wide ecological implications that ought to be understood throughout the community. Citizen participation on Earth Day will be encouraged to arouse new leadership and new thinking. Citizens, who can benefit from an opportunity to learn more about alternatives, government plans or citizen effectiveness, who will also benefit from increased understanding of the conflicts among each other's interest and who will in turn stimulate activism, are urged to attend.

There will be a panel discussion at 3:30 p.m., bicycle workshop at 3:30, and a paper airplane contest at, 5 p.m. Admission is free.

Volunteers Needed

Five high school students will attempt to break the badminton marathon world's record of 200 hours beginning Friday, April 19 at 5 p.m. and ending Monday, April 29 at 8 p.m. Volunteers are desperately needed to witness this event to be held at the Burlington High School gym. Please contact Chris Crowley at 864-7003 or Jack Hart at 862-1983 for further information.

UYA Volunteer Helps Children Through Mobile Dental Van

by Becky Burr

Joe Nolting transferred from Bowdoin College to UVM because he heard that there was a program called University Year For Action which allowed students to work in the poverty community outside the walls of the university.

Now, a year later, Nolting is one of the two UYA volunteers working to provide dental care to low-income Vermont children on the Mobile Dental Van. Originally founded by the Office of Economic Opportunity, the dental vans are staffed by a full-time dentist, low-income dental assistants and UYA volunteers.

For the first three months of the school year, Nolting was based in Island Pond, a tiny Northeast Kingdom community. It's achingly cold in Island Pond in the winter and the wind whips cruelly through the few streets of this very rural community. Combatting the cold and the loneliness of being in such an isolated situation made him "much more aware of what the conditions of poverty and the living situations of many of the Island Pond residents were like."

Nolting's UYA job is doing outreach work for the Dental Van. In each new community he makes contact with the residents and explains how they can obtain dental care for their children. 50,000 Vermonters have no teeth and 40,000 others have only half their teeth. Half the children in Vermont never see a dentist before their fifteenth birthday. This means that the dental needs of 80 percent of Vermont's children are not being met. Nolting is working to make a dent in some of these statistics by helping provide real care to real people.

He seeks out school nurses, social workers, police officers, extension service personnel and other community people who are likely to know and to care where human need exists. Then the most difficult part of his job confronts him.

With care and sensitivity Joe approaches the families who are eligible for care explaining how both Medicaid and the Vermont Public Interest Research Group's Tooth Fairy Bill can help them receive comprehensive dental care for their children. "Sometimes it takes a couple of hours just to talk to a mother," he explains. "She has a baby and maybe a three-year-old and she can't just stop and talk. So I visit her in her home and hold the baby while she heats the bottle and listens to what I have to say. I've been working six months now and so far no one's refused care."

He is also responsible for nutrition workshops to help low-income families understand how to improve their diet in a way that is economically feasible and acceptable. Ms. Joyce Livak, Professor of Home Economics has offered Nolting "an incredible amount of support and advice."

"UYA offered me an alternative," he explains. I had to find out what it would be like to really do something but to learn why I was doing it." Openings for September positions are available. Grandma Jones Reveals Cannabis Cultivation Secrets

by Randy Jansen

Today, in a continuing how-to series, Grandma Jones presents her ancient secrets on the process of raising Cannabis sativa. Grandma Jones' process will save the consumer from the high cost of cannabis. (Which as you know it isn't regulated under Phase IV.)

To begin, Grandma says you first must get the seeds. Seeds can be obtained in most ounces sold. Separate them into two piles. In one pile put only the shiny, hard, dark seeds. The other contains the green, cracked and shriveled seeds. Use only the former pile. These seeds will assure you of higher percentage of germination. Place the seeds between damp paper towels. In about a week you will know which ones will germinate and which ones won't. The seeds are now ready to plant. Since Grandma Jones doesn't get out too often, her method is best for indoor growing, especially dormitories. Therefore planting must be in flower pots, boxes, etc. or anything that will hold soil and allow for water to run through.

It is important to have good soil for your grass to grow. Grandma Jones recommends an equal mixture of three ingredients: (1) a decent garden soil or soil from a wooded area. (2) some peat moss and (3) sand. Mix well. If soil is too heavy add some more peat moss.

Plant a few of your seeds in the soil, in about two weeks decide which plant is growing the best and remove the rest. Up till this time the plants should have been kept moist, but not wet. Water only when necessary and until the water comes out the bottom of your pot.

Sun is the most important ingredient to a growing grass plant. Since the best marijuana comes from hot, dry desert climates, your plants should receive as much sunlight as possible. Placing aluminum foil behind the plants and/or white gravel around the plant will reflect more sunlight on the plant. Grandma Jones has a nasty problem of nosy neighbors and snoopy government agents and suggests for privacy translucent plastic of cast vinyl or polyethylene. On a student's budget, the polyethylene is best, but cracks in about four to five months.

On the UVM campus, any dorm facing Gutterson Field House will receive the best exposure to the sun. If, however, you don't receive enough sunshine, artificial light can be used with good results. A good combination is a 75-watt incandescent globe for every 40-watt fluorescent, but even 100-watt standard bulbs can be used. Plants should not receive more than 16 hours of light and not much under 12. Light should be overhead and not more than 12 inches from the top of the plants. Temperature should not rise above 100 degrees F or fall below 90 degrees F so a ventilation system is needed.

Harvest the plants after they have flowered and prepare using local methods. Grandma Jones says, however, that if you dry them by hanging upside down from the roots you will have a better product. After the plant has dried crush it removing seeds and stems.

Since female plants are the most potent plants, it is advantageous to produce only female plants. Through many years of experience, Grandma Jones has perfected a method to develop female seeds.

1. Arrange it so the plants receive only seven hours of direct sunlight a day. These plants will be used as male mates. (Female marijuana plants are capable of producing male flowers and vice-versa without changing the characteristics of the plant sex.) The occurrence of this phenomena can be greatly stimulated by shortening the period of sunlight exposure to seven hours.

2. Raise more seedlings with 12 hours of sunlight. These will be used as female mates.

3. Observe the seven hour plants and remove all male plants.

4. Also remove all male plants from the 12 hour sunlight group. When female buds appear on the 12 hour plants brush carefully each bud cluster to remove any stray pollen. Then cover each bud with a polyethylene bag and seal around the stem of the cluster to prevent accidental pollination from the male plants so that your chances for a total female crop are increased.

5. When male buds appear on some of female seven hour plants carefully remove each unopened male bud. Brush to remove stray pollen and store a few in stoppered vials. Also remove and discard all female buds from seven hour plants and wait for new buds. (Mutilation as well as shortened sunlight exposure tends to stimulate sex change in cannabis.) When new buds appear, clip and store any males in a vial as described above.

6. In a day or two the buds will open and release pollen. Carefully transfer pollen to the stigmas of the bagged female flowers on the 12 hour plants. A toothpick can be used to transfer the pollen.

7. Wait a few weeks until seeds have fully ripened. This crop should yield a 100 per cent crop of female plants.

Because the seven hour plants will mature earlier than the 12 hour plants, you may want to plant your female mates about ten days earlier.

Grandma Jones admits reluctantly there are other methods to raise grass, but she is happy with her results. Just ask Grandpa Jones. He's the old man smiling in the corner. If there are any questions just write Grandma Jones for total information. The Complete Cannabis Cultivator, Flash Mail Order Express Co. Depts. P.O. Box 16098, San Francisco, Calif. 94116. Not all people agree with Grandma Jones' method; Aunt Tillie, for instance. She prefers a modern approach to growing grass. Her preference is hydroponics.

Hydroponics is the technique of growing plants in a nutrient solution without the use of any soil. Aunt Tillie says hydroponics has numerous advantages over soil farming. Some of these are uniformity of growth, higher yields, greater freedom from weeds and diseases, more rapid and sustained growth, and saving of time, labor, and mess.

The amount of grass you plan on growing will decide how you will construct your growing table. For large scale growers, Aunt Tillie offers these suggestions.

1. Construct a table out of ½ inch thick exterior plywood and seal with any waterproofing material. (Avoid metals for the table, because they can upset the nutrient balance or may even be toxic to the plants.)

2. Fill hydroponic table with about six inches of vermiculite, an absorbent insulating aggregate costing about 60 cents a pound. Any neutral material can be used for rooting material that can give support to the plants, but again avoid substances which can throw off the chemical balance of the nutrient.

3. A pump is desirable to keep the nutrients flowing evenly. Any small scale pump will do. (See Figure 1)

For small scale growers: Use some sort of two gallon can. Punch or drill several small holes in a band around the half-way mark on each can. Fill can to within an inch of the top with vermiculite and place in tray to catch overflow of nutrient solution. To maintain the even flow of nutrients, pour a half can of nutrient solution over the vermiculite every day. Use overflow again and again. (See Figure II) Some of the best and simplest nutrient solutions are the commercial preparations such as CAN–GRO or HYPONEX. These will produce a better resin output in the grass you grow. These compounds can be bought at P.O. Box 332, Fairfax, Calif. 94930, small size $1.00 and large size $4.00.

Select large, dark seeds and plant them two inches apart. Cover with ¼ inch of vermiculite. Lay a dark cloth or plastic over the table. If it is possible to control temperature, let the temperature rise to 100 degrees for the first 12 hours, then decrease to 75 degrees. If no temperature control is available, soak seeds in 100 degrees water for 12 hours before planting. After one week, remove the dark cloth from the table. Keep the growing solution at a warmer temperature than the surrounding air. Doing this tends to produce more females than males. During the germination period, you should use only plain water. After two weeks, drain and add the nutrient solution you desire. Let the plants have ten hours of light for five days and then go to a fourteen hour day. Keep only the strongest plants and space them 18 inches apart. Since hydroponic growing tends to produce weak plant tissue, supports are recommended. Two weeks before harvest, remove ¾'s of the water from the growing table. Do not replenish water unless the plants start to wilt. Just add enough water to perk them up. (Water deprivation increases the production of resins and drives them to the top leaves of the plant.)

Hydroponics works best under indoor light, but outside lighting can be used. If you are using a greenhouse don't use ordinary windows, because they block out essential ultraviolet light. Use greenhouse glass which is readily available at hardware stores. When the preacher visits, Aunt Tillie covers the windows with polyethylene or cast vinyl to prevent viewing, yet allow sunlight to filter through. The vinyl is best, but polyethylene is cheaper. After much testing, Aunt Tillie says the Sylvania wide spectrum 40-watt GRO–LUX lamps work best for indoor lighting. These can be purchased at Sears Roebuck for $2.99. However, ordinary 100-watt light bulbs can also be used.

Assuming that students will use closets for a growing chamber, Aunt Tillie has a few helpful hints.

1. Line your walls with aluminum foil to reflect the light.

2. Place lights about four or five inches apart on a plywood board which has been cut to the dimensions of the chamber and cover the board with aluminum. Hang this in your closet on a pulley. This pulley will help regulate the lights. The lights should be kept about 18 inches above the plants.

3. As soon as the lower leaves start to wither, they can be dried and smoked. Otherwise they will absorb all the resin which is trying to reach the tops. You can also place some lights on the closet walls.

4. Plants should not get more than 16 hours a day of sunlight at the early stages. From the second or third week on, 14 hours is recommended.

Let plants grow until they flower, then, harvest and prepare as desired. Drain the growth table before starting a new crop.

shares. And I have not made any purchases or increases in the stock-holding other than the actual gains in the stock itself.

Q. Why do you feel it is important that you sit on the Board of Directors of the Chittenden Bank?

A. That is a good question. I was the Dean of the Medical School when I was invited to go on the Board of Directors. I was indifferent at the time; I didn't know whether to do it or not, so I spoke with a number of people in the community as well as the then president, Lyman Burrell – should I or should I not do this? Every person that I spoke to said by all means do it. It is in the best interest of the University to know members of the business community, and also to have a handle on the local economy – to predict what is happening in the local economy. Also, a number of people said they thought it would be very good to have educators on the Board to give a different point of view, and to make things more socially conscious.

Q. In the Saturday Free Press the state attorney general Kimerly Cheney was quoted as saying that it is probably socially undesirable for the University of Vermont to be associated with a few closely knit private companies. What is your response to that statement?

A. As a matter of fact, he dropped in here yesterday and as you look at that Free Press article, that statement is not in quotations. He did not say that.

Q. But he said something to that effect...

A. No, according to him, he did not say that. That article was not good journalism.

Q. Have you decided to make any investigation, or have any policy changes come about as a result of Mr. Franco's article?

A. Gee, you know the procedures are so tight now. For example, no trustee and no president has ever told George Clerkin on his twenty years here to leave more money in the bank, or to put money here or put money there. Mr. Clerkin functions very independently under broad policies established by the Board of Trustees, and those policies have been made in meetings open to the public. I am proud of these procedures, and if anybody wants to take an honest look at them, and not come in with preconceived notions, I think they would be very satisfied. We have faculty and students on every one of these committees – finance, budget and investment. Peter Batelle, (business college professor) has sat on virtually all these investment committees, and he reported to the faculty senate that he was delighted with how well the university stocks in the local banks had done. They did much better than the funds we have in the regular investment portfolio from New York – someone ought to go ask him. In the last two years our contemporary investments have shot up, and the main reason for that is the financial system is now under computer.

Q. Do you see the fact that some of the board of directors of the banks are also on the university's board of trustees as socially desirable?

A. Well... yes, I do as a matter of fact, because in running a university that has banking business, it is important to have people on our board who know something about banking. The board of trustees should be made up of people from all walks of life, representing the various types of interests. You have to realize that we do not have that much control. Remember, these trustees are appointed by the governor, and nine were elected by the legislature. We do need more women on the board.

Q. How do you account for the fact that trustees Francis Peisch and Joseph Corbette, who replaced George Little as a trustee, are three of the four men on the board of directors of the George Little press – isn't that keeping it too closely in the family?

A. Actually, Francis Peisch was elected by the legislature, so we had nothing to do with that. When the alumni trustees are elected, it always seems desirable to have some from the local community so they can be immediately available for advice...

Q. But three from one company?

A. Actually George Little was one of the greatest trustees this university has ever had, and if you go back to his voting record on a variety of controversial issues, I think you will agree. And the same is true of Francis Peusch. Joe Corbette, from what I can tell, will be a great trustee... Go over the records from the past two years and see where our printing contracts came from. George Little has gotton some, but so have many other local presses, and it is all done by bid. You know, it would be extremely difficult in a community the size of Burlington to have trustees who have nothing to do with the university.

Q. How do you explain UVM's stock investment in the Health Insurance Company of Vermont – when you are on their board of directors – which has gone from a value of $4000 to nil?

A. Do we have stock in the Health Insurance Company of Vermont?

Q. Yes, according to the office of the secretary of state.

A. I didn't know that. Virtually all of the stock in local business is stock that was given to us. And sometimes the donor will ask us to keep that stock, and not sell. But I did not know that we had some of their stock.

Q. But you are on their board of directors?

A. Yes.

Q. The fact that the university has stock in the Chittenden and Howard banks, and that several of the university's trustees sit on the boards of these banks also, does not smack of any conflict of interest to you?

A. No, it does not. I think it is a great advantage for the university. There are people on the boards of local banks who are on the Middlebury board, the St. Mike's board, the hospital... and virtually every university president I know sits on the board of some bank.

Q. How many board of directors do you sit on?

A. One, two...three... four. That is all I can think of. As a matter of fact, when I became president, I asked around again whether I should remain on the Chittenden board or not. Everybody said by all means do, it is in the best interest of the university and it is good for the banks – even the presidents of their competing banks told me this. It is good because the directors will have another point of view – that of an educator and a person with a social conscience.

Q. Yes, but you are also the head of a university which is the third largest employer in this state, and that for the past few years has expanded greatly. So don't you think it is a little naive to state that you are just the head of an educational institution, when that educational institution carries great economic impact in the state and local area.

A. Yes, but if you assume that I am the head of this institution to advance my own net worth then I should not be the head of this institution, I should be in private medical practice or in private business where I could triple what I now make. I am head of this institution because I love it, I believe in it, I want to see it become first class, I want to see our expenses go down and our income go up... And if anyone suspects that my motives are otherwise then they should throw me out tomorrow.

Pedestrian Tunnel May Lead To Four-Lane Main Street

by Peter MacAusland

The proposed pedestrian tunnel has involved a series of controversial decisions that could eventually lead to the expansion of Main Street to four lanes. The development of the underpass proposal is complex, and the problem which it is attempting to solve is difficult to define.

In the early 1960's, the interstate cloverleaf was established as a direct link to U.S. 2. This intersection routed the majority of interstate traffic, whose destination was downtown Burlington, on Main Street. As a result, Main Street became the only major artery between I-89 and downtown Burlington.

A few more years will be needed to develop a final plan. Both city and state planners, although presently they have conflicting ideas, seem optimistic that the plan will become a reality, thus diverting some interstate traffic from Main Street.

The jughandle, finished less than a year ago, had tremendous opposition against its development. Heavy traffic flows existed on U.S. 2 from its intersection with Dorset Street to its old intersection with Spear Street. The interstate cloverleaf contributed heavily to the traffic. The timing of the lights at the entrances of First National and the Sheraton Motor Inn and at the intersection of U.S. 2 and East Avenue was poorly coordinated and was not geared to rush hour traffic. Better coordination may have solved the problem.

The original idea of the jughandle was a simple realignment of Spear Street and East Avenue on Main Street. This one major four-way crossing would alleviate traffic travelling between East Avenue and Spear Street via a short stretch on Main Street to four lanes up to the existing pedestrian crossings along Main Street toward downtown Burlington.

The interstate cloverleaf provides easy access to downtown Burlington yet created heavy traffic on U.S. 2 near the jughandle. The jughandle attempted to solve that problem yet it indirectly created confusion among vehicular traffic at the pedestrian crossings by the merging of four lanes into two.

The proposed underpass would replace the lights at the Redstone crossing, yet the lights at Living/Learning Center would remain. With the removal of the Redstone lights, the vehicular traffic would be more intense and competitive at that point where the lights would not interfere and also the area where Main Street changes from four lanes into two.

The situation may reach the proportions of being classified as a problem and therefore the undeniable expansion of Main Street to four lanes may be one of the solutions to that new problem.

The planners see the problem as significant interaction between cars and people. Better coordination of the timing of the lights may be possible to minimize the problems of interaction by Arnold Werner M.D.

«the doctor's bag»

Letters may be addressed to Dr. Werner at:
Box 974 East Lansing, MI 48823

QUESTION: Several months ago my boyfriend and I spent the weekend together after a long time of not being with each other. We made love several times. After he left, I was plagued by an itching and burning sensation and a white vaginal discharge. My doctor diagnosed it as a yeast infection and it took two weeks of using suppositories and creams to get rid of it.

Recently, my boyfriend and I spent another weekend together and now I have the same thing again. Is this disease related to lovemaking? What can I do to prevent it. The discomfort I am experiencing is beyond belief.

ANSWER: Vaginal yeast infections are fairly common and the organism that causes them is easily identified, yet most explanations as to why some women get them and other women do not leave much to be desired. Yeasts are present in a great many vaginas and produce no difficulties. Circumstances which alter the environment of the vagina can tip the balance in favor of an overgrowth of the yeast. The use of antibiotics is one such event. Occasionally women on the birth control pills have trouble with yeast infections although it is unclear if such women experience a higher incidence of infections than women off the pill.

Treatment of the infection after takes a couple of weeks as you indicated, but what is often forgotten is that infections can reappear spontaneously every few months. Therefore, it may merely be a coincidence that your boyfriend and the discharge appeared in such close proximity to each other. While certain types of vaginal discharges are caused by an organism present in the man which is passed back and forth between him and his partner, yeast infections are not typically one of these.

A gynecologist colleague has noted that after treating such infections several times in the same woman, he can still find small amounts of yeast present but no inflammation, discharge or itching. He believes that some women might be overly sensitive to the organism and eventually lose their sensitivity. The best prevention would appear to be having each infection treated rapidly. Douches once or twice a week are found helpful as a preventive by some women but should be prescribed by a physician.

QUESTION: Is it possible to become pregnant while taking a warm bubble with a guy? A friend insists it is because of the warmth of the water, but wouldn't the soap do in the sperm before that point? Please reply, a tantalizing bath lies in the balance!

ANSWER: Having intercourse in the bathtub is dangerous. You can bang your head and hurt yourself; worse yet, you can drown. Aside from these hazards, pregnancy could result from intercourse under these circumstances. If you are suggesting the pregnancy would occur without intercourse by sperm swimming through the soapy water, that is quite impossible.

QUESTION: This sounds kind of bizarre, but every time I am with my girl friend, I start burping a lot! I know that burping occurs with the intake of air during eating or drinking, but what about when I'm not doing these things? Is it me, or my girl friend, or what?

ANSWER: It sounds as if you're swallowing a lot of air when you are with your girl friend. The swallowing may occur with anxiety or with excitement. Try to observe yourself carefully next time this happens since once a person becomes aware of the habit it is usually not difficult to stop it. Also, if you chew gum when you are with your girlfriend you might be inducing air swallowing as well.

QUESTION: Do I have a varicose penis? I am uncircumcised and on the underside of my foreskin there is an enlarged blue vein which causes some discomfort. Do support hose come that small or will this go away?

ANSWER: Veins on the penis and scrotum look particularly prominent in part because they are superficial, the skin that covers them is thin, and both organs are nonmuscular and dependent (hang down) allowing the pooling of blood in these veins.

I am hard pressed to think of what kind of discomfort this prominent vein on the bottom of your penis is causing, but I suspect it wouldn't be bothering you if you didn't know it was there. The penis is among the simpler organs of the body with few moving parts and little to go wrong with it. The vast majority of problems associated with this organ are due to its connections to the head. To help that end of the system, I would suggest that you do see a physician just to be reassured.

QUESTION: Are there any dangers to streaking?

ANSWER: Yes. Be sure to wear adequate foot coverings to prevent cut and bruised feet. Also, long distance streaking in the sun necessitates the usual precautions against sunburn plus added attention to rarely exposed parts.

QUESTION: I have this friend who laughs every time he has an orgasm. Is this normal? He is usually pretty stoned by the time he climaxes so does this have anything to do with his laughing?

ANSWER: Sex is supposed to be enjoyable so, as long as the laughing is not distracting you, I wouldn't worry about it. Being stoned certainly may have something to do with it but this would be dependent upon his preexisting mood.

QUESTION: The other night my roommate and I were discussing birth control methods and their various inadequacies and inconveniences when we came upon an idea for a new way. Basically, it would involve a mechanical device for changing the temperature of the man's scrotum. We learned in biology that sperm is temperature sensitive, that the scrotum is at a lower temperature than the rest of a man's body, that sperm lose their viability at higher body temperature and that men with undescended testicles are often sterile for this reason.

If this is true, why not just heat up the scrotum before intercourse to kill the sperm? We wonder if you knew if this approach has ever been tried experimentally. Would showers work?

Anyway, we thought that if a mechanical device is ever marketed, a good brand name might be "Hot Rocks." And, if experiments with lowering the scrotal temperature proved effective, perhaps "Ice Cubes" or "Snow Balls" would be good names. Thank you for your attention.

ANSWER: Few things have been more heartening to me since I started writing this column than the increase in the number of people who are taking useful courses in human sexuality and human biology.

You and your roommate are basically correct in your statements about sperm. There is one slight inaccuracy however. High temperatures interfere with the production of sperm rather than with the viability of sperm which are already produced. Therefore, unless one subjects his testicles to hot showers or baths the likelihood of influencing the activity of the sperm would be small. In addition, it take from thirty to ninety days from the time sperm is produced in the testes until it matures. In spite of this, the hot bath idea has been tried in various cultures for hundreds of years, obviously with no success.

Gymnastics Club

by Kim Bartlett

I would like to call to your attention some facts surrounding the unmitigated effort to make men's gymnastics a Varsity Sport at UVM. To my knowledge, the club has tried to become a varsity sport four times previous to their current attempt. A petition is now being circulated to further impress upon the administration the student body backing for gymnastics. The object of this column is to make you aware of some facts concerning the Men's Gymnastics Club.

First, there are thirty eight high school gymnastics teams in Vermont. Yet, in spite of the fact that UVM is a state school, there is no men's gymnastics team. These competitors have no place to go once they enroll in UVM.

The Athletic Council unanimously approved that gymnastics become a varsity sport in 1970-1971, yet the president's office turned down their recommendation. Although I'm sure it's a question of money and priorities and not a simple question of the sport itself, I find it hard to believe that nearly $.5 million dollars could readily be found for the underpass and apparently none for gymnastics.

Furthermore, the Student Association in an April 2 meeting, passed a motion in support of Gymnastics Club to become a varsity sport. Although admittedly the credibility of the Student Association is questionable in a situation such as this, this motion by the Senate ideally may be seen as the majority of the student constituency in support of a men's gymnastic team.

UVM is fortunate to have Coach Tom Dunkley. Arriving at UVM in 1966, Mr. Dunkley has fought an uphill battle to further gymnastics in Vermont. Disciplined, well-qualified and above all, dedicated, Mr. Dunkley was recently cited in Who's Who in Gymnastics by the United States Gymnastics Federation.

Last year, the Gymnastics Club had eight meets. This year, because of budget limitations, the Men's Gymnastic Club only had five meets. Yet, all factors considered, gymnastics is an extremely low budget sport, (under $5000) with a great potential for a substantial return at the gates during home meets. At the last home meet, for example, there were an estimated 1000 spectators. Isn't there a lack of communication between the administration and general student interest? What about the alumni?

Mr. Brink, the Alumni Director has promised to voice the issue to the alumni asking their feelings about it in the near future. Whereas other varsity sports talk in terms of thousands, varsity gymnastics would talk in terms of hundreds of dollars.

I could go on and cite the frustrations and perseverance the individual club members have had, for example when performing at Boston State College at the New Englands, March 2, some members of the club actually had to change pants five times for different events during the meet.

In conclusion, I fully realize how tight funds are at the University of Vermont and do not advocate picking up arbitrary sports unless ample student and alumni support is present. Isn't it time that the Gymnastics Club be recognized as a varsity sport?

Murphy Named Hockey Captain

John Murphy

All-American and All-East defenseman, John Murphy (Dedham, Mass.) was named captain of the 1974-1975 hockey Catamounts. It was announced by out-going captain, Ted Castle, at the annual end-of-the-season team dinner last week. Murphy, a starter on defense since his freshman year, established a Vermont record for most assists (27) by a defenseman. Goalie John Kiely (Ithaca, N.Y.) was selected the MVP as voted on by his teammates. Winger Chris Miller (Bedford, Que.) was presented with the Coaches' Award by head coach Jim Cross. The award is annually presented to a player who has performed well without much fanfare.

Varsity Practice As Alumni Game Nears

...Thanks to the favorable turn in the weather over the weekend, we were able to kick off our spring sessions Monday (April 15) and will continue every Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday until that spring game with the alumni," said head coach, Carl Falivene. Forty-nine candidates reported to the first spring practice. "We have much work to do in such a short time, so it's vital that we follow our practice schedule as closely as possible. The weather has a lot to do with the success of our three-week practice sessions," added Falivene. Twenty-two lettermen reported to the first practice session Monday.

...Plans are moving along for the fourth annual Alumni-Varsity football game, May 4, at Centennial Field (1 p.m.) and interest among alumni is picking up. According to Denis Blanck, the chairman of the game for the alumni, over 25 replies have been returned by former UVM football players. "The interest is picking up and we should have a very representative squad when we take the field in a few weeks," said Blanck, a former standout lineman in the early '60's. Most of the alumni squad will be made up of players graduated the last five years, such as running back Bob Rodger; quarterbacks Earl Olson and Fran Peterson; receivers Tony Jones, Gene Monahan, Dennis Robinson and Tim Sullivan and others. "We'll have a more substantial list of alumni in the next few days, but I've been pleased with the returns thus far," added Blanck. Tickets for the game may be purchased at UVM's Patrick Gym in advance or may be bought at the gate the day of the game. Cost of the tickets are $2 for adults and $1 for students.

Point Guard Picks UVM

A 6-2" point-guard will enter the University of Vermont this fall, Mark Cubit of Sharon Hill, Pa., a second-team All-Suburban Philadelphia selectee, has informed Vermont coach, Peter Salzberg, that he will play at Vermont. A graduate of Sharon Hill High School, where he played for Tom Hauer, he averaged 18.5 points a game his senior year, after a 20.1 points-per-game average his junior season. The prospective sociology major was also on All-Delaware County selection and was named to the All-State squad.

SCHWARTZ ON SPORTS

This spring has seen the formation of two new sports clubs—lacrosse and baseball. They join the rugby club and the varsity level tennis, golf and track teams on the Spring Sports Schedule. The ultimate goal of these new clubs is to achieve varsity status. What I question is how soon is this varsity status justified.

Turning to the Winter schedule provides a good example of this justification. The Men's Gymnastics Club has been seeking varsity status for five years. They have demonstrated the ability to perform well in their athletic competition. Yet with increased fan support all their efforts to become varsity (as the women's team is) have been denied. Them "no" answers usually are nonreplies by the administration or the athletic department. The club itself led by their coach, Mr. Thomas Dunkley has made a big effort to achieve the higher status. The club has now received the support of the Student Association and are currently circulating petitions around the campus. The opinion here is that such efforts should not go unanswered. The Gymnastics Club has proven themselves in action and should now be recognized as a varsity sport. This will enable them to compete against competition they feel they can handle without continually being turned down as has happened in the past. The Men's Gymnastics Club is justified in becoming a varsity team.

The Baseball club is an outgrowth of the lingering feeling that the baseball team was dropped too hastily. But the club must make an important decision. I doubt that they have played on nature's turf yet this season. In essence, is it really feasible to attempt a spring schedule in the North Country without having to play all your games down south at considerable expense. The club plans on attempting a fall schedule which seems like a better alternative. Only when the feasibility of playing the sport is demonstrated should this club seek varsity status.

Finally, the Lacrosse Club seems to be grabbing for too much too soon. Reading an article in last week's Cynic, which was written by a team member, was quite amusing. It was hard to realize they were justifying two losses with great play even if it was the first two games in the club's history. It seems difficult to say you really played well and lose 14 – 2. Lacrosse should not reach out too fast. When the team shows competitive capabilities over time then they should think varsity. Winning takes time and justifying losses in your first two games is overemphasizing winning. The fun of the game should be stressed on the club level and when experience and longevity of the club are demonstrated then the varsity status they seek will come more naturally. Lacrosse should take it slow or they might hurt their chances very quickly.

Getting money from a tight athletic budget is difficult. There just isn't enough for all teams to spend money to build winners. Everyone wants more yet everyone must keep within their limits. For these clubs the demonstration of performance comes first and then comes the Athletic Department's money. At this point in time, the Gymnastics Club is the only club that is justified in getting this money.

body is building as high and as deep as the silence in the room. (another in the continuing series of sleepless nights that is being brought to you through the courtesy of my wheeling hot-time brain...why can't I fall into the magic land-of-Nod, why can't I blunder into a peaceful slumber, why can't I creep past this nightmare and get some sleep?) He walks out down the hall, to the bathroom and pisses. In the mirror above the sink he combs his hair, watching a pimple on his forehead laugh at him, he smiles at his reflection then walks back to his room. He climbs onto his bed and stands there. A crazy rage overtakes him (loses his grip, control slips away) he tears off the tee-shirt and begins running naked around the room, totally naked running around the room.

the paint of time is worthless without the canvas of reality to hold it... the artist mourns this fact/ buryt the axe and smiling with tact tells us a story. Now you see there is this guy standing on Broadway in New York City carrying a sign, black letters on a red background, big, big sign that says, "Boils Sucked For A Quarter." So this fat old lady comes up and says you do this fella that work boils" he says sure thing! she says well i have this boil on my asshole and the guy says sure not uncommon same price, no trouble. They go down to his office in the phonebooth on the corner and he starts sucking the pus out of the boil on the lady's asshole, his face right down there in her crack when all of a sudden she rips off one of the smelliest, dirtiest, meanest farts in the history of the world and the boil sucker looks up from his work and says lady it is people like you that make my job disgusting!

The rage passes, the heat builds, the running stops, the sweat pours, the storm of frustration settles into an easy wind. The boy grabs a tee-shirt a pair of bermuda shorts and a pair of socks off the floor, he dresses. (hell to biscuits, butter to fat, fart in a windstorm go shit in your hat) Grabbing the last cigarette out of the pack on the bookshelf he decides to end the game, cash in his chips (the night can go on without him). He lights the smoke and starts thinking of a nice hot bath.

Albatross

The Albatross, after a three-year absence, is once more being revitalized on the UVM campus. In the past, the Albatross was a handbook consisting of student evaluations of faculty members and their courses. The Albatross questionnaire (consisting of Yes-No and multiple-choice responses) was distributed in classes toward the end of the semester and returned by professors to the S.A. for publication.

This year the Albatross committee is an independent (non-S.A. recognized) organization consisting of John Perry of the Psychology Department; S.A. Senators Cathy Chamberlain (Wing) and Bill Partlow (Lambda Iota); Jeffrey Fernandez, a student representative of the Faculty Senate Student Affairs Committee; and Steve Fitzgerald, a student-at-large. The organization will still be known as the Albatross and the forms will be the same as in previous years.

Of 1,000 professors contacted so far, 175 have responded, requesting 11,000 Albatross forms for 400 courses. According to Cathy Chamberlain, the professors who decide to use the forms have three choices of what to do with them:

1) They may use them in classes and have the results processed by the S.A.;

2) They may have them processed by computer, or

3) They may keep them in their files for reference.

The forms are scheduled to go out the end of this week or the beginning of next.

Senior Class Council

Seven members of the class of 1975 are on the ballot for four positions on the Senior Class Council Board. Voting booths opened Wednesday and will conclude today at 7:45 p.m. The Senior Class Council is defined as the members of next year's Senior Class, the Class of 1975. The seven students on the ballot are: Sue Brooks, Kappa Alpha Theta; Kenneth Currier, 323 Millis; Lorraine Gauthier, 306 Millis; Gayle Jackson, 183-C, Living/Learning; Mary Ann Morrill, 234-A, Living/Learning; and Diana Richardson, 306 Millis. In addition, Mary Ellen Fennessy, 405 Jeanne Mance, is running as a write-in candidate.

Voting booths will be in Billings from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.; in Waterman at lunchtime, at Simpson Dining Hall from 4:30–6 p.m. and at MAT from 5:30–7:45 p.m. IDs are required in order to vote.

and will be voted on next week. It will be for $114,690.

Old Business

S.75, a motion to buy cold patch to fill in the speed dips was passed with an amendment by Dick Cassidy. The amendment increased the allocation and stated that the work should be done through Proctor Lovell's office.

S. 76, the creation of a student subcommittee and student liasons to the Board of Trustee Development Committee was passed.

S. 77, Alan King's motion for privileges for senators at concerts and athletic events was soundly defeated. Discussion centered on the actual need and the effect that the motion would have on the image of the Senate.

S.78. Alan King's motion for changing the Senate chiefly on its recognition policy was defeated. The proposal would have classified organizations according to their financial needs and availability to all students. Arguments surrounded the Senate's responsibility to all students and to all segments of student life.

New Business

Motions were entered for recognition of the Vermont Student Lobby, allocation of money for the Albatross and for three-quarters majority vote to override financial committee recommendations. Additionally, a motion was entered to accept the budget for next year with the estimated cost of $114,690.

Lacasse Speaks...

body when the team performs well. Varsity sports becomes a rallying point for emotions and is a pride different from what one can get from the academic area. Lacasse pointed out that the hockey team has this pride both on campus and in the community.

Besides the general comments on recruiting mentioned earlier, the coach says that over the years a new philosophy as far as recruiting and relating to athletes has evolved. There is a need to gain respect from players and to be honest with the athlete. If this is not achieved the job for the coach is more difficult. Lacasse feels he has gained this respect as the program has built up. And indeed without the injuries perhaps this year would have had the strongest skiing contingent in Vermont history.

Dartmouth and Middlebury may be the tops in the East over the past twenty years but at UVM, Chip Lacasse has made Vermont part of the top group in the last five years with his effective handling of the Vermont ski program.

U.V.M. SPORTS

Lacasse Reviews Ski Season

by Mike Schwartz

Spring is coming and the snow has left the ground, but at UVM, the ski team this winter has developed a very competitive program. This year they finished Third in the NCAA championships. The year before they were the best in the East and also third in the NCAA's. Coach Chip Lacasse discussed the growth of varsity skiing at UVM in an interview earlier this week.

Mr. Lacasse first traced the development of the sport. The basic growth of the sport has occurred over the past four to five years. At first, high finishes in ski carnivals were few but with an effort towards harder recruiting the people who wanted to be part of a building process were found. Mr. Lacasse came from Colorado where he was part of top notch ski programs where people choose a college because a team is the best. At UVM, the coach had to attract people who were willing to take the chance. Last year the team won its first carnivals in history and then went on to the NCAA's with a third place finish. The process continued this year despite a host of injuries and the teams potential was seen again at the NCAA's. Lacasse felt that this year's team "was the strongest in history."

The coach talked about some of the skiers who have individual skill yet team spirit. In cross country, a top performer is Stan Dunklee who is a member of the U.S. National team. He came back from illness to place high in the NCAA's. Trygve Kjolseth is another nordic skier who was hurt by mononucleosis this year. The burden of the cross country program fell to Morton Gaarud who was the only healthy nordic skier all year. He performed capably and took the pressure despite being a freshman.

In alpine skiing, the most surprising performer and according to the coach the "most improved skier" was Dick Erdman. Erdman was the eighth placed skier on the team in 1973 but this year he filled in for many injured skiers and was named one of the five All-Americans in the country. He won at Dartmouth and finished sixth in the downhill and eighth in the slalom in the NCAA's. Perhaps his top performance was in the U.S. Seniors Nationals where he finished seventh against world competition U.S. skiers.

In alpine, as in Nordic, injuries hurt. Chris Brown hurt an ankle and never was at top form this season. Dave Dodge tore up his knee in Italy last summer and could not race this season. If it weren't for capable replacements like Erdman, the success of the program would have been far less.

Lacasse then talked about the jumping team which has been the key to success. Lacasse rates Petter Kongsli as the "Number one jumper in the country." Along with Trygve Rolseth, Tom Lantz, Tom Oddy, and Joe Lamb the jumping contingent was most successful. At Middlebury the jumpers finished 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6, quite a remarkable achievement.

Lacasse leaves special praise for Kongsli. When he went to the ski flying competition in Michigan, he was able to handle the pressure and place in a tie for first against world competition.

Another person discussed was Bobby Cochran, perhaps the best known male skier in the U.S. His status is one of being a student at UVM where he is a junior pre-med student. But due to his commitments on the World Cup circuit he was not able to participate in any carnivals. In order to ski in the NCAA's he would have had to race in a carnival. Lacasse admires Cochran's skill as one of the best in the world who can still perform well academically despite his world travels.

The coach also talked about some other aspects of skiing and varsity sports. Early season training has become important to the program. Skiing has become a year round sport. In September the team starts dryland training. At this time, the team is able to get to know each other. They play soccer together and learn to "work well as a team." When the season starts there are only infrequent chances to stay together and the early program allows for the team aspect to come into play.

Lacasse says that the budget for skiing is "adequate" and that he could always use more money. The athletic budget is tight and at times the team members must dig into their own pockets for waxes, skis and other expenses.

The coach talked about the prospects for U.S. skiing on the international level. The coach feels that U.S. skiing emphasis is not high and that budding athletes find more glamour in football or basketball and emulating the high payed stars in those sports. In Europe, on the other hand, skiing is the glamour sport. Budding athletes want to emulate skiiers. The major ski companies are European corporations. Lacasse feels the emphasis in the U.S. program should be directed towards keeping athletes in the program long enough to allow for better world class competitors.

The coach also commented on the role of varsity sports at UVM. He sees it as an important part of the school that offers the fine athlete the best possible competition. It emulates "pride" both for the team and for the student

UVM Horse Club To Host Show

On April 21, the UVM Horse Club will sponsor their first Horse Show at the UVM Farm, on Spear Street in Burlington. The show will start promptly at 9:30 a.m. and will be held rain or shine.

The show was designed by the Horse Club for the purpose of not only helping UVM students and their horses, but encouraging young riders in the Burlington area. The show was planned with fun in mind, not competition. Unlike many bigger shows, there are no points or overall championships given, but, rather, ribbons and prizes given for performance and an overall sportsmanship award given to the rider who best exhibits the spirit in which the show was designed.

Classes range from Hunter class, on the flat as well as over fences, for the horse, and Equitation classes, for the rider, as well as game classes, which are fun for all.

Judging will be Ms. Mary Blodgett, who is currently the District Commissioner of the Hanover (N.H.) Pony Club.

The show, which hopefully will become an annual event, is the last in a series of programs planned by the UVM Horse Club. Last week the club held a clinic, open to UVM students and their horses as well as outsiders, headed by Edward Emerson of South Strafford, Vermont. Mr. Emerson is an alternate to the U.S. Equestrian Team and one of the leading Three-Day Event Riders in the U.S. Various other clinics, headed by the students themselves, have been held throughout the semester for local 4-H and Pony Club groups, helping them and encouraging them to care for their horses properly.

The UVM Horse Club has many members, 16 of which board their horses at the UVM Farm on Spear Street. The club welcomes new members at any time, and especially encourages students to visit the farm to see their horses, clinics, and other events. At the show, this Sunday, students can see their fellow students perform in their final project of the semester.

Any questions can be addressed to the Horse Club President Jeanie Hahn, 32 Airport Parkway, So. Burlington. Class lists for the show can be obtained at the Farm. The show is open to all.

Rugby Practice

Rugby practice will begin (again) on Thursday at 4:30 with a scrimmage against St. Michael's. Team members are requested to meet at the Gutterson Fieldhouse by 4:00. Due to poor weather UVM will play an abbreviated schedule that includes Norwich, Middlebury, St. Mike's and Johnson State. The first game scheduled is against Norwich on April 20 at Norwich. The Rugby Club is still seeking additional players and anyone who is interested is invited to attend practice.

Alumni Baseball Planned

...Alumni baseball players will have another crack at playing at Centennial Field, May 4, when the Alumni-Varsity club baseball game will take place. Club baseball, formed this spring for the first time, is coached by John Stanton, associate registrar at the University. "We are very excited about the alumni coming back to Vermont that weekend (May 4) to help lift the program off the ground," said Stanton. The nine-inning game will be at Centennial Field, beginning at 9:30 a.m. If any former UVM baseball lettermen are interested in participating in the game, contact either Paul Trono, 31 East Terr., Burlington, Vt. or Dick Whittier, Sports Information Director, c/o Alumni House, Burlington, Vt. (656-2005).

Catalina Club To Perform A Splashtacular

The Catalina Club of UVM, coached by Mrs. Holly Szabo will be performing their annual Synchronized Swim Show on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this week. Performances on April 18 and 19 are at 8 p.m. and there will be two shows on Saturday, one at 2 p.m. and one at 8 p.m.

The show revolves around the theme of sports of all kinds, portrayed creatively to music. For those who have never seen any sort of water ballet, aquatic art, or synchronized swimming, which are three different forms of aquatic skills, the Synchronized Show offers a new and interesting type of entertainment.

In the fall semester the members of the club work toward the Eastern Intercollegiate Synchronized Swim Conference stunt competition, in which each member competes individually for UVM against other schools from all over the east. During the spring semester routines begin to be put together and practiced for the EISSC, routine competition, and as a climax to the season, the Synchronized Swim Show is presented at UVM.

It is advisable to purchase tickets in advance, as performances in the past have often been sold out, because of limited seating capacity in Forbush. Tickets are available in Patrick Gym foyer between 12 and 1 p.m. or from the secretary in Southwick between 9 and 5 or from any Catalina Club member. The cost is $.50 for students with ID's, $.50 for children, and $1.00 for adults.

Tennis Team Routs Middlebury

by Sig Heller

UVM's varsity tennis team opened the spring season with a decisive win over Middlebury College 8-1. Having lost to Middlebury last season, it was a favorable sign for this young inexperienced team. The strength of the team is due to three new players, Kirk Dice, a freshman, who is also on the ski team, Jay Moorehead, a transfer from University of Colorado, and Dick Hilmer, another freshman.

Coach Hal Greig sees great possibilities for the team and sees this year as one to build for the future. He is confident the team will gain in strength as the season progresses. Coach Greig had fine words for his doubles teams both of which he feels will have successful seasons. In past years, Vermont has had to depend upon its singles to carry a match. Greig felt that prospects from the B Team Tony Carpenter, Steve Tanner, and Bob Lee would add considerable strength to next year's team.

Due to a late melting of the rink the team will face an extremely tight schedule.

When asked about the physical condition of the courts, Coach Greig stated that the surface was worsening each year and maintenance and repair were being neglected. The light have also been a problem.

Peter MacAusland, number five singles player, commented that he had high hopes for the team and thought there was a good chance for a Yankee Conference title. "Our biggest competition will be as usual UMass."

If Vermont can continue with the fine playing displayed during the Middlebury match, especially that of Kirk Dice, UVM will be strong contenders for the Yankee Conference title.

As a footnote to the above, the tennis team took on St. Lawrence on Monday in the Gutterson "Tennis" Rink. They won the match in a rout by 8–1. Next on the schedule is a match at New Hampshire tomorrow.

"PLEASE HELP MAKE NEXT WEEK THE BIGGEST OF MY CAREER."

The brewers of Budweiser, in cooperation with ABC Radio, asked me to remind you that April 22-27 is National College "Pitch In!" Week.

All week, all over America, students like you will be filling up litter cans like me.

If there's an official "Pitch In!" Week program in your campus community, join up. If there isn't, you can still support the national effort. Just pick up any litter in your path next week and bring it to me.

Thanks, see you then.

Woman's Caucu... Liz Holt...

by Melanie Choukas

"We were never involved in backroom politics because we were never allowed in the backroom," quipped Congressperson Elizabeth Holtzman in reference to women politicians. Holtzman spoke last Thursday evening in Ira Allen Chapel as part of a three-day women's forum sponsored by the UVM women's caucus.

Holtzman was well acquainted with her topic, "Sexism and the Law." One of 15 women in a class of 500 at the Harvard Law School, and the youngest woman ever elected to Congress, Holtzman is concerned about the ways women are discriminated against by the law.

She feels that because women have traditionally been considered appendages of men, the law has discriminated against them in a multitude of ways.

Holtzman cited the area of credit and financing as particularly discriminatory. In many states women cannot obtain loans without having men co-sign them. In some states women are forced to sign statements that they will not have children for a certain number of years in order to obtain credit. Holtzman believes the rationale behind this is the antiquated notion that a woman is not a "breadwinner," and therefore has little financial responsibility.

Holtzman pointed out an area where women prisoners are discriminated against because the law is trying to protect them. Many women are handed "indeterminate sentences." Often this works against the prisoner, sometimes leaving her unjustly in jail for years.

"Student slang for courses at UVM reflect their satiric anti-intellectual attitudes and are indicative of a wave of criticism directed at higher education," two English professors claim.

'Tis A Privilege to Live In Vermont

Woman's Caucus Sponsors Liz Holtzman's Visit

by Melanie Choukas

"We were never involved in backroom politics because we were never allowed in the backroom," quipped Congresswoman Elizabeth Holtzman in reference to women politicians. Holtzman spoke last Thursday evening in Ira Allen Chapel as part of a three-day women's forum sponsored by the UVM women's caucus.

Holtzman was well acquainted with her topic, "Sexism and the Law." One of 15 women in a class of 500 at the Harvard Law School, and the youngest woman ever elected to Congress, Holtzman is concerned about the ways women are discriminated against by the law.

She feels that because women have traditionally been considered appendages of men, the law has discriminated against them in a multitude of ways.

Holtzman cited the area of credit and financing as particularly discriminatory. In many states women cannot obtain loans without having men co-sign them. In some states women are forced to sign statements that they will not have children for a certain number of years in order to obtain credit. Holtzman believes the rationale behind this is the antiquated notion that a woman is not a "breadwinner," and therefore has little financial responsibility.

Holtzman pointed out an area where women prisoners are discriminated against because the law is trying to protect them. Many women are handed "indeterminate sentences." Often this works against the prisoner, sometimes leaving her unjustly in jail for years.

Congressperson Holtzman's talk was a bit of a disappointment to many and some have criticized her talk for being short and lacking in fresh perspectives. She read her talk from notes.

However, a question and answer period followed and Holtzman answered a wide range of questions on topics other than women's rights. When asked about the DePunis case she spoke out in favor of Affirmative Action. Holtzman hopes the Supreme Court won't side with DePunis who has pressed suit against the University of Washington for admitting blacks to their law school who were less qualified academically than he was.

Holtzman believes that those who have been denied educational opportunities because of impoverished socio-economic backgrounds should be given extra support through Affirmative Action.

Holtzman who is serving on the House Judiciary Committee was asked about the impeachment of President Nixon. She replied, "If the president is not accountable to either the courts or congress, then he isn't accountable to anyone and then I don't think we can survive as a democracy."

Holtzman said the judiciary committee has a list of 55 allegations against Nixon, 28 of them criminal. She said that some of the allegations might be dropped in order to narrow the scope of the investigation, "because there are so many of them

Trustees Raise Out-Of-State Tuition, UVM's Financial Future Looks Dark

by Bruce Maddern

At Saturday morning's trustee meeting, $250,000 was voted for the renovation of Redstone Hall despite Building and Grounds Committee opposition. The proposed addition to the gym was open for architectural bid and the capital budget including the $550,000 for the underpass was accepted also as part of the business of the meeting.

The trustees were told that FY75 will have a balanced budget but UVM's financial future looks dark. The balanced budget for FY75 includes a surplus of over $1 million dollars. The $100 out of state tuition increase was officially voted in.

Andrews praised the 36 per cent energy savings for this year, but he said the four day week was an "academic disaster."

The trustees meeting began with the election of a new chairperson, C. Douglas Cairns, and the reappointment of Rollins and Patterson as vice presidents.

The report from the Investment Committee was good news as far as the trustees were concerned. The endowment fund showed a slight profit. The UVM fund was showing a "better profit," and temporary investments were showing "best returns in years."

The Buildings and Grounds, and the Financial and Budget Committees presented the extensive reports which included the gym proposal and Redstone renovation, the acceptance of 155 acres adjoining the Shelburne Pond area. The area will become the Achilles Natural Area.

In addition to the $550,000 for the underpass, the capital budget included $30,000 for a heating plant study. According to Dr. Patterson, the feasibility of putting all of main campus and updating heating systems will be part of the study.

The Buildings and Grounds Committee also voted to lease space in the old firehouse on Church Street for a Continuing Education program.

Under Finance and Budget, the tuition increase was approved, and also the acceptance of about $11.5 million in grants and gifts was voted in.

The trustees heard a lengthy presentation from Dale Hyerstay on financial aid. His indepth presentation illuminated the problems of direct funding to student and the majority age problem. His report cleared up some inaccuracies and enlightened the trustees as to how financial aid works. Mr. Hyerstay also said that federal monies may be raised by as much as 50 per cent next year, especially in the work-study area.

Finally the trustees voted upon honorary degrees and discussed the new Aiken Lecture Series on foreign policy, energy, and agriculture. They also heard a presentation about the Project Elm fight to save the elm trees on campus.

Patrick Gym Extension Approved; Source Of Funds Still Unknown

by Andy Morse

On Friday the gym extension was approved by the Faculty Senate Physical Planning Committee and the Trustees. An architect will now be hired so that detailed planning and construction can begin immediately.

The four million dolla. project is designed to meet the continuing need for physical education and athletic facilities. Because Patrick Gym was designed in 1961 for 4500 students, the facilities now serving 7300 are crowded and lacking in gymnastic and swimming facilities, and locker rooms.

The women's physical education program has been especially short of space because of the unavailability of Southwick Gym. Because Southwick has always housed women's physical education, Patrick's facilities for 300 women falls far short of the now crucial demand for space.

Larry Snyder, of the Office of Administrative Resources, pointed out that the colossal increase of intramural activity by both men and women has put strain on the already overloaded facilities. Space is so short that the balcony above the gym floor must house some gymnastic apparatus and activity.

Because UVM plans to hold the student population at its present level, the proposed addition is intended to meet today's and the future's need. Because of the increased use of the swimming pool for both physical education and intercollegiate activities, a new pool is planned which will include a separate diving area and permanent spectator stands. The existing pool will be used for physical education and the women's team.

Referring to the blueprints of the addition, Snyder said that surrounding the pool will be 10 or 12 squash courts to ease the strain on the existing courts. Twenty six hundred women's lockers and shower facilities, physical education classrooms and offices will be incorporated in this east wing.

The smaller west wing addition will primarily be used for gymnastics, thus freeing the west basketball court that until now has been used for gymnastics.

Also in the plans are ten additional indoor tennis courts to be built behind Gutterson. This plan will both ease the increased demand for tennis courts and allow Gutterson to have year-round ice. The machinery necessary to convert Gutterson to year-round ice will be housed where the Zamboni is now stored. The entrance to Gutterson will be remodeled to facilitate visitors' usage of locker rooms, to store the Zamboni and to make at-the-door ticket sales easier.

Snyder described the three possible sources of money to pay for this project as (1) money granted by the state (2) an increase in the student athletic fee (3) private donations. At this point Snyder does not know what source or combination of sources will pay for the addition. "Any combination is possible," said Snyder.

So You'd LikeTo Live Off-Campus

by John Van Hoesen

A university male student decided to leave the dorm for off-campus housing in his sophomore year. Since that decision he has faced student discrimination, landlord legal problems and severe headaches.

The problem arose when the student headed to local newspapers to begin his search for off-campus housing. He found "no student" advertisements in nearly one third of the local listings for furnished and unfurnished apartments. On any one day he found at least ten advertisements specifying "no student."

After calling other listings which did not advertise "no students" he found that many of these landlords also wanted to rent to no-students only. As much as he resented it, the student was classified with pets. As he described it, "No pets, no students."

One landlord commented to the Cynic: "Students are noisy; they tend to damage my apartment and generally disturb other tenants in the building." He concluded that students are often poor risks. Director of Vermont Legal Aid, John Dooley, gave his opinion of the situation: "My view is that students are killing the housing market in the city. They are taking up a large amount of the housing (and) families with children are finding it hard to find housing."

The director added that to change this situation, legislative action would be required. According to Dooley, favorable legislation to end student discrimination is highly improbable because students are not a popular group in the Vermont legislature.

Many students feel that since they are now of legal age under law that they are being discriminated against because of the temporary "occupation" they are choosing as students. Most students agree that they should not be discriminated against for this reason.

State's Attorney Patrick Leahy said the direct "no student" advertisement is "Probably discriminatory." "If there is any violation though, it's probably a federal violation," he added. Leahy is a democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate.

Leahy felt that it was improper to limit large scale housing to non-students. However, he specified that one and two family dwellings were a special case. "It's conceivable that with the proper case one could forge some new ground," he suggested.

Furnished Apartments

BURLINGTON – Three rooms, private entrance heated, hot water, parking. Married couple, no students, shown after 3 p.m.

BURLINGTON – Four rooms, good furniture and appliances. No utilities (No students) no pets.

BURLINGTON – Two bedrooms, S. Willard, sub-let, May-June $220 plus electricity. Call evenings.

BURLINGTON – Three rooms, porch, heated second floor $95 deposit, working adult, $120.

BURLINGTON – two rooms with bath, ground floor, heated, working couple or elderly person Deposit, $125 month.

In recent years, rising concern over the housing market has been reported in weekly news magazines. According to Time, apartment construction is making a come back "that surprises economists, delights landlords, and quite possibly signals a fundamental shift in how most Americans will choose to live in the years ahead."

With rising apartment construction comes rising competition in the market for apartments between college students and their married, working counterparts. More than one married couple has noted how much easier it is to find housing now that they are married and working.

But Vermont does have a fair housing statute. After considerable debate, the 1967 legislature passed a fair housing bill. The bill stated that real estate could not be prohibited for sale or lease to persons on the grounds of race, religious creed, color, or national origin.

The provision did not apply to dwellings containing units for no more than two families, if the owner lived in the dwelling, or to accomodations if no more than four rooms are rented and if the owner or members of his family resided there.

Discrimination under this bill was to be settled by the Human Rights Commission. The code has nothing to say about college students. The legal-age bill was passed approximately three years later.

Legal Aid Director Dooley insists, "Private individuals have a right to discriminate on anything other than race color, or creed." Dooley maintains that students should be discriminated against because "Students are pushing up the rent rates because they can pool their resources and then they can afford an apartment despite rent increases."

State's Attorney Leahy added that there was nothing presently on the books that would prohibit this type of conduct by landlords.

What will the University do about the situation? According to Assistant Director of Residence Halls, Gloria Thompson, the University does try to deal with the problem. Thompson said that 50 per cent of the students at the University are housed off-campus. That is

Commentary:

Two Professors' Article Causes Campus Controversy

by Peter Campbell

"Student slang for courses at UVM reflect their satiric anti-intellectual attitudes and are indicative of a wave of criticism directed at higher education," two English professors claim.

Paul A. Eschholz and Alfred F. Ross add that "most of the course names reflect the students' negative and cynical attitudes toward specific courses, education, and society in general."

The Burlington Free Press
Tuesday, April 16

This article, entitled "UVM Slang Reveals Wave of Criticism" was on the front page of the second section of the paper.

Some of the slang designations the Free Press quoted included "Priests and Beasts" for the introduction to the study of Western Religion; "Seed and Breed" for advanced livestock production; "Drugs for Thugs," the drug culture; "Mug the Bug," principles of pest control; "Bedpan," intermediate nursing; "Show and Tell," public speaking; and "Nuts for Guts," for abnormal psychology.

These terms were selected from over 50 that Professors Eschholz and Ross listed in the original four page article first published in Current Slang, a quarterly published by the University of South Dakota and republished in the 1972 edition of American Speech, another journal.

The Free Press story raised eyebrows among the students who read it – enough to prompt at least one letter to the paper from Dave Landry, a UVM student.

Landry said that after interviewing 30 or more students, he could find few who had ever heard of the terms, and when they had, they were rarely used. Landry went on to judge the professors' article as "both invalid and misdirected," and admonished them for "slapping them in the face with it."

Ross is currently in Italy, but Eschholz was reached by phone at his home Friday evening. He said he hoped the whole thing would be dropped; he felt that he had been "played into the Free Press' hands." Eschholz pointed out that the Free Press neglected to mention that the article had been written in 1971, and maintained that the data was "distorted and misunderstood."

"The names are not the important thing in the article," he said. "That data is from three years ago, and you know how slang changes." Eschholz also stated that Landry showed a "lack of awareness about slang."

Eschholz asked why this article was being written; when told, he asked to see it before publication "to correct any misunderstandings." This was refused also. Eschholz then asserted that the article was written "just for fun."

"We are not claiming any scholarship on the article," he noted; "if that were the only thing there might be an issue but we have our books to go by." The books are Vermont: a Sampler and Language, Introductory Readings.

The first is an anthology of articles – mostly poetry – by Vermont writers, edited by Eschholz and Professor Arthur Biddle, also of the English department. The second is an anthology of contemporary articles on language and linguistics, edited by Eschholz, Ross, and another UVM English professor, Virginia Clark. Both books have received good reviews.

When Betty Speranzo, the writer of the Free Press story, was contacted, she expressed surprise at Eschholz' remarks. She pointed out that the story was almost entirely quotations from the original article. According to Ms. Speranzo, Eschholz freely offered the article to her while she was interviewing him for another story on current slang (Free Press, March 26).

When Dr. Rothwell, head was asked to comment on the controversy, he declined, saying that it was a "complicated matter." But he did recall that he had read the article when it was originally published.

What To Do If You Get Busted

by Margo Howland

In this era of demonstrations, sit-ins, outbreaks of violence, frequent use of drugs and alcohol and Kent State, there is a nagging question that tugs at the minds of countless parents sometime during the four years that Pete or Susie attend college. The question is one that many other parents may not even consider until it happens. The late night phone call. The voice, scared or angry or tearful, that one can scarcely recognize, blurting out: "Mom, Dad, I've been busted. What'll I do?"

Get a lawyer – fast. But in these days of 18 year-old majority and earlier independence from the folks at home, what do you do if you have to handle it yourself? Suppose your parents are out-of-town or on vacation, what do you do in those crucial first 24 hours? What happens to you?

The Cynic investigated these questions in interviews with Burlington Police Chief Arthur Carron and Chittenden County Public Defender David Smith.

What Constitutes Arrest

Cynic: Is getting stopped by a police car (such as for speeding) count as an arrest?

Chief Carron: If a person is stopped for speeding, or a similar traffic violation, there is no actual arrest. The person receives a citation to appear in court, or he may send in a pre-determined fine for the offense. These fines are payable to the court. Traffic citations are on record in Montpelier. If a person has a record of eight or more moving violations within a five year period, the commissioner revokes the person's license for two years.

Cynic: Who can make an arrest? Under what circumstances?

Carron: Any police officer, sheriff, deputy sheriff or special police officer can make an arrest. An example of special police officers would be janitors of local police schools. They have a restricted special police commission, signed by the chief and board of police commissioners. Game wardens are another example, whose authority is restricted to fish and game violations. (Editor's note: Campus Security are also special police officers and have the powers of arrest.)

Mr. Smith: An officer may make an arrest under the law if he has probable cause. A careful officer would simply place the person in custody and check out and attempt to verify the information the subject told him to determine in fact if there is probable cause that a crime has been committed, and that the subject committed it.

Cynic: What is a citizen's arrest?

Carron: In 34 years on the Student Coalition Forms

A political body has been formed which has as its primary goal to represent the rights of all students. To guarantee that the students are not taken advantage of by the administration or any organization in the University. Beyond the scope of these ideals this organization would also like to do all possible to help reduce the expense of attending UVM.

What is this new organization and how are they going to solve these and the many other problems that face UVM and many others? The Student Coalition, as it is named, is attempting to create a student book co-op to help lower the cost of books. It will start off with mostly used books and if it is successful, then perhaps something can be done about the cost of new books.

They would also like to have a reevaluation of many of UVM's mandatory fees students pay. The coalition feels that students aren't getting anything for their money. The group would like students to have a real voice in deciding how their money is spent.

The Coalition is a non-S.A. recognized organization. The Student Coalition will hold a meeting on Tuesday, April 30, 7 p.m., Billings Center.

Graduate Opportunities

The official opening of the 1975-76 competition for grants for graduate study or research abroad and for professional training in the creative and performing arts was announced today by the Institute of International Education. It is expected that approximately 570 awards to 50 countries will be available for 1975-76.

The purpose of these grants is to increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and other countries through the exchange of persons, knowledge and skills. They are provided under the terms of the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961 (Fulbright-Hays Act) and by foreign governments, universities and private donors.

Applicants must be U. S. citizens at the time of application, who will generally hold a Bachelor's degree or its equivalent before the beginning date of the grant and, in most cases, will be proficient in the language of the host country. Except for certain specific awards, candidates may not hold the Ph.D. at the time of application.

Creative and performing artists are not required to have a Bachelor's Degree, but they must have four years of professional study or equivalent experience. Social work applicants must have at least two years of professional experience after the Master of Social Work degree; candidates in medicine must have an M.D. at the time of application.

Selection is based on the academic and/or professional record of the applicant, the validity and feasibility of his proposed study plan, his language preparation and personal qualification. Preference is given to candidates between 20 and 35 years of age who have not had prior opportunity for extended study or residence abroad.

Information and application forms may be obtained from Ben Bergstein at Ext. 3160. He is located in 335 Waterman, The Graduate College Office. The deadline date for receipt of applications in his office is October 1, 1974.

"Population Growth And The American Future" Film And Panel Tomorrow

In observance of the United Nations' World Population Year, the UVM Department of Sociology, in cooperation with Planned Parenthood of Vermont, will sponsor the showing of the official film version of the final report of the United States Commission on Population Growth and the American Future in Billings North Lounge on Friday, April 26, at 8 p.m. Following the presentation of the film will be a panel discussion among five members of the Burlington Community.

The film is a condensed version of the commission's report which was issued in March of 1972. Though created by President Nixon early in his first term in office and authorized by Congress in 1970, the Commission and its report have been openly ignored by the President because of their forthright recommendations regarding the extending of contraception and abortion services to the American public, and the extension of federally-sponsored sex education curricula into the public schools. The report also recommends such measures as the simplifying of adoption procedures, equal rights for women, national distribution and migration policies, reviewing of immigration laws, and voluntary sterilization as a means of curbing the continued population growth in the United States.

Contrary to popular belief, the population of the United States continues to grow rapidly in spite of recently decreasing birth rates. Recent growth rates in the United States have ranged around 2 million additional persons per year – the equivalent of adding a new Pittsburgh, Boston and Philadelphia to the American population every twelve months. While future growth projections are dependent on birth rate projections, it is generally agreed that the population of the United States will continue to grow until well into the twenty-first century, with a net increase of around 60 million persons if the birth rate continues at its present levels. Recognizing this fact and the social and ecological problems that such an increase will bring, the Commission recommends voluntary measures to achieve zero population growth in the twentieth century.

Following the showing of the Commission film report, a panel composed of five persons representing various points of view will discuss their feelings about the issue of population growth in the United States. Eric T. Godfrey, Assistant Professor of Sociology at UVM and the only demographer in Vermont, will be joined by Mary Barbara Maher, Chairperson of the South Burlington Planning Commission, Richard Snelling, an area businessman and member of the Vermont House of Representatives, and Judy Tyson, M.D., a woman's rights advocate. Priscilla Welsh, Board Member of Planned Parenthood of Vermont, will act as moderator. The Burlington and University community is invited to participate in the forum.

The Domino People are Pizza People, Period.

Dear Students:

We at Domino's Pizza wish to extend a sincere thank you to all the students at UVM for your generous patronage. Domino's prides itself on its fast delivery ability. We know what it takes to get your Pizza to you hot and fast. This is one reason why Domino's Pizza, Inc., a chain of 73 outlets in 12 states, delivers more pizzas than any other company in the world.

Before you blindly rush into any random pizza, you might like to know what goes into each Domino's Pizza. Prepared fresh when you call, Domino's chefs begin with a dough made from high protein flour. The dough is then rolled (by hand) to the correct size, and expertly covered with a base of tangy tomato sauce. This mildly seasoned blend of sauces adds flavor without beginning too spicy.

Next, a mixture of rich buttery cheeses is carefully sprinkled on top of your pie. Besides this basic cheese pizza, we have an array of toppings that can be added singly or in any combination.

Please do not overlook the nutritional characteristics of each item when deciding your order.

In all, we feel we have the product and want you to know that we appreciate your business. We feel that Domino's and students make an excellent team. For those of you who finish this May, good luck in the future. For those of you coming back in September, let's team up again. In all cases, good luck on exams.

Sincerely yours,
Domino's

WITHOUT CONES, DOMES, SURROUNDS, VOICE COILS, BENDING PAPER, RATTLING MYLAR, RESONANCE, MASS, AND COLORATION THE ESS HEIL AIR-MOTION TRANSFORMER REPRODUCES SOUND SO CLEAN AND CLEAR TECHNICAL ARGUMENTS AREN'T NECESSARY.

BUT IF YOU'RE INTERESTED...
HERE ARE SOME HARD FACTS: sound as clear as light
Why do ESS Heil air-motion transformer loudspeakers sound so clean and discriminating? Because the Heil diaphragm accelerates rapidly enough to reproduce the initial transient attack of high frequencies where your ear is most sensitive. In fact it's the first milliseconds of reception that your ear recognizes and analyzes. If the information in this instant of time is compromised, nothing heard later will set it right.
The transient ability of the ESS Heil air-motion transformer is unmatched and superior even to electrostatics which had been considered the ultimate in this characteristic. How is this possible? The .5 mil graphite/mylar diaphragm of an electrostatic is demonstratably lighter than the .7 mil aluminum/polyethylene Heil diaphragm. The truth is "effective mass", rather than unit area mass, is the important factor. "Effective mass" of any diaphragm is derived directly from energy equations and reflects the amount of kinetic energy required to move a diaphragm to any given output into the air which is the complete parameter for transient ability. Just as some cars accelerate faster than others while getting better mileage, some speakers accelerate air faster than others while using less energy because of a superior ability to get the energy into the air.
The equation for kinetic energy is MV 2 (mass of the diaphragm times velocity squared). While it is true that the Heil diaphragm is about 15 times as heavy per unit area as an electrostatic diaphragm, the transformational principle underlying the Heil patent requires the diaphragm to move only 1/5th as rapidly as an electrostatic to achieve an equivalent air speed. Consequently, since velocity is squared, only 1/25th the energy is required to move an equivalent mass of Heil diaphragm to the same instantaneous sound pressure as an electrostatic diaphragm. When you then measure the energy required to achieve a given peak output from the ESS Heil air-motion transformer you will find it is approximately 3/5ths that needed for an electrostatic driver. And it achieves all this without introducing the distortion created by the audio transformer in an electrostatic.
Why can you hear such a wealth of clean, pure detail from the ESS amt 1? Simple laws of physics. A higher percentage of the energy going into the Heil air-motion transformer speeds more rapidly into the air than with any other device.
The ESS Heil air-motion transformer carries a lifetime warranty and is "state-of-the-art" for today and for the future. Hear this new measure of sound quality at your franchised ESS dealer listed at right.

Who Cares?

The Board of Trustees of this University is totally unconcerned with the opinions of students. A university is supposed to be for students; therefore one could assume that student opinion counted. Apparently, as we saw at last Saturday's Board of Trustees meeting, it does not.

The trustees, perhaps by mutual consent, did not mention two areas of vital interest to students. Obviously, they felt that the student concern evidenced over the past few weeks was unimportant. What do students have to do with running a university? We only reap the assets and liabilities of their decisions.

The student opposition to the proposed pedestrian underpass was the first issue ignored by the trustees. In the past few weeks, many students, including S.A. President Peter MacAusland, have voiced strong disapproval of the University's plans. Our leader and our opinions have been shunned.

The trustees also chose to ignore John Franco's recent charges. In last week's Cynic this editorial board sent an open letter to Patrick Leahy and Kimberly Cheney. Mr. Cheney has requested copies of all the articles in question. President Andrews recently issued a statement defending his position. He must think these charges are serious enough to warrant his denial. The coverage by the state media indicates the effect of Franco's investigation. Why then, did the trustees by-pass the issue? Are they afraid to defend themselves? Or perhaps, like President Andrews, they feel that "it's spring" and that's the reason for student concern.

Instead of confronting growing student disapproval, the trustees raised out-of-state tuition by another $100. Of course, student opinion was neither solicited nor wanted. This University is neither run by, nor for students.

Support The UFW Boycott

Thousands of farm workers across the country have been confronted with violence, loss of their jobs, and imprisonment–all because they are struggling for basic rights which most working people already enjoy–job security, unemployment compensation, health benefits, decent wages, free speech, and sanitary working conditions.

The United Farm Workers Union (UFW) is designed to help farm workers gain control of their own lives, improve job conditions, and establish themselves as a vital, active force within their communities. But the UFW is fighting desperately to stay alive. California growers have refused to renegotiate UFW contracts. The powerful Teamsters Union is signing contracts mainly with growers who formerly held contracts with UFW!

The lettuce and grape boycott is a familiar story on the news scene. UFW workers are striking to save their union and get their contracts signed and enforced. While they are on strike, California and Arizona growers have hired non-union or Teamster laborers to work in the vineyards and lettuce fields under the most wretched conditions. The statistics are grim:

The life expectancy for a farm worker is 49 years; the national average is 79. Death from influenza and pneumonia is 200 percent higher. Death rate from on-the-job accidents is 300 percent higher. 75,000 farm workers a year are poisoned by lethal pesticides in the fields. 25 percent of all farm workers are children under 16 years of age. In most cases there are no toilets or drinking water facilities available to the workers in the fields.

The average annual income for a farm worker family of four is $3,170. This is disgraceful! The UFW contracts guard against such atrocities. These contracts must be renewed and enforced.

There is a way to help these farm workers. Hit the big-business lettuce and grape growers right in the pocket by boycotting non-union products. A&P, the nation's largest chain store, refuses to sell UFW lettuce. We must refuse to do business with them! Boycott Gallo wine, too. There are no UFW grapes on the market; boycott all out-of-state grapes.

SAGA Food Service is attempting to obtain UFW lettuce through InterHarvest, from Boston. UVM students and faculty are urged to insist upon UFW lettuce at SAGA meals. If the price is prohibitive or the lettuce is unobtainable, SAGA should be pressured to buy locally-grown lettuce or leaf lettuce–don't buy iceberg!

When buying iceberg lettuce, look for the Thunderbird on the wrapping, or the words "Farmworkers, AFL-CIO." We must help to put an end to the exploitation of the nation's farm workers.

The Death Of The Cynic

by Steven C. Rice

I had never expected to see the Old Man again. When we had last talked with each other, he had said a final farewell. He was going off to the mountains to live a hermit's life, and he had remarked, "Well, if Senator Sam can go fishing in Carolina, I can go fishing in the streams of the Rockies."

For during our last conversation, the Old Man had left me a message about the meaning of our democracy. He only had to allude to the number of men who died dreaming for its reality, over two hundred years ago, to get to the heart of his message.

When we left that afternoon, the Old Man had wept. It was the first time during my four year old friendship that he cried, and I was convinced then I would never see him again. In a funny way, this realization gave me a stronger will to go on and carry the message of the Old Man. When I did, some of my friends thought me crazy, and I was constantly told to slow down and relax. Such advice, as sincere as it certainly was, caused me to become more adamant with the message of democracy.

The Old Man never made it to the Rockies. He never made it out of this town. The Old Man died last night. He had made it to my room, and between his final coughs, he left his final words:

"Son, well, as you can see, I never quite made it. I've known for a long time that I have been sick. Thank the Lord...I've lived a full life, and I'm really sorry I've got to go with the kind of mess this country is in now. I like to think I said and did something worthwhile in my lifetime for other people to make their lives happier. I suppose I sound like a politician, and I suppose I have been one in a way. At least, I've been an honest one...."

And with these words, the Cynic looked at me, smiled, coughed, and closed his eyes.

I've been trying to think of a fitting eulogy for the Old Man, and others like him who died knowing their honest worth to humanity. But the words do not come, and I suppose, at times, the only eloquence is silence, and a hope of better times for our democracy.

Letters To The Editor

Senior Council

To the Editor:

I am confused. I wandered into Billings the other day and was confronted by another election. This one was for the 1975 Senior Class Council. I never realized that it existed and did not know any of the people we were to choose.

The people that did run for the council should be commended for at least trying to do something worthwhile for this institution. But why didn't more people know about the election and what the Senior Class Council was? I don't want to blame anyone because I do that too much, but I will anyway. Maybe this council can let people know what they are doing so more people will be interested next year.

Good luck,

To the Editor:

To the person who ripped off my green army (fatigue) coat from F.A.D.C. at Phi Delta Theta back in March:

Dear Friend,

Okay, all right, you win. I admit it, you've got my coat. Congratulations. I won't bother to give you that old sentimental shit about my father wearing the same coat twenty years ago, or that it was my favorite. I also won't say anything about that brown wool hat in the pocket that belonged to my roommate. How about those gloves, really nice, huh? No, I won't waste your time complaining about these trivial things. But listen, Jack, if you could somehow see fit to return my glasses, I would really appreciate it.

Grandma Jones

To the Editor:

As elected leader and keeper of the faith, wastebasket and ladle of WRUV–AM, I must reply to the article of 18 April entitled "Grandma Jones Reveals..." to clear up any confusion caused by the aspersion that Grandma engages in cultivation of the Cannabis plant.

When contacted late Thursday, Grandma was cleaning out her 20-gal. wastebasket in preparation for the annual spring mixing of her D.J.–destroying elixir. She stated her summer supply of icicles for stirring has been laid in her 1932 Amana freezer and that the aged canoe paddle has given a new coating of strawberry varnish. Grandma Jones' Super Punch has been an institution at the radio station for many years and many radio station stalwarts can attest to its truly wonderful effects.

Your reporter must have been led astray by an octagenarian posing as our beloved Grandma and we feel that a full investigation is warranted into this travesty of confidence.

Very truly yours,

Avery Dropped

To the Editor:

We are writing to express the rage we feel toward certain unknown individuals within the college of Education for dropping the only teacher who gave us anything at all of value: Kirk Avery. It was he alone who, at a time when we needed support and understanding, made his time available to us. He was our supervisor, our friend; he taught us to learn, to feel.

How many teachers let their students flounder while they attend faculty meetings, cocktail parties, and engage themselves in giving outside lectures for extra money (and is this the answer to scant remuneration?) Furthermore, how many students will come to such a teacher for advice and help? As students of yesterday, teachers of today we urge the department to re-assess its priorities. We need more teachers like Kirk Avery who are concerned with the development and needs of their students above the politics of academia!

Sincerely,
Karen Johnston

Day Of Humiliation, Fasting And Prayer

Congressional Resolution Proclaiming April 30, 1974 A National Day of Humiliation, Fasting and Prayer

Whereas, it is the duty of nations, as well as of men to owe their dependence upon the overruling power of God, to confess their sins and transgressions, in humble sorrow, yet with assured hope that genuine repentance will lead to mercy and pardon, and to recognize the sublime truth announced in the Holy Scriptures and proven by all history, that those nations are blessed whose God is Lord; and

Whereas, we know that we have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of Heaven; we have been preserved these many years in peace and prosperity; we have grown in numbers, wealth and power as no other nation has ever grown; but we have forgotten God; and

Whereas, we have forgotten the gracious hand which preserved us in peace, and multiplied and enriched us; and we have vainly imagined, in the deceitfulness of our hearts, that all these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom and virtue of our own; and

Whereas, intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God that made us; and

Whereas, we have made such an idol out of our pursuit of "national security" that we have forgotten that only God can be the ultimate guardian of our true livelihood and safety; and

Whereas, we have failed to respond, personally and collectively, with sacrifice and uncompromised commitment to the unmet needs of our fellow man, both at home and abroad; as a people, we have become so absorbed with the selfish pursuits of pleasure and profit that we have blinded ourselves to God's standard of justice and righteousness for this society; and

Whereas, it therefore behooves us to humble ourselves before Almighty God, to confess our national sins, and to pray for clemency and forgiveness: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled, that the Congress hereby proclaims that April 30, 1974 be a National Day of Humiliation, Fasting and Prayer; and calls upon the people of our nation to humble ourselves as we see fit, before our Creator to acknowledge our final dependence upon Him and to repent of our national sins.

Apathetic Streakers

by Kathy Stiansni

Where is streak? The striking element of naturalism which pervaded UVM's campus as naked bodies raided dorms, greens and classrooms has mysteriously disappeared. Or, more accurately, has diminished. Sporadic, isolated incidents are occurring now but the mass fervor exists no longer.

Prior to the March break a glamorous aura was attached to streaking. UVM'ers did have a late start though; news of streaking reached Burlington several weeks after the activities began to catch on the more "cosmopolitan" campuses. So maybe, here, streakers were experiencing the beginning of the end and therefore doomed to apathy after only a short while. Now is the logical time to streak–temperatures are enticingly balmy, the sprouting grass has gently cushioned the grounds–but few people are out in their birthday suits.

Streaking activities have become a national phenomenon. Once a momentum was established, streakers were everywhere. They appeared on the Johnny Carson Show, the televised Academy Awards, and at major sports events, most recently at the Winooski River Raft Race. They exposed themselves to the general public and to the media and the reaction was immediate. Time and Newsweek magazines evaluated and psychoanalyzed the streakers, gave them official reasons for being. Thus, the streakers no longer wanted to be. When streaking became the thing to do, it became the thing not to do.""

The Aldermen's Re

The Aldermen's Committee on the Study of Bicycles recently presented a report to the Burlington Board of Aldermen. Since June 25, 1973, the committee has investigated all areas of concern relating to the operation of bicycles in Burlington.

The committee studied existing conditions and prior activities, accident statistics, model bicycle programs, new bikeways, bike racks, co-ordination of municipal departments, funding sources, and preliminary cost estimates of bikeway improvements.

A survey of bicycle dealers in Chittenden County revealed that over the last three years, from 1971 through 1973 a total of 24,375 bicycles were sold with 75 percent sold to adults (14 years and over).

Based on the national average of one bicycle rider for every three persons, there are approximately 13,000 cyclists in Burlington and 30,000 cyclists in Chittenden County. In 1973 just over 2850 bicycles were registered with the Burlington Police Department.

After a sharp decline in bicycle accidents and injuries between 1967 and 1968, there has been a steady increase in these catagories every year thereafter. A seven year summary follows:

The Aldermen's Report : How To Avoid Death On Two Wheels

The Alderman's Committee on the Study of Bicycles recently presented a report to the Burlington Board of Aldermen. Since June 25, 1973, the committee has investigated all areas of concern relating to the operation of bicycles in Burlington.

The committee studied existing conditions and prior activities, accident statistics, model bicycle programs, new bikeways, bike racks, co-ordination of municipal departments, funding sources, and preliminary cost estimates of bikeway improvements.

A survey of bicycle dealers in Chittenden County revealed that over the last three years, from 1971 through 1973 a total of 24,375 bicycles were sold with 75 percent sold to adults (14 years and over).

Based on the national average of one bicycle rider for every three persons, there are approximately 13,000 cyclists in Burlington and 30,000 cyclists in Chittenden County. In 1973 just over 2850 bicycles were registered with the Burlington Police Department.

After a sharp decline in bicycle accidents and injuries between 1967 and 1968, there has been a steady increase in these catagories every year thereafter. A seven year summary follows:

*1 Fatality

Enforcement of Burlington's existing bicycle ordinance is ineffective in cases where minors (under 16 years of age) violate a provision of the ordinance, since no penalties can be imposed upon these youthful violators and parental responsibility is vaguely defined.

A supplement to the report outlined a summary of recommendations:

1. Implementation of planned bikeway system – phase I

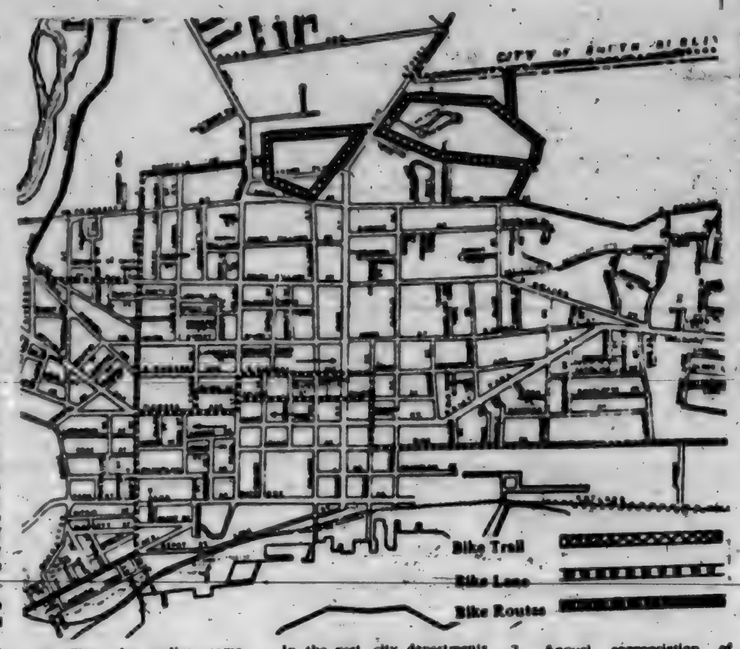
Twenty-one miles of bikeways are proposed along certain city streets in the three largest parks (Leddy, Oakledge and Ethan Allen Parks) and along a two-mile section of the abandoned railroad right-of-way in the north end of the city (see map). When completed, these routes will enable cyclists to ride to most centers of employment, education and shopping with greater safety and confidence. The committee has recommended completion of the major links of the network by 1976 to coincide with the nation's bicentennial celebration.

2. Consideration of bikeways in all proposals for road improvements

The Committee also recommends that facilities for bicycle travel be incorporated into future street and highway designs where it can be demonstrated that such a facility is required.

3. Adoption of model bicycle ordinance

A new law dealing with the operation of bicycles has been drafted to:



a) Give the police some flexibility in dealing with youthful offenders.

b) Clarify the rights of bicyclist when operating on a public street (under State law, bicycles are a legitimate road-using vehicle).

c) Increase the recovery rate of stolen bicycles.

d) Inspection of bicycles to make sure they are properly equipped and in good mechanical condition.

e) Provide enabling legislation to permit the city to create bikeways.

4. Promote safe bicycling through a coordinated program

Effective enforcement alone will not reduce the increasing number of bicycle accidents. The Committee suggests that greater emphasis be placed on education and safety programs to teach cyclists, particularly youngsters, the rules of the road, responsible riding habits and simple bike repairs. A variety of possible activities are listed including a) publication of an illustrated operator's manual b) safety tips on radio and T.V. and c) creation of a bicycle court for repeat offenders. Existing programs, such as the Bike Repair Workshop and the Safety and Rodeo Program, should receive continued support by the community and the city.

5. Assignment of responsibilities to appropriate city departments

In the past, city departments have been reluctant to take on additional services such as the purchase, construction and maintenance of bicycle facilities without a directive from the Board of Aldermen and sufficient funds to finance these improvements. The Committee has taken the initiative to assign specific responsibilities to city departments. Further, these departments are asked to include a budget for projected, bicycle-related expenditures in their annual budget request submitted to the Finance Committee.

6. Provide bike racks at convenient locations

Bike racks encourage more orderly parking of bicycles and offer a safe and stationery object for securing a two-wheeled vehicle. When placed in plain view of the public, bicycles chained to racks are less apt to be tampered with by would-be thieves. The Committee has adopted a policy of a) requiring bike racks adjacent to all city-owned buildings frequented by the public, b) encouraging large commercial and industrial concerns to install racks for their employees and customers and c) providing bike parking areas on Church Street, in the urban renewal development and in all suburban shopping centers.

7. Annual appropriation of approximately $20,000. to fund bicycle-related expenditures

Based on preliminary cost estimates, the Committee finds that a minimum of $20,000. annually for the next five (5) years will be necessary to bring bicycle facilities and safety programs up to par. A five-year capital budget program has been prepared by the Committee and forwarded to the Board of Aldermen. This long term budget lists each project, its initial and on-going cost, and the order of priority in which these improvements should be undertaken.

8. Regional approach to bicycle facilities development

Like roads, bikeways very often cross municipal boundaries. Planning at a regional level is therefore essential. The Committee has taken the position that the Regional Planning Commision should take a more active role in a) setting up a regional system of bikeways utilizing local proposals and b) encouraging communities to develop uniform signing and uniform bicycle laws.

The forty page report also contains miscellaneous recommendations and a section on the Committee's findings. The report is available in the Burlington Planning Office, Room 34 of City Hall.

Although the University would not back a legal suit, they do encourage students to procure legal assistance if they feel students are being discriminated against. The program will not list apartment advertisements that specify "no students."

Since that time the landlady had the heat turned off because she owed $500 on her fuel oil bill. The landlady moved to Florida, taking the student's $50 damage deposit with her.

Lesky advocates an escrow fund to take care of this particular problem., but Senator Robert V. Daniels had another suggestion for the Vermont legislature – a uniform landlord and tenant act.

"The bill just tries to attack the problems of legal rights," Daniels explained. The bill would have defined landlord and tenant obligations, helped to eliminate slum lords and retaliatory conduct by landlords against their tenants. The legislature did not pass the bill.

Although Daniels will be back in the legislature with the same bill in the next session, the question has been growing about housing discrimination and unfair housing practices in what Daniels called a tremendous housing problem in Chittenden County. State's Attorney Patrick Leahy summed up the problem and suggested that the only way to change unfair housing practices would be to "bring suit."

Until some action is taken on the unfair housing practices in the state like the ones reported by the sophomore student, that student maintains that he will continue to take aspirin to relieve discriminatory headaches. However, medical sources report that aspirin is not always a curing medication; it simply relieves pain.

Two Professors' Article ...

Earlier that day, Dr. Rothwell had talked to David Landry. According to Landry – a pre-med student – Dr. Rothwell wanted to know whether he had a class with either Eschholz or Ross, whether the letter was due to some personal resentment. Landry had not had a class with Eschholz or Ross, though he had Professor Virginia Clark the semester before in a course that used the Eschholz-Clark-Ross book.

Dr. Rothwell told Landry that he agreed with Landry's letter, but he was concerned because it had started a lot of publicity and endangered the two men's jobs.

The article states that the data was collected over the academic years of 1970-1972 from students in an Introduction to English course and an inter-departmental linguistics course. The data was then discussed with the classes in an effort "to eliminate any idiosyncratic terms." However, according to students who had been in an introductory English course in 1971 taught by Professor Ross, they were asked to collect the data, which was never discussed in the described manner:

"He just passed out a sheet of paper and told us to go out and get twenty slang words for courses...most everyone came back with just two or three names, so he passed them out again, and told us to go to the fraternities. We were just freshmen, but he seemed to assume that we knew nothing, so most of the kids just made up names and passed them in. There was a lot of resentment in the class because of his attitude. He skipped a lot of classes too, he was always going to see his publisher or something."

The credo of the University is "Publish or Perish." The general justification is: an instructor is expected to publish; otherwise his colleagues have no way of knowing his intellectual worth. The pages from the past two years of This Week, the official publicity sheet for the University administration show Eschholz and Ross's publishing to have been prolific. Eschholz alone has published six articles in various journals, and co-authored five articles with Ross, besides editing the two books previously mentioned.

These vary in topics, from "Evaluating Seating Arrangements in the Classroom," to "Mark Twain and the Language of Gesture," to "Bunkerisms: Suppository Remarks in All in the Family." Also, according to a notice in This Week (October 1, 1972) Professors Eschholz and Ross had started a publication themselves called "Exercise Exchange: A Journal for English Teachers in High School and College." "The magazine offers short practical articles that have 'worked' in the classroom to smooth the way for students struggling with the mysteries of language and literature."

Ironically enough, by all reports Eschholz's and Ross's teaching methods have been rated from average to dismal by their past students. The 1970 and 1971 editions of The Albatross – which suspended publication until this year – rated both Eschholz and Ross's lectures from a high to low "average." According to the ratings both had a high percentage of "mannerisms" and "superficiality," that detracted from their teaching – though it must be noted that many English teachers rated high in "mannerisms" (which is in itself a very dubious term). Eschholz also scored high in the "repetitous" category.

More recent reports seem to bear those evaluations out. In response to the flat question, "Did you ever have Ross or Eschholz for teachers, and what were they like?" the reponses were lukewarm to negative. One student who had an American literature course with Eschholz last semester complained that Eschholz had not even bothered to learn the students' names in a small class of fifteen to twenty and never responded to the students' ideas; while another student in a language course said that Eschholz knew everyone's name and did respond to the students' ideas.

The consistent appraisal of Professor Ross was that he knew his material, but that he was very condescending.

These descriptions came from a limited number of students, but the descriptions had little variance, and half of the students were English majors.

By reading the article – officially titled "Course Names: another aspect of College Slang" one will find the tone rather dry for an article that was "done for fun." The article, readily available in Bailey Library, is by intention a serious article that is an offshoot of an article in the Clark-Eschholz-Ross book.

In their article, Ross and Eschholz stated that their information was twofold. It revealed that students use familiar patterns in creating slang names for courses "and that ...the names seem to reveal their biases about and attitudes toward particular courses and toward education in general." Neither objective succeeds, because the data was false in the first place.

These terms are not slang in popular usage. The rhyming pair formation – such as "cuts and guts" they categorize is almost non-existent in student slang and the "syndoches" (naming a course on the basis of a characteristic part, such as "loom" for weaving) are rare.

A simple observation of students' speech will show that they still use the clipped terms such as "econ," "bio," and "chem". Not very creative, but when students do use shaping pair formations or syndoches, they are usually more imaginative than the example just given.

One can come to several possible conclusions concerning the article: Eschholz and Ross either know nothing about slang, or they are just two hacks who deceitfully used information they knew was false just to publish an article, or they are so out of touch with their students that they do not know that their information is very misrepresentative of what students are really thinking.

Any way one looks at it, the article was spurious and an example of shoddy scholarship.

Both Paul Eschholz and Alfred Ross have been at the University for five years and they are going up for tenure next year. It has been expected that they would succeed. Reportedly, they are the darlings of the older tenured people in the English department, and their path has been a smooth one until now.

Are Professors Eschholz and Ross victims, or are they products of the "publish or perish" syndrome? I suspect the latter, but either way, by over-relying on the credo of "publish or perish" UVM is clearly not furthering understanding, it is obstructing understanding.

force I've never heard of anyone making a citizen's arrest. We suggest that if they witness a violation they report it to us and we will make a proper investigation.

Cynic: When is a person under arrest?

Smith: There is no arrest until the police officer says, "You are under arrest" or the subject is actually physically restrained in his freedom of movement.

Procedures

Cynic: What does the arresting officer do?

Carron: If you have evidence that a person is connected with a certain crime and you want to talk to them you can ask them to come down to the station. If they do not, you can get a warrant for their arrest. Before you can talk to them, you must read them the Miranda warning.

(1) You have a right to remain silent

(2) You have the right to have a lawyer present

(3) You have the right to have a free lawyer if indigent

(4) What you say will be used against you.

If the person says he's not guilty and he's not going anywhere, the officer gets the person's address. Then the State's Attorney issues a warrant.

Here's an example:

A police officer on Church Street sees a fist-fight. He tells them to break it up and they persist. He will immediately place either or both of them under arrest. He will call the station by radio and get a cruiser. They will be transported to the correctional center and an Officer's Complaint will be lodged generally charging them with disorderly conduct. Most generally he will make sure they are not armed, then he will ask them for identification at the correctional center.

On-sight violations don't need a warrant. Any other arrest requires a warrant signed by the State's Attorney and the judge.

The police officer fills out an affadavit stating probable cause for arrest. He presents it to the State's Attorney, who checks it out, and if he decides there is sufficient information for a case, he signs what is called "the State's Attorney's information." The "probable cause" part of the warrant is a summary of the case the State's Attorney would present in court. The body of the warrant consists of information supplied by the State's Attorney.

The State's Attorney petitions the judge, and the judge issues a warrant. The officer will either carry it with him, or, if the subject can't be immediately located, the warrant is put in the warrants pending file, where it may be served by any officer.

Cynic: Under what circumstances may a person be questioned by police without a Miranda warning?

Smith: A police officer can ask questions for investigative discovery, without being required to advise the person he is talking to of individual rights developed by the Supreme Court in Miranda vs Arizona. Custodial interrogation means that the questions are more than investigatory; the person being questioned is the focus of the interrogation and the defendant is effectively not free to go even though an arrest has not been made. The line between custodial and investigatory questioning is not clear. Custody can occur before arrest.

Carron: The person may be questioned up until the time that the line of questioning points to the fact that the person might be involved. Then he must be given the warnings.

Cynic: What is custody?

Smith: A person in custody is in the condition of not being able to leave. Here's an example of pre-custody investigation turning into custodial interrogation:

A robbery has occurred. The police have a vague general description of an automobile seen leaving the scene. Roadblocks are set up. At a roadblock a police officer who has a description of the supposed getaway car sees a car answering that description.

He asks a line of questions which will enable him to determine where the operator and occupants of the car have been recently, where coming from, where going to and for what purpose. At the same time he usually scans the contents of the car for any incriminating evidence. If the answers start to sound suspicious or are not believable, then he may ask the occupants to accompany him to his cruiser or a police station for further questioning. At that point, even though an arrest has not been made (because the police officer does not have sufficient probable cause for arrest) any further questions he may ask constitute custodial interrogation.

Carron: We ask the person to voluntarily come down for questioning. The person has the right to refuse. He may also leave at any time. The person that is in custody is not able to leave.

Cynic: What happens after a person has been arrested?

Carron: After arrest, the person is permitted a phone call to contact an attorney. He is arraigned in court forthwith. If court is not in session or there are other circumstances (inebriation, etc.) the subject may be either lodged in the correctional center, or released in the custody of a responsible person and given a citation to appear in court. If the person is lodged in the correctional center, our responsibility ends; the Department of Corrections takes over.

When a person is arraigned, the judge announces at the beginning of court that if there is anyone that does not understand any of the questions he will ask, to speak up at once. The judge will read the subject's name; the subject will come before the judge, and the judge will read the charges. If the charges are misdemeanors, the subject will usually be asked to enter a plea of either guilty, not guilty, or nolo contendere. If a felony is involved, the subject has 24 hours in which to enter a plea. If guilty, the judge will make a decision about a pre-sentence investigation; if not guilty is pled, the judge will make a decision for trial. If the subject pleads nolo, the judge will decide on the basis of the evidence present.

Smith: The order of events in arrest procedure run as follows: 1) Non custodial investigation; 2) custodial interrogation; 3) identification process; 4) procuration of evidence; 5) judicial proceeding - with continued detention until sentencing; 6) classification which determines where a person should be placed in the correctional system.

The nearest judicial officer will be contacted by the correctional facility for the purpose of setting bail. This is pre-arraignment. The conditions of pre-trial release are set forth in the Vermont Statutes, Section 7554 of Title 13, and the American Bar Association, Standards Relating to Pretrial Release. The judge determines the conditions of the defendant's pre-trial release according to these prescriptions. In some cases the amount of any cash bail required reflects the amount the judge intends to assess the defendant as a fine upon conviction. The objective is to insure the appearance of the defendant at any judicial proceeding concerning him.

"Murder In The Cathedral", Lane's Last Play

by Margo Howland

Professor Christopher Lane will finish his last term at the University of Vermont with the production of T. S. Eliot's Murder in the Cathedral. The play opened last night at the Royall Tyler Theatre and continues today, April 25. There will be no performance Friday, April 26, but it will continue Saturday, Sunday and Monday, the 27, 28, and 29 of April.

Professor Lane, a faculty member of the Department of Communication and Theatre of Ohio University for 26 years, came to UVM in 1969.

"Ed Feidner was one of my boys at Ohio and wanted to go to England; I came to fill in for him and I'm still here. I came for one year and stayed for five; I'm The Man Who Came To Dinner," quipped Lane.

In addition to his work at UVM, Professor Lane teaches for Ohio during the summer at the Montmoy Theatre on Cape Cod in Chatham, Massachusetts.

"This is our seventeenth season. We do eight plays in ten weeks. Since I've been here there have been several University of Vermont students who go down each summer with me. This year it's Jock MacDonald and Laurie Casey."

Murder in the Cathedral, by T. S. Eliot, tells of the temptation and murder of Thomas à Beckett, Archbishop of Canterbury in 1170. The time of the setting is from a few days before Christmas to four days after it. Beckett and Henry II had been boyhood chums, despite the fact that Beckett was 12 years older. Beckett rose rapidly under Henry's patronage, serving the King as a chancellor for eight years. This was the time of the Great Schism between Church and State, and when the Archbishopric at Canterbury was open, Henry appointed Beckett, assuming that Beckett would unite governmental power and Church power. But Beckett immediately sided with the Church.

In 1164 Henry made Beckett and the other bishops agree to a series of provisions called the Constitutions of Clarendon. Among one of the most controversial aspects of the provisions was the treatment of "criminous clerics." If a cleric had confessed to or been convicted of a crime, he would no longer be subject to Church courts alone, but could be arrested and tried as a civilian in secular courts. Beckett argued that no man should be tried twice for the same crime; he shortly afterwards repudiated his agreement with Henry.

While Beckett was in exile, the time came for the King's oldest son to be crowned, a formality to assure an uninterrupted succession. The Archbishop of York performed the ceremony in Beckett's absence; Beckett promptly excommunicated everyone that was involved.

The play opens at the time Beckett has been allowed to return. Henry, though mentioned, does not appear at all; though his fateful words "Will no-one rid me of this troublesome priest?" cast upon Beckett an ominous shadow of doom.

Charles Towers stars as Beckett. The double roles of the four Tempters and the Knights that murder Beckett are played by Paul Ugalde, Jock MacDonald, Craig Toth and Steven Kelly. Jon Bourne, Craig Purinton and Patrick Orr play the three priests.

There is a speaking chorus of seven women, representing the women of Canterbury. Lizbet Hanson directed the choreography for the chorus. Professor Lane has added a male singing chorus of monks, which sing four medieval chants, one a funeral chant for Beckett. James Chapman, of the UVM Music Department, has directed the men's choir of monks. Chapman is also the choir director of St. Paul's Cathedral.

William Schenk designed the set, including the Cathedral, and a 20-foot crucifix that shoots out over the stage.

"We've taken a few liberties with the story, costume-wise and set-wise," Lane remarked. "This happened in 1170. At that time Canterbury was probably Norman in architecture. We felt that most people would not recognize a Norman cathedral as a cathedral, and so we used a later Renaissance. Any liberties we take are in the name of dramatic expediency."

Professor Lane picked up a copy of the play. "We don't think the historical aspects are as important as the emotional, dramatic effects," he said, and began to read from Act III.

The quiet, grave voice, the dynamic works of Eliot were spellbinding. Professor Lane put down his book.

"I think you have to listen to this play. The language is beautiful. Of all the great poets he (Eliot) is the one that comes the closest to being both the greatest poet and the greatest playwright of the twentieth century."

For reservations call the Royall Tyler Theatre at ext. 2094. Tickets are $1.50 with UVM I.D., and $3.00 general admission.

Fleming Museum Presents Chamber Singers

The Fleming Museum is presenting an evening of music – the Williams College Chamber Singers, at 8 p.m. Saturday, April 27, in the Museum's Marble Court.

The program will consist of Renaissance Motets, Renaissance Vernacular Songs, a Renaissance Mass, contemporary Music, and English Madrigals of the Elizabethan Period.

This is the fifth season for the Williams College Chamber Singers, a select group of undergraduate voices from the Williams College Choral Society. The eighteen voice a cappella group will tour New England, giving recitals at ten museums – including the Wadsworth Atheneum in Hartford, Conn., the Busch-Reisinger Museum in Cambridge, Mass., the Worcester Art Museum, as well as here at the Fleming.

When Kenneth Roberts, director of choral programs at Williams College, founded the Chamber Singers in 1969, the liberal arts college in Williamstown, Mass. was all male, and so were its musical groups. Until Williams accepted its first freshman girls' class in 1971, the Chamber Singers performed with similar groups from girls' schools.

The Chamber Singers became a mixed chorus while it expanded for the 1971-72 season. A 30 voice group sang all the polyphonic sections of the Bach "St. John Passion" when the Choral Society performed the work in April 1972.

Last year the size of the group decreased as its activity increased. In addition to local recitals, a sixteen-voice group made a month-long European tour under Kenneth Roberts' direction. In January, 1973, the Chamber Singers were heard in Strasbourg, Basel, Lipchtenstein, Salzburg, Vienna, Innsbruck, Steyr, Heidelberg, Nurenberg, and Luxembourg. The tour included special command performances for royalty and government-sponsored appearances in conjunction with the diplomatic service.

The Current Chamber singers are planning a second European tour of Norway, Sweden and Spain for June 1974, also in conjunction with the State Department. They appear in concert each semester at the Tefft Rotunda at the Williams College Museum of Art.

The concert at the Fleming this Saturday is open to the public – admission by donation.

Curson A Success

by Ed Bernis

The Ted Curson concert at the Ira Allen Chapel on Sunday, April 14, was a complete artistic success. The rafters of the chapel still reverberate from the sounds of fine jazz.

Ted Curson played trumpet, flugel horn, and piccolo trumpet with great fire, intensity, and originality. Kenny Barron improvised fluid, sparkling lines on the piano. Herb Bushler played the most fluid original jazz improvisations I have ever heard on the bass guitar. Al Heath's driving, crackling, flowing drum work produced fantastically vivid colors in sound.

The groups played original jazz compositions written by Ted Curson, Herb Bushler, and Kenny Dorham. Herb Bushler composed an original during the break that was played immediately following intermission.

There were some technical difficulties with the sound system; however, the group managed to transcend these problems very well, and produced some fantastic sounds.

The musicians had great rapport with the audience. They were asked for an encore, and given a standing ovation. Afterward they expressed a desire to play here again.

UVM's Colburn And Wheeler To Give Recital

On April 30 at 4 p.m., Ira Allen Chapel will once again be the setting for the performances of two Senior Recitals given by Mr. Robert Colburn and Mr. Randolph Wheeler.

Mr. Colburn, a clarinet major originally from Montpelier, Vermont, will present a "Sonata for Clarinet and Piano" by Felix Mendelssohn as well as Carl von Weber's "Concerto for Clarinet in F minor." He will be accompanied on piano by Mrs. Terry Carpenter. Throughout his years at the University of Vermont, Mr. Colburn has participated in many UVM ensembles, including the Modern Jazz Ensemble, Concert Band and Orchestra.

Mr. Wheeler, a bass trombonist from Derby Line, Vermont, will perform a "Sonata" by Georg Philipp Telemann; a contemporary piece for trombone and tape, "Impromptu" by J. E. Brown; and a "Sonata for Bass Trombone and Piano" by Patrick McCarty. He will be accompanied on piano and harpsichord by Miss Cynthia Matthews. During his four years at the University, Mr. Wheeler has performed in various ensembles, among which may be listed the Modern Jazz ensemble, Concert Band, Orchestra, and Brass Ensemble.

Exhibit By Margaret Norcross

An exhibition of oil paintings by Margaret Norcross of Burlington opened April 16 at the Robert Hull Fleming Museum. Female figure studies, interior scenes, and small landscapes comprise the show in the Museum's front Gallery, together with plants from the Norcross home, plants which play a role in many of the paintings.

Ms. Norcross studied at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, Philadelphia, the Stella Tyler School of Fine Arts, Philadelphia, and the Seong Moy School, Provincetown, Mass. She has exhibited at the Vendo Nubes Gallery, Philadelphia, and the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, and has taught at UVM's evening division as well as the Fleming Museum's Children's Classes.

"Margaret Norcross: Paintings" will remain on view through May 5.

"How To Succeed In Business..." Opens At The Flynn Exhibition

The newly formed Lyric Theatre of Burlington is presenting Abe Burrows' and Frank Loesser's hilarious satire on the struggles of today's business executive, "How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying." The Pulitzer Prize musical will be performed from May 1–5 at the Flynn Theatre.

The show will begin on May 1 with a special opening night party with a gala champagne reception on stage with the cast after the performance. The curtain on opening night will be at 8:30. The opening night party is by special reservation only. Interested persons may contact Barb Wick for reservations at 862-5488. Tickets are $7.50.

The curtain on the remaining evenings will open at 8 p.m. Tickets are on reserve for $2, $3, and $4 and are available at the Flynn box office, at the door, or by calling 862-5121.

The Lyric Theatre is a community organization consisting of people from all walks of life who are interested in any aspect of theatre. Several of the performers are familiar names to UVM. Jeffery Aronson, a UVM employee, is playing the part of Finch, and Dayl Walther, a student, is Rosemary. Professor Thomas Geno of the Romance Language Department is J.B. Biggley. Two of the directors are UVM students. Jeffery Pratt, a music major, is the orchestra conductor, and Allyson Davis, also a music major, is the chorus and vocal director. Other leads in the show are Bob Saikavics as Frump, Cathy Gross as Smitty, Judy Meacham as Hedy LaRue, Craig Myers as Bratt, Bill Theim as Mr. Twimble and Judy Mosely as Miss Jones.

The show is being directed by Howard Delano and is for the benefit of Pine Ridge School.

Fleming Mus

by Mark Seralnick

If there is any interest in art at the University, there is a museum located right on campus, next to the Geology building. However, if you never heard of the Robert Hull Fleming Museum, I'm not surprised. The museum has received little publicity for its collection, exhibits, and money allocations. In a recent interview with Richard H. Janson, Director, and Margit Holsinger, Curator, I sought the problems the Fleming faces and why student interest in the museum has been low.

Clearly, the main reason the Fleming lacks popularity on campus is due to lack of publicity. Students rarely know when and what exhibits are being shown. During the interview, we all agreed that a better system of publicizing is needed for exhibits and also to highlight some of the better pieces in the museum. The museum contains quite a few works by well-known artists and owns some very novel pieces. For example, did you know Chief Sitting Bull's head dress is part of the permanent collection?

One idea that was discussed which would interest studio art majors is the possibility of letting art students display their works at the Fleming. Presently, only the Senior Art show gives art students space at the museum. Although the art students do have a gallery on second floor of Williams Science Hall, it would be more practical if all of the

Women In

If Jennifer Cover were to direct The Taming of the Shrew, the audience would not see Katherine as a conquered, incapable, submissive female; she would bring out Katherine's strength: her ability to demand and be demanded of by others.

As part of the Women's Forum, the Department of Communication and Theater presented a program called The Changing Role of Women in Literature. Led by Jennifer Cover, the program's purpose was to show that female characters in literature were not purely strong nor purely weak; it is the interpretation of these characters which determines their relative strengths and weaknesses.

The program consisted of a number of one-woman acts, each portraying a different female character who had strength in her own way. These presentations were followed by discussions. One of the more powerful of the student presentations was the performance of The Stronger, written by August Strindberg, by Lissa Charles. In this scene, she portrayed a married woman who meets a friend. Through their conversation she learns that the other woman is having an affair with her husband.

Her reactions as portrayed by Ms. Charles were typically female; she became angry, hostile, snide, and biting. "I hate you, I hate you!" she screamed to the silent mistress. But she did not weep; she attempted to keep her own self-dignity by proclaiming that she really owns her husband, not the mistress. The viewer certainly doesn't sympathize with this woman. But her strength lies in her ability in that particular scene to stay on top of things.

Ms. Charles' presentation was preceded by scenes from The Glass Menagerie and Pygmalion, by Mary Allard, and a scene from A Streetcar Named Desire, by Mary Ann Keith. Jennifer Cover concluded the program with a presentation of Robert Frost's "Home Burial" and a speech by Sojourner Truth. The program as a whole was presented vibrantly; the female interpretations and humanistic drama were impressive.

Fleming Museum Faces Many Problems

by Mark Seranick

If there is any interest in art at the University, there is a museum located right on campus, next to the Geology building. However, if you never heard of the Robert Hull Fleming Museum, I'm not surprised. The museum has received little publicity for its collection, exhibits, and money allocations. In a recent interview with Richard H. Jenson, Director, and Margit Holzinger, Curator, I sought the problems the Fleming faces and why student interest in the museum has been low.

Clearly, the main reason the Fleming lacks popularity on campus is due to lack of publicity. Students rarely know when and what exhibits are being shown. During the interview, we all agreed that a better system of publicizing is needed for exhibits and also to highlight some of the better pieces in the museum. The museum contains quite a few works by well-known artists and owns some very novel pieces. For example, did you know Chief Sitting Bull's head dress is part of the permanent collection?

One idea that was discussed which would interest studio art majors is the possibility of letting art students display their works at the Fleming. Presently, only the Senior Art show gives art students space at the museum. Although the art students do have a gallery on second floor of Williams Science Hall, it would be more practical if all of the exhibits were in one building. This could attract more art students to the Fleming and hopefully other students too.

Another suggestion this author made was that the Fleming needs some big contemporary pieces to create a more exciting environment. The Vermont '73 show had works of this nature but was only a temporary exhibit. If the museum's blue marble court was transformed into a colorful and appealing atmosphere, I'm sure student interest would increase.

An assorted variety of ideas were raised during the interview with some appealing to the director and curator. However, the second major problem facing the Fleming is lack of sufficient funds. The museum is understaffed and underfinanced. Due to the understaffed conditions, the staff cannot spend enough time on shows to make them more appealing. An exhibit can be improved aesthetically by placing cards next to works which give background information about the artist and the piece, i.e. how the artist was inspired to produce it or what technique he used in producing it and what he may have in common with another artist in the show.

The Fleming collection, dating back to 1873, is one of the oldest college-owned collections in the country. The storage space for the collection has been atrocious and has led to ruin and damage of works. Obviously, this means more money is needed for restoration and maintenance. Subsequently, this means that the staff cannot spend enough time to enhance the shows. Until the Fleming can afford a larger staff, the present one will keep on spending much of its time bringing the cataloging up to date.

Recently the museum has had to concentrate on cataloguing the collection and restoring damaged works. Cataloging encompasses finding out what is in the collection and researching relationships between artists. This makes more informative displays because visitors can understand relationships between different artists. Cataloging also aids the staff in putting together shows that tell a story.

The curator is also planning to catalogue the print collection whereby a visitor may visit and request a print that is not on exhibit. The print will be quickly taken out of its storage box and may be seen easily. This is planned for the near future.

The Fleming Museum should be a place where students and the public can come and enjoy. Presently, many ideas are floating around concerning solutions. The key factor will be money. Until the administration allocates more funds, the Fleming will probably continue on its present course. We should have a museum where a course in art history is not needed to appreciate the collection. You can appreciate the Fleming without an art history course, but UVM students are not terribly excited about the Primitive, American, or Oriental galleries. More exhibits like Vermont '73 and Living American Artists are needed and scheduled at times convenient for students. The role of the Fleming is more or less in the hands of the University. I believe student interest will only increase when they know and like what is there.

Summer Session To Hold Tryouts For Williams' Glass Menagerie

The UVM Summer Session will present a full production of Tennessee Williams' classic of the theatre, The Glass Menagerie from July 12 to 22. Tryouts for casting the four parts are being held Thursday, May 2 at 7:00 p.m. in Marsh Lounge in Billings Center.

The play is perhaps Williams' most popular play and brought the young playwright fame and something of fortune when it was done on Broadway in the 1940's, starring Laurette Taylor and Eddie Dowling. Since then it has been made into a film, and has been done on television twice (in the '60's with Shirley Booth and Hal Holbrook, and last January with Katherine Hepburn and Sam Waterston) and has become a staple in the American repetoire.

There are four parts to be cast: Amanda, mother to Tom and Laura, about 50 years old and determined to see her children "improve themselves;" Tom, an employee in a factory who would rather "go to the movies" and who is about 23 years old; Laura, his delicate and withdrawn sister who keeps the glass menagerie, about middle twenties, and James D. O'Connor, the gentlemen caller who doesn't know it until it is too late, about 23. The ages are given only as reference points and are not prerequisite to casting. Anyone at all is welcome to try out and all are encouraged to do so.

Also needed are set, costumes, props, and lights people with all the other people that are necessary to make a production work. These people are encouraged to come next Thursday as well, although they don't have to try out.

Rehearsals will begin in June and will be held in the evenings. The performances will take place in the Round Room of Billings Center, perhaps the most intimate theatre on campus.

For further information, please call 656-2085.

Album Review:

Saints & Sinners, Filled With Variety, Sparkles

by Doug Collette

SAINTS & SINNERS
JOHNNY WINTER
(Columbia KC 32715)

Evaluations of the artist as a person usually have no place in a record review, but Johnny Winter is worth an exception.

Anyone who can realize he's killing himself with heroin, commit himself to a doctor's care to come completely clean and then go about his business without preaching about the gruesome experience or its after effects has got to be a human being of enormous strength, courage, sensitivity, and honesty. Like every one of Johnny's LP's, from The Progressive Blues Experiment (recently released as Austin, Texas) through the early Columbia records and his collaboration with Rick Derringer, Saints & Sinners testifies to an unflagging belief in himself and his music. Such integrity is very rare and just as precious.

Johnny's comeback album, fittingly titled Still Alive and Well is a dusty, gritty work that upon its release unmistakably reestablished the powerful musicianship of the albino. Saints & Sinners is a mirror image of that basic lp; the accent here is on variety and the music never fails to sparkle through all its changes.

The Steve Paul stable is definitely the most resourceful corps of musicians I've heard since the Delaney and Bonnie clan came to town. Derringer is here as player and producer, as is Brother Edgar, Dan Hartman (from the latter's band) and Bobby Caldwell (from the Johnny Winter And days) plus assorted assistants who've lent their talent to make the record the shining example of cooperative creativity it is. That's not to minimize Johnny's own role in all this, 'cause you can bet that the Texas straightshooter had the final say of all of it.

Each side opener is solid, commercial rock and roll. I didn't much like "Stone Country" or "Rollin' Cross the Country" the first few times around, but now I love both without qualification. Sound single prospects both and wouldn't it be super to hear Johnny on AM radio?

With the most intricate arrangements on the record, Allan Toussaint's "Blinded by Love" and Van Morrison's "Feedback on Highway 101" are like nothing Johnny's ever attempted before and easily the most adventurous too. Neither sounds cluttered and the musicians utilize the spaciousness to flex their muscles on keyboards, horns, ARP strings and mounds of percussion through which Johnny's leads go slippin' and slidin'. "Blinded" crackles and pops, "Feedback" snaps and doubles back on its own rhythms and if you don't catch yourself moving to both of these, paralysis sounds like a very real possibility.

Johnny Winter is nothing if not wide, and, knowing he's not a very prolific composer himself, the abundance of material on the new album is culled from new sources. If Jagger listened to what Winter's doing with Stones material, the Englishman would be scared out of his makeup. "Stray Cat Blues" prowls sinuously and cacophonously, Johnny's voice purrs and spits and his guitar makes all the right moves. He doesn't worry about the "right way" to do the song, he just does it as he feels it deserves to be done. The instincts of such a savvy musician don't often go wrong and they certainly don't here.

Johnny's own contributions aren't low points by any means. "Hurtin' So Bad," in fact, might be the gem of the lp: with soft horn lines wafting over the basic arrangement, firming up only enough for precise punctuation, the cut has a pure, classic feel—Doug Sahm would be proud of this himself. "Bad Luck Situation" is no more than the repetition of a blues riff, but then the beauty of the blues has always been that of simplicity, hasn't it?

Yeah, and that's true about rock and roll too. Chuck Berry, Lieber and Stoller and Larry Williams have always known that, and so has Johnny Winter. As fluid as they are, hard-hitting bassist Randy Hobbe and drummer Richard Hughes shoot sparks that, ignited by Winter's white-hot guitar, make "Thirty days," "Riot in Cell Block No. 9," and "Boney Maroney" come bursting alive.

Of course, everything on Saints & Sinners is full of the joyous vitality that can only come from a man who loves to be alive. If you love being alive like I do, then chances are you love rock and roll too and if that's true, then we've all got a lot in common with Johnny Winter.

In this scene, she portrayed a married woman who meets a friend. Through their conversation she learns that the other woman is having an affair with her husband.

Her reactions as portrayed by Ms. Charles were typically female; she became angry, hostile, snide, and biting. "I hate you, I hate you!" she screamed to the silent mistress. But she did not weep; she attempted to keep her own self-dignity by proclaiming that she really owns her husband, not the mistress. The viewer certainly doesn't sympathize with this woman. But her strength lies in her ability in that particular scene to stay on top of things.

Ms. Charles' presentation was preceded by scenes from The Glass Menagerie and Pygmalion, by Mary Allard, and a scene from A Streetcar Named Desire, by Mary Ann Keith. Jennifer Cover concluded the program with a presentation of Robert Frost's "Home Burial" and a speech by Sojourner Truth. The program as a whole was presented vibrantly; the female interpretations and humanistic drama were impressive.

The literary program was followed by "Medusa," a surrealistic portrayal of the mythical Medusa making the transition into the modern world. Behind an undulating white sheet, the silhouette of Medusa regally swayed to the music of balloons, while her servants adorned her crown with long snakelike balloons.

To the viewer, these balloons did not always look exactly like snakes; for a while, I saw the legs of about ten dancing girls coming out from her head, bending and kicking, bodiless, up into the air in a dance of their own. Then the screen itself started undulating and the whole scene became rather phallic.

But finally, when all the balloons were attached, the silhouette was an imaginative but accurate portrayal of the mystical woman, with snakes darting out in every direction, their tongues flickering in and out as she moved her head.

But Medusa's snakes were then destroyed by Perseus-with- the -hot-plate -breasts. While her sisters attempts to comb her hair into a modern order, Medusa's expression remains confused, bewildered, but so very very wise.

There is a wonderful moment when Medusa holds her mirror to the other women's faces, and they all realize that they are sisters, regardless of their personal images, whether modern or ancient. This would justify the body shots that were flicked on the screen — pictures of Miss Americas, models, and all the other kinds of women who sell their American Beauty. I must admit that the photographs per se left me with a negative feeling — are those the real women of today? But put together with the total image of women as being the sisters together were effective.

Directed by Robin Lloyd and Doreen Kraft, the play itself was in an unfinished form, and a discussion followed in which the audience threw out their own suggestions. Without knowing details of the myth itself, the viewer would not have picked up on a lot of the symbols of the play, and much of the meaning that was revealed in the discussion following would have been missed.

SUMMER READING SUGGESTIONS

RUBY FRUIT JUNGLE, Rita Mae Brown (Daughters Pr, $3.00) One woman's blunt, provocative and poignant account of "coming out" (and how!). Funny, singular, OUTRAGEOUS!

ORLANDO, Virginia Woolf (HBJ, $2.95), a fanciful escapade transcending the shackles of time and sex. Orlando starts as a man in the Renaissance, and proceeds through changes emerging more or less as a portrait of Vita Sackville-West, a woman in the fragmented world of modern London.

VIRGINIA WOOLF, A BIOGRAPHY, Quentin Bell (HBJ 3.95) In spite of criticism that her nephew fails to capture the dynamics of V. Woolf's feminism, this biography stands as the best. A masterpiece of the intimate history of Bloomsbury and the host of marvelous characters who cavorted there.

FOUR GATED CITY, Doris Lessing (Bantam 1.25) the final volume in Lessing's Children of Violence series, this incredible work traces Martha Quest through post-War London, through the intricies of politics, sex, and madness. Ms. Lessing does not stop with the 60's or 70's, but goes into that future that is becoming more real & less like science fiction every day. Highly Recommended!

SHEEP LOOK UP, John Brunner (Ball, 1.65) fragments of a world gone mad (much like our own!) come together in a brilliant apocalyptic tour de force. A compelling approximation of what will happen soon, by the author of the Hugo award winning STAND ON ZANZIBAR.

WE, Yevgeny Zamyatin (Bantam 1.75) a long suppressed Russian masterpiece takes up where 1984 left off, examining the notion of the infinite revolution bred of eternal change & individual freedom. A blend of sci fi and moral fable whose anti hero loses his ID. Good Gracious!

MASTER AND MARGARITA, Mikail Bulgakov (Grove 1.95) another Russian classic long suppressed in the motherland, a brilliant, Swiftian satire on the early Bolshevik regime, employing the wit and wisdom of Pontius Pilate, JC, a human-sized black cat with a gourmet flair, and the Devil himself, all of whom tend to create pandemonium in sedate Moscow.

TRANSPARENT THINGS, Vladimir Nabokov (Fawcett 1.25) a diaphonous Nabokovian novella, full of the expected multi-lingual wizardry and magic. Hugh Person, take it away!

BILLIARDS AT HALF-PAST NINE, Heinrich Boll, (McGraw 2.95) escaping from the horrors of the Nazi destruction, his complicity and his mother's insanity, the strongly anti-war and anti-totalitarian hero leads a rigoursuely scheduled life, interrupted by an old schoolmate and former Nazi. The name of the game is billiards.

THE MARRIAGE FEAST, Par Lagerkvist (H&W 2.75) a collection of stories by the author of THE DWARF and BARABBAS reveal Lagerkvist's dual vision of the world of good and evil.

OBLOMOV, Goncharov (Dutton 2.25) the titular hero of this masterpiece has been called the Russian Hamlet, a tragic figure incapable of any movement or decision, symbolizes what only can be described as Oblovmovism. A marvelous bed-time story.

COSMOS, Witold Gombrowicz (Grove 2.95) set in a surreal provincial Poland, a seedy, pathetic if witty student narrates a kind of detective story that seeks "reality" somewhere in the invisible swirling storms that possess the mind. This is not a Polish joke. Or is it?

CROCK OF GOLD, James Stephens (Collier 1.25) a fantastical Irish fairy tale, the gold of the leprecans of Gard na Cloca is stolen, Pan emerges, children are kidnapped, and a philosopher goes on a quest to seek the help of the god Angus Og. One of Freda's distant cousins.

THE FAN MAN, Wm Kotzwinkle (Avon 2.45) "Horse Badorties waking up again. Man, what planet am I on. I seem to be contained in some weird primeval hideous grease... Back in NYC again, coming out of the subway with swamp mud in my shoes and pussy willow up my cunt tag..." etc.

ANOTHER ROAD SIDE ATTRACTION, Tom Robbins (Ball. 1.50) a most improbable kidnapping amid a world of scientists, think-tanks, cosmic rays and solar energy, with the sentimentality of Breughjan, compassion of Fielding, elegance & precision that recall Nabokov & Borges.

SUNLIGHT DIALOGUES, John Gardener (Ball, 1.95) a "biggy" with all the heavy themes that will prove fertile territory for future dissertations, as well as being one of the most clever, witty, well written novels current on the American literary scene. Basically the Sunlight Man returns to his home town, no longer a lawyer, but a prophet, and does battle, verbal and martial with the law. Entropy wins. So does Alfred North Whitehead.

SAVE ME THE WALTZ, Zelda Fitzgerald (NAL 1.25) is Zelda's fictionalized account of her life with Scott, written when she was a patient in a mental hospital. A literary curio, more than a commentary on TENDER IS THE NIGHT, a portrait of the Jazz Age and a relationship both beautiful and damned.

THE MOVIEGOER, Walker Percy (FS&G 2.25) From the citation for winning the National Book Award: "...an intervention rather than a statement of mortality, and the inevitability of their condition, a truthful novel with seeds of recognition and seasons of meanings for every—or nearly every—American."

Andrews Supports Greeks:

Fraternities Provide Sense Of Community

by Margo Howland

University of Vermont President Dr. Edward Andrews cited an increasing role for fraternities and sororities as "providing a sense of community" on the campus. He also had a few words of advice. In a recent Cynic interview, Dr. Andrews suggested that the University was now so large that "many of the students have difficulty finding a sense of community."

"They're living in large dormitory complexes, and they're in big classes. I think fraternities and sororities do provide — and should provide — a sense of community for those students who live in them. The student should be able to develop a sense of community — to live together, work together, maybe try to have classes together — and socialize, have fun together."

Regarding the "social" aspects of fraternities, he continued:

"Sure, there is a social element with the fraternities, but... there are social activities in the dorms; there are social activites in the Living/Learning Center."

Dr. Andrews was at UVM his freshman year, when he joined Phi Delta Theta. This was during wartime, and when he transferred to Middlebury in the Navy B-12 program the following year, "the war had disrupted things so badly that the fraternities were inactive at Middlebury."

Dr. Andrews dismissed the possibility of "strained relations" between fraternity faculty members and students as part of a problem in scheduling. It had been suggested that many faculty members who joined fraternities in college, did not appear to want to continue their relationships with their houses. Dr. Andrews commented:

"If there was a strained relationship between the fraternities and faculty, I'm not aware of it. But if faculty members who were members of fraternities and sororities are not going to the houses very often, this might not be the result of any animosity or strained relationship. It's just that the faculty are so busy. They have families, and if they're teaching a fairly heavy load and doing research they're probably working two or three nights a week." He cited several instances in which he had had to decline invitations from fraternities and sororities because of a full schedule, or because some crisis or some problem in Montpelier popped up at the last minute.

"I've been to fraternities and sororities maybe four or five times a year and that's not a very good batting average," he admitted. Dr. Andrews feels that fraternities and sororities should not get discouraged, but keep on trying, when he or other faculty administration officials continue to decline invitations.

Greeks comprise less than 10 per cent of the UVM student body; Dr. Andrews was asked to comment.

"I really think the fraternities and sororities are going to have to get out and push; and I think to some extent they need to make a deliberate effort to change their image. You know, it wasn't too many years ago when they had rather restrictive rules on membership. I think there's still some what of a holdover in the minds of some students and maybe even the minds of some faculty. Those old images have to be corrected. I think also if they were to develop some kind of real effort for informal academic programs."

Dr. Andrews elaborated further:

"For example, if a sorority were to invite in a faculty member (say, every other Tuesday night) to conduct a very informal seminar on some topic of current interest. Make an effort to open your doors," he urged.

Dr. Andrews disagreed with the "elitist" label of the Greek system:

"I think a lot of people have the view that fraternities and sororities are strictly an elitist, snob social sort of thing, and I really don't think that's true. And I think they have to make a deliberate effort to change that image."

Dr. Andrews pooh-poohed the notion that there were some faculty or administrators afraid to openly identify with their old fraternities lest they be accused of favoritism by some other group.

"If a member of the administration is afraid to express his views on fraternities, that's silly! Whether he's for them, against them, or neutral, it may be that there are some members of the administration that have views of fraternities and sororities as they were 25 years ago; in other words, their views may be somewhat out of date, and someone ought to make an effort to correct those views."

Dr. Andrews sees no sign of the "social intellectual split" between Greeks and academia. "I don't see what the difference is in a group of people in a fraternity on College Street and ten people lying together in an apartment house, or in Converse Hall." He mentioned that the University used to utilize old houses as residence halls. "The only difference is that the University assigned the students in the houses at random, whereas in a fraternity or sorority there's some selectivity. Just because there's selectivity, I don't think that necessarily means that there's snobbism, elitism, and so on."

Dr. Andrews suggested that fraternities and sororities might take on some special project they could be identified with (the way ATO is identified with UVM Rescue) that would benefit the entire university. Giving a vote of confidence to the Greek system, Dr. Andrews concluded:

"I support the Greek system, I believe in it, and like everything else on our campus I'm sure there are imperfections in it. But that's no reason to destroy it.... I think that it is one way that our students can find a sense of community — where they can live and work and study and socialize together. I see them being here forever, and I also think that they will continue to receive criticisms and respond in whatever way is appropriate."

Winooski Rescue Boat, The Biggest Splash Of All

by Margo Howland

The Winooski River was deep and rapid with the meltings of the last spring snow last Saturday. Some seventy-five rafts were on deck for the UVM Outing Club's annual Winooski River Raft Race. UVM Rescue was there, to haul people off the infamous railroad trestle halfway down the river.

The Waterbury Fire Department was supposed to provide a Rescue boat; they have for the past two years. This year, however, the all-volunteer boat crew informed UVM Rescue that they all had to work. The UVM Rescue Squad acquired a boat with a 5½ horsepower engine and an experienced crew.

After practicing on Friday, the crew decided they wouldn't be able to get anyone on board; their main function was to get people off the trestle and tow them to shore with life-rings. In addition to the Rescue boat crew, there was another crew in wet-suits to assist with the towing. They were situated on a large rock nearby.

Everything was going smoothly, when a kayak came floating by, with its collar still on and an empty lifejacket alongside it. Sensing trouble, wet-suit Chuck Bergen dove into the water. Just as Alan King was turning the boat around to check out the kyak, Bergen decided to join them. The two Rescue men in the boat leaned the other way to counterbalance the added weight, and the boat flipped over, spilling its occupants into the river.

Rescue crewmen King and Roger Eaton were burdened with heavy bunker coats, though lifejackets kept them afloat. King managed to reach shore, but Eaton got his leg caught in the buoy rope line. Chuck Bergen stayed with the boat and untangled him, and they finally reached shore. Eaton suffered from exposure, but all three have recovered.

The boat was retrieved some four miles downstream, undamaged by the mishap. It has since been returned to its owner. The Rescue radio had some water damage and is currently under repair.

There were still people piling up on the trestle, so after the Rescue boat was put out of commission the Waterbury boat was called on an emergency basis. The State Police called the race off at 1:30; technically, no more rafts were allowed to start and no more would be timed after 1:30.

News Analysis:

Trustees Take No Action On Underpass

by Peter MacAusland

Last Friday, the Board of Trustees Buildings and Grounds committee heard lengthy discussion concerning the underpass proposal, both pro and con, yet no action for re-evaluation was taken. The underpass is nearing the final planning stage, but a delay of its construction is essential in order to re-evaluate the problem and proposed solutions.

The problem is more than just an interaction of cars and people. The interaction, consisting of over 20,000 cars and 15,000 student crossings, varies greatly throughout the day. The capacity of Main Street, the capacity of the pedestrian crosswalks, the coordination and timing of the lights and the utilization of the traffic lights all must be taken into account in defining the problem. The maximum capacity of Main Street is 43,500 cars* during the twelve hour period from 7:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. This is without interruption of pedestrians. During the same time period, the maximum capacity of the pedestrian crosswalks is 129,600 student crossings* without interruption from vehicular traffic. These two maximum capacity figures represent theoretical extremes. The utilization of the lights by students is minimal for several reasons.

The timing of the lights is constant throughout the day. The lights are not synchronized to the peak volumes of both student and vehicular traffic. Several times during the day, the peak volume of cars and the peak volume of student crossings occur simultaneously. Yet planners have not even considered altering the peak volumes to minimize the problem.

The University has relied on several arguments to justify the underpass. A film was made at the pedestrian crossings last fall to illustrate the "problem." The film was actually a propaganda device for the underpass, rather than an illustration of the problem. The filmmakers portrayed random students crossing between the lights and crossing at the lights "on the green." The students were pictured as the culprits, and although this may be the case in many occurrences, the film did not even mention that an inefficient timing of the lights could be the cause. The film includes questioning drivers, yet the questions interjected the idea that the underpass was the solution. The film excluded any notion of improving the existing on-grade crossings.

The University also depended upon a stipulation, served by the District Environmental Commission, to the land use permit of the Living/Learning Center. The stipulation stated that the opening of the L/L Center would be conditional upon construction of an underpass. The stipulation was established April 17, 1972. At this time, cars were backed up to the Redstone crossing from the East Avenue — Main Street intersection. A definite problem of pedestrians crossing existed during rush hour. Yet the jughandle relieved the traffic congestion considerably by the existing pedestrian crossings. The stipulation requires that the underpass be built by June 1974. If this requirement is not met, the land use permit to the L/L Center may be revoked. Yet this revocation is most unlikely. The fault is that the stipulation requiring the tunnel was created before any other solutions were put into experimentation.

A re-evaluation of the underpass proposal and a delay in its construction is necessary to facilitate the experimentation of alternate solutions on site. Although many years of research have been spent on this pedestrian crossing problem, less expensive alternate solutions with flexibility ought to be implemented to find out if the underpass really is the only solution.

State Solons Dismayed By Recent Session

by Kathy Shaunt

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group invited several representatives and senators from the Vermont State Legislature to speak in retrospect about the recent legislative session.

The gathering, which was held in Billings on Tuesday evening, April 23, featured a panel discussion by legislators, Sorrell, Smith, Burns, Daniels, Snelling, and Kunin. Generally the discussions were reflective and only a few specific bills were mentioned.

Senator Smith from Chittenden County did speak about VPIRG's proposed "Lifeline" bill which was defeated. The bill deals with electricity rates and is geared toward helping low income consumers. Thus, the main objections came from the business community who ultimately will pay more for their electricity under the "Lifeline" plan.

Senator Smith illuminated the major stumbling block, the unequal burden which would be placed on different segments of the community, if "Lifeline" were to be passed. He did acknowledge the "Lifeline" bill as a conceivable state function, a welfare burden which very possibly will have to be assumed by Vermont.

There was a commonly held feeling among representatives that the legislative session had been "one of the most unproductive ones," in past years. Representative Snelling cited "disappointment" as one of the key words to describe the past session. He spoke about the "complexization of society" as one of the reasons for the prevalent sense of frustration beyond the control of legislators and citizens. The energy crisis had spillover effects on problems such as inflation, and the burdens of increased taxation.

Ms. Kunin spoke about the "housekeeping necessities just to keep the wheels of government moving." This year the legislature was swamped with over 800 bills. It took valuable time to weed out the many bad bills from those which had even vague potential of being passed. Thus, the legislature was bogged down by relatively insignificant issues.

However, as Ms. Kunin continued her discussion it became clear that the trivial matters which burdened the legislature were not the only considerations which hampered its success this year.

She made several astute observations about the trend of changing responsibilities at the federal state, and local levels of government. The menace of national issues, such as the energy crisis which loom over state and local difficulties, is one which will have to be dealt with increasingly in future years. The shift of decision-making responsibilities from the national level to the state level is undeniably an awesome one. Since many state legislatures are run by part time non-professional citizens, these governing bodies are suffering from lack of expertise in many fields.

Furthermore, the public takes very little interest in what happens on the state and local levels, as Ms. Kunin noted was evident by the sparse attendance at the evening's meeting. Thus, a vacuum is created which is only partially filled by lobbying groups such as VPIRG. Ms. Kunin encouraged VPIRG to continue to activate public opinion.

S.A. Doles Dollars To Student Clubs

by Rick Dana

Absentees seemed to outnumber those people present, the room was hot, and not many people were paying attention as another S.A. meeting got underway on Tuesday night.

After Chairperson Steve Rollins called the roll, President Peter MacAusland related his presentation to the Board of Trustees Building Committee regarding the proposed pedestrian tunnel. MacAusland indicated that the trustees were attentive, but unwilling to commit themselves to any stand at this late date. MacAusland stated that he had collected over 1700 signatures on his petition calling for a reevaluation of the tunnel and has requested help in his research from anyone who will be in the Burlington area this summer.

The agenda moved on to the approval of MacAusland's choices to work on his cabinet. James Breece was appointed as Secretary of Communications; Chris Milaneni as Secretary of Elections; Patrick Black as Secretary of Student Activities; and Donna Vershay as S.A. Treasurer. The only objections came from Dick Cassidy, Town Senator, regarding Chris Milaneni's performance as the current Secretary of Elections. Cassidy brought up the issue of the I.D. validations and the payment of the voting clerks. Milaneni was not present to defend himself, but defense from MacAusland and several senators was strong enough to bring the discussion to an end, and a vote of approval, quickly.

In New Business, Alan King, Senator from Fiji, withdrew his motion for S. 79. This would have required a three-fourth's majority of the Senate to override the decisions of the Finance Committee. Overriding a decision is currently done by a simple majority vote. There were no objections to the withdrawal.

Approval was given to S. 80, sponsored by Cathey Chamberlain of Wing, which allocates $100 for supplies to the Albatross course evaluation project.

There was only brief discussion regarding S. 81, consideration of recognizing the UVM branch of the Vermont Student Lobby. The bill was passed.

However, the tempers were hot when the meeting moved on to budget requests. First up was the Outing Club. Some confusion, and much discussion was generated over the club's policy regarding the use of equipment. This was straightened out by club president, Frank Gibney, only to be confronted by the revelation by S.A. Treasurer Steve DeCesznak that the club's record books were very much out of order. The Senate felt that there was no choice but to put the allocation into escrow until the books can be straightened out.

The L'Amicale Francaise (French Club) ran into some rough going over the funding of movies and plays. Some senators did not understand why the French Department was not helping to fund some of the activities. The first vote resulted in a tie, which then went to a division of the House. The French Club reduced their request by $100 and the resolution was passed.

The Art Club was up next and discussion centered on who is presently and who should be running a current student art show. Their budget was passed.

Wynn Gold from Student Photo Service then presented his club's position in regard to the purchase of several new cameras. His plea for an extra $700 was soundly defeated.

The discussion then moved on to those groups that have no objections to their present allocation levels. These were the Vermont Cynic, WRUV, the Folkdance Club and UVM Rescue. Cynic editor Barbara Frankel answered questions regarding honorariums. She disclosed that the Editorial Board had that evening cut the honorariums given to editors in half. WRUV Station Manager Tim Lewis told the Senate just where the station and the Senate stood on WRUV's move and merger.

The meeting broke up at approximately 10:30 with the final note on the total budget to come at next week's meeting.

The Bar Review: A Place To Put Everything Aside

You have to put everything aside sometimes. You have to forget Billings and Bailey. You have to forget Den dinners of onion on hard roll seasoned with roast beef. Just to maintain your sanity, you must put all the daily Camp Catamount nonsense behind you so that you'll be nostalgic about it when the Alumni Office declares open season on you. For a couple of hours, the whole day-in, day-out routine has got to go on a side burner at a slow flame.

Bars don't always seem to be the place. When you want to chuck it all, most bars around here are mere extensions of a Day in the Den, filled with reminders of daily responsibilities and matters better discussed in Lafayette or Votey. You look into her eyes and you see a syllabus.

Restaurants are usually equally bad. You drop twenty bucks on a dinner for two and you get a meal you probably could have cooked yourself in more comfortable surroundings without being force-fed.

If you enjoy a tete-a-tete at Big Burger, don't care that a difference exists between MD 20/20 and Chateau Lafite-Rothschild besides price, or believe that you buy clothes in a bistro, stop reading. Move directly to Essex Junction.

Should you escape falling into these categories, try the following steps:

1. Save $25-40.
2. Make up your mind to try something new.
3. Call ahead for dinner reservations.
4. Drive to the Cafe Shelburne.

You walk into this place and you instantly forget the whole shtick. "No more pencils, no more books, no more teacher's dirty looks!" This place is what being a grown-up is about. Words like "Hammer," "sleaze," and "pit" don't exist here. This place is civilized.

Chances are you won't understand the menu (unless you've taken French 279 – "Advanced Menu Reading"). We still don't. Worry not––it will be explained to you.

A caasis is a fine pre-dinner drink. For appetizers, snails, mussels, or marinated mushrooms are superb choices. For less daring people, there is always onion soup. (TBR is avoiding the proper French names for this stuff; we still believe in the myth of the intermediate proficiency in a foreign language.)

For a main course, the various steaks are great with their different sauces. You can have steak anytime––try something different. Our favorite entree is the fishermen's brochette– shrimp and scallops on a skewer. The dessert menu (if you get that far) is sufficiently varied, but order the apple tart if available. Espresso or something called "French coffee" will finish the whole thing off nicely.

The place is expensive, for sure. However, it is a great, unhurried meal presented with great service in a beautiful atmosphere. Ideally, a restaurant is not only a convenience but a place to put the day behind you for a couple of hours. The Cafe Shelburne will do its job so well that you may not want to leave.

The Cafe is also serving great lunches of soups, salads, and crepes. Now that the sun seems returned, the Cafe Shelburne's patio will be used again for out- doors service.

But, try dinner there.

lacrosse. In general, it is a matter of developing offensive consistency that will further improve the team's play.

Chaplain Odie and I discussed in great detail many factors of UVM sports, too many to be detailed in this short space. He generally expresses a great concern for the student point of view as the many teams and clubs hope to build up their programs. But in essence, the one point to emphasize is that for a club squad, the factor of varsity status only means as a factor of recognition, above and beyond social and athletic aspects. Money has become the end-all in sport even here at UVM, but in general, the costs are a minor consideration when compared to the help varsity recognition serves a club in developing the competitive edge. It is this factor that in the end would help develop not only a competitive team but perhaps a winning team. As for my contradiction on this matter, the Chaplain seems to have straightened out that matter. His argument as explained here is a very important factor, and is one that I overlooked. I stand corrected on that point.

Greek Girls

Six girls from the University of Vermont recently attended the Northeast Panhellenic–Interfraternity L.O.G.I.C. Conference, held April 6-8 at the University of Massachusetts. The conference consisted of a series of workshops and discussions interspersed with business sessions and social activities. The most valuable workshop was a leadership training course led by Dr. Kenneth Blanchard, professor at U.Mass. Other workshops dealt with various problems faced by the Greek system and included such topics as improving member retention, how to deal with anti-Greek sentiments, rush improvement and co-op buying. All those who attended benefited greatly and came back to U.V.M. with many ideas to share. At the business meeting U.V.M.'s Becky Pardee was elected President of the Northeast Panhellenic Council. Those attending from the U.V.M. Panhellenic Council Exec. were Roxanne Kellner, Public Relations, Connie Keogh, Secretary, Becky Pardee, President, Kendree Reiley, 1st Vice President and Debbie Ryan, treasurer. Also attending was Sue Hovanessian, 2nd Vice President of Kappa Alpha Theta.

Mrs. Szabo Talks About Gymnastics And Swim

by Barbie Frankel

Holly Szabo, Women's Gymnastic Team coach, is optimistic about the future of her team. The team, which has been in competition for four and a half years, won the Collegiate State Championship in Vermont and the Tri-State (Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont) Championship this year.

"Skillwise, we are more advanced than other colleges in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont," explained Szabo. "We aren't embarrassed when competing against the big schools either." In the eastern regionals, in which they participated against the top schools, UVM placed 15 out of 21 schools.

The number of girls on the team varies from five to ten each year. According to Coach Szabo, the girls practice daily for two hours. "They have to be really dedicated -- they sure do work hard," she commented. This year's star, freshman Sue Supovitz, from Somerville, N.J., began practicing when she was in seventh grade. Supovitz is, in the words of her coach, "an excellent all-around player, who does specialize in the balance beam." As there are a number of underclassmen on the team, Szabo is looking forward to another good year. She has also been attempting to recruit talent throughout the state. Next year, she hopes to compete against schools with better gymnastic teams because, "If you win all the time, there's no challenge."

Holly Szabo feels the men's gym team should definitely be given varsity status. "They deserve the recognition. Those guys have worked as a team, and worked hard, for a long time," she stated.

In addition to her gymnast duties, Szabo is coach of the Catalina Club, which recently gave its annual synchronized swim show. She admitted that this year was difficult for the Catalina Club because of the number of freshmen on the team and because of the four-day week and subsequent lengthened classes which frequently interfered with practice schedules.

Holly Szabo feels women sports have grown in her five years at UVM. "We've got good coaches, good kids who are interested, good programs and mostly, good finances," she commented. She feels that UVM is fair in its treatment of women's sports. "The men have a larger budget, but they also have a larger, more established program. There are a lot of problems involved in competing on such a large-scale basis. I don't know if we'd want to be in that league," she stated.

Holly Szabo has taught at UVM for five years. She did her undergraduate work at S.U.N.Y. at Cortland, taught elementary physical education and junior high school physical education in Rochester, N.Y. and later received her master's degree at Southern Illinois University in Carbondale, Illinois.

Whittier Presents PR For UVM

by Scott Cahoon

Dick Whittier is in the good news business. He is Sports Information Director (SID) for UVM, and in sports there is always something good to say. Even if the basketball team loses by 40 points, an SID can always say something about the fine performance turned in by the team's best player. No matter what happens, there is always a way to emphasize the good and de-emphasize the bad aspects of every event.

It's perfectly legitimate, too, because that's what the public wants to read. "Sports is a very appealing thing," says Whittier. "You pick up a newspaper and 75 percent of it is very depressing." But there's always good news on the sports page, unless you had $5000 riding on UVM in the NIHT.

Dick graduated from UVM in 1965 and went to work for the Lexington (Mass.) Minuteman. While he was a student here he played baseball and basketball and helped out the SID. After two years at the Minuteman he received an invitation from Larry Van Benthuysen, Director of Public Relations, to take the vacant SID job. He accepted, and has now been here for five years.

In his own words, Whittier's job is to "publish as much information as possible about sports at UVM." He does a good job, too. Every year he publishes brochures on the football, hockey, basketball and ski teams. These handy little guides give the player's personal stats, last year's team record, this year's schedule, UVM personal and team records; they are, in fact, veritable gold mines of information.

That's not all. When UVM teams are on the road, he sends stats, pictures and the record of the team to the opposing school to be printed in their scorecards. He also sends pictures and news releases (which he writes himself) to the local newspapers. When he can, he travels with the team to the game.

For home games, there is even more to be done. He sends news releases to all the major Vermont newspapers. He's responsible for seeing that the scorecards are printed. At the game, he records statistics with the help of three students (Joe Choquette, Fred Lagerr and Bill Brouseau). Afterwards, they telephone the story of the game to newspapers, radio and TV stations around Vermont and in the hometowns of the individual players.

Whittier also calls AP and UPI with the story, and in addition writes an account of the game for the Boston Globe. Along with all his other duties, he is charged with helping out and entertaining visiting reporters.

Although much of his time is taken up with UVM's so-called "major" sports -- hockey, football, basketball and skiing -- he also helps as much as he can with the others. "Hopefully we'll soon find the finances to make more major sports. Hopefully this will include the restoration of baseball (revived this year on a club basis) and a higher status for lacrosse, gymnastics and wrestling."

UVM also plans to expand Patrick Gymnasium and to refurbish the field house, beginning with new seats at the hockey rink to give fans along the sides a better viewing angle. All this takes money, a commodity which is in short supply at UVM.

"We're in a financial pinch, as far as men's sports go," says Whittier. Additionally, federal regulations are requiring that women's sports be funded on a par with men's sports. This is the subject of an article he has written for the Alumni magazine. "Women's sports will never be on the same level as men's sports, financially. It'll never happen," he says. "They won't have a travelling budget except, perhaps, for tournaments."

The point is that UVM sports needs money, and alumni are a prime source for this. That's where Dick Whittier comes in, although he doesn't see a direct relationship. As he said, though, UVM is most visible to its alumni through its sports. The greater the visibility and the better the news, the more interest will be generated among the alumni. This hopefully increases the chances that they'll feel a generous impulse toward their alma mater.

The publicity coup of which Whittier is most proud is his successful effort of getting UVM hockey star Willie MacKinnon's picture on the cover of the NCAA Hockey Guide. Two years ago he and Coach Jim Cross agreed that it would be a fine idea to have a Vermont player on the association's rule book. He wrote letters to four influential NCAA officials, including the editor of the Hockey Guide, and as a result of his efforts, MacKinnon became the first Vermont athlete ever on the cover.

Whittier has other duties besides being a publicist of UVM sports. He helps publicize activities of ROTC and the Inter-Fraternity Council. He is the soccer publicist for the Yankee Conference, and is secretary of the Athletic Hall of Fame Committee and of the Football Boosters Club, and also Vice-President of the Delta Psi corporation.

He describes the favorite part of his job as "working with the athletes, and getting to know the different personalities. You get diversified personalities with different sports. They're a great bunch of guys, all very intelligent."

SCHWARTZ ON SPORTS

As the school year comes to a close and as this reporter gets set to return to New York City for the summer, some closing remarks on UVM sports seem in order. I relate most of all to the impressions I have received from the many coaches and administrators I have had the pleasant fortune to interview.

One can downgrade policy, and I feel very strongly that perhaps some priorities are wrong. But I can now say these things and realize that coaches work year round and even higher administrators do consider the whole scene at UVM. Students may feel downgraded by the hockey ticket policy but it is very easy to see the other side. After all, only three or four games are sellouts and tickets are available for the others. The Athletic Council and the Athletic Director, among others, consider various policy alternatives and go into very deep planning of all the issues involved.

I still hope to gripe and feel very strongly about some policies which hurt students. For instance, a general impression that I got from my recent interview with Dennis Lambert was a strain which he really had in saying the students come first. In the back of his mind I could feel his obvious support for other groups. He more or less gave the impression that the final decision ultimately rests with President Andrews. But the basic thing I have learned and that all students must consider is that these people are qualified individuals who carefully plan the policies they decide on. They do not make decisions out of ignorance and really do consider students as part of the athletic community. Unless you get some personal contact with them, this point may not seem like the reality of the situation.

Another topic that I must comment on concerns last week's article on the club situation at UVM. In that article I seemed to contradict myself in comparing winning and the justification of becoming a varsity sport. I also seemed to pit one club against another in a biased manner. Chaplain Robert "Odie" Odierna, the Lacrosse Coach, talked at length with me about the club scene at UVM. I would still like to maintain the opinion of the fact that the Administration will be very hard to persuade and that the likelihood of varsity status is rather remote, at best. But Chaplain Odie presented some interesting thoughts.

He sees one basic asset from gaining varsity status. It is not a matter of financial support but a matter of Administration recognition of the program's efforts. Just having varsity status eases the efforts of scheduling, attracting players, and attaining referees. He also points out that the club has laid down the initial investments of uniforms and equipment and that money is now needed just to cover traveling costs and other expenses. He believes the program has achieved stability through its first year and has attracted a considerable number of players. Winning need not be emphasized and the team has shown the ability to play well. This ease pertains not only to Lacrosse but to all club squads.

Although the Lacrosse Club has not won yet the scores indicate their capabilities. A loss by 13-1 or 14-2 which has happened is not an overall indication of the play. The coach referred to the usual lacrosse walloping as being 38-3 which has occurred on numerous occasions. He also points out that generally a winning team will get 10-15 goals a game. In a game such as Castleton, the coach admits the team was outclassed, but that after the opponent scored four quick goals in the first two minutes the team played excellent those who give time to the college and can participate and see the University in action in this manner. It is a way for people such as trustees to become involved. Mr. Lambert expresses the view that this section is not excessive and if the numbers can be held down he will give the other seats to students. Jill presented one anecdote in which he approached some people to let them sit down because a State Legislator didn't show up. This person happened to be a person involved with the functioning of Boston Garden in Boston Mass. In essence, if seats are available in this section, they will not remain empty, but will be given to students and other people at a game.

Finally, with reference to the club situation Lambert points to the Blue Ribbon Committee decision to recognize gymnastics and says that the ultimate decision rests with the President. He again points to meeting student needs but also realizes that budget money is tight, the different emphasis of club versus varsity sports must be considered, and the fact that if a varsity sport is dropped (like baseball) it does not mean that another sport must quickly replace it. As with all other areas of sports today, expenses and budgets become the primary consideration.

Once again, another member of the sports structure at UVM has expressed considerations that are quite important as we judge the importance of sports on campus. If anything, the basic point to realize is that money becomes the ultimate consideration no matter how the situation is analyzed.

the Larries, the Catamounts themselves only managed two hits. But, both these hits, a single by Edgerton in the second inning and a single by John Fitzpatrick in the sixth inning, were converted into runs.

Simmel is leading all UVM hitters with a .385 batting average. Close behind are Ray Ruete (.333), Tom "Ruff" MacNamara (.308), and Jim Oakman (.300).

Women's Softball Wins

The UVM Women's Softball team, coached by Miss Sally Guerette, successfully opened its season with an 18 to 7 victory over Johnson on Monday, at Johnson. The team, working together, had 18 hits with their 18 runs, while holding Johnson to only 8 hits. Offensively, UVM was led by Howie Horigan who was 4 for 5, Barb Pulling who was 3 for 6, 2 of doubles and 1 single), and Meg Phillips, also 3 for 6. The team was led defensively by winning pitcher Barb Pulling, relief from Louise Piche, and all-round team effort!

A New Sport: Orienteering

by Kathy Stiasni

Have you ever tried orienteering or does the term strike you as an unfamiliar one? Maybe it's an activity you haven't experienced yet. Orienteering is a sport which involves navigating cross-country over unfamiliar terrain with a map and compass. Its object lies in finding specified control markers which are usually set up on natural land formations such as ridges, spurs or cliffs. The orienteer finds himself challenged both physically and mentally because he must be in good shape as well as proficient in compass and map reading skills.

This spring semester, orienteering is being offered by the ROTC department as an accredited course in physical education. Orienteering is rapidly gaining in popularity on college campuses nationwide. Swedish orienteering champion, Bjorn Kjell Strom speaks of the spirit of orienteering as an "infectious" one. "It is like dropping a pebble in the water and watching circles. The more people who drop the pebble of orienting into the minds of people--the faster it will become a national art."

Orienteering originated in the Scandinavian countries in the late 1800's and did not spread to the U.S. until the early 1930's. However, especially the collegiate campuses with military programs have rapidly initiated the sport in the states, because they have the expertise in compass and map reading.

Captain Segura, who is currently teaching the sport at UVM, hopes to "expose everybody to the idea of orienteering," believing that it can be taught by anybody having basic knowledge of map reading. Furthermore, he has emphasized that Vermont has a wide variety of excellent terrain for orienteers. Orienteering is a natural sport which attracts hikers, ski tourists, hunters, and environmentalists. Though orienteering originated as a competitive sport, it is by no means limited to top rate athletes. It can be enjoyed recreationally by outdoor enthusiasts.

Lambert Speaks-Money Talks

by Mike Schwartz

One can talk to coaches about their respective teams and see the problems from that angle. But one can also turn to other areas of the sports structure to learn about the problems and the prospects. With that end in mind, this reporter chatted with Athletic Director Dennis Lambert on the sports scene at UVM. Mr. Lambert is a Vermont graduate of 1954 where he played football for three years. He was a history major. He has taught in the physical education department since 1964 and was best known for being ski coach from 1964-1972. Named assistant Athletic Director in 1969, he gave up his ski coaching in 1972 to devote more time to that job. He was named full time Athletic Director in June, 1973. Mr. Lambert is indeed a strong representative of UVM sports.

The first topic under discussion was budgeting. Lambert related the budget crunch of a few years ago and the subsequent increases since then. He detailed the costs and the planning that help justify the expenses and the growing emphasis towards skiing and hockey which are rapidly becoming the dominant North Country sports. This reporter basically got the impression of the increased expenses in football due to the costs of transporting a large team in a sport where equipment expenses run high. Mr. Lambert expressed the significance of the Yankee Conference which allows UVM to compete with schools academically similar to it under the same rules and limitation. Schools like UMass and UConn generally do better due to their greater access to athletes within their state boundaries.

In talking about the role of outside interests on the sports budget, Mr. Lambert played down the alumni role by saying that "We try to be as fair as possible in balancing interests." He sees no single group as the key to athletic policy and realizes commitments to the University as an entire community. He discussed the role of the Athletic Council in initiating policy and making recommendations to the President. This Council has students, alumni, and faculty represented. As a note on women's athletics, of which he realizes the tremendous growth and potential, they are classified at present as "extramural" and not "intercollegiate."

Continuing on the broad theme of sports at the school, Lambert discussed the possibility that perhaps sports are spreading themselves too thin. Lambert presented the dichotomy of the values of sport and what it contributes versus the costs of the program itself. He talks of the ideal of being "able to compete at minimum cost and for fun" but realizes that this is hard to achieve. Recruiting becomes "part of the competition and that's where it starts." It cannot be eliminated and becomes a part of the athletic scene. One can speak of an ideal of eliminating costs but the competitive drive of "oneupmanship" means that everyone reaches out to keep the sport competitive.

Aside from these negative ideas, Lambert feels that sports has much positive influence on campus. Though not necessarily, it "does become a focal point of campus activity." It gives a chance for a highly skilled athlete and for the laymen to develop his own physical well-being. He realizes it should not be excessive and that the program should be justified to make "the student have the prime emphasis." Athletics on campus from the varsity point of view provide one of the only ways for the University to get national recognition as the recent experience with the hockey team demonstrates.

Lambert is particularly impressed with such positive influences as with the basketball team where a most unusual development occurred this year. Joe Greco has lived with and become a part of a black suite in the Living - Learning Center. Despite the possible conflicts between black and white, these athletes are the best of friends and can trust and depend on one another.

Of course, the conversation drifted to hockey as this becomes the eminent focus on campus. Much planning is now being done on replacing compressors to allow for full year ice as part of the improvement of the entire gym facility. Part of the gym expansion will allow for indoor tennis courts, another rapidly expanding sport on campus, better locker room facilities, and expansion of women's facilities which Lambert realizes "is becoming more and more important."

But back to hockey, Lambert is quick to say that it will remain on campus and not go to a Burlington Civic Center if that building becomes a reality. A group of students and other people are working on alternatives to the present seating plan. He sees four basic factors to consider with the hockey program. They are first, the needs of the students, second, the income that could be taken in, third, support from other groups other than students and finally the overall program itself.

He feels that at present there is adequate seating, the only problem coming when the good teams provide the three or four sellouts per year. Right now the emphasis is on crowd control, providing better lines of vision by improving the seating along the sides, and alleviating the fire hazards due to the present situation.

Lambert talked of the "Directors Section" where player's families, trustees, and the President's party get seats. He sees this section as a function of the University for

Gymnastics Exhibition

The University of Vermont Gymnastics team demonstrated for the students of Lamoille Union High School on Monday afternoon, April 22. Representing the men were Gary Reid, Chris Kent, John Prushko, Dave Lowry, Gary Warren, and Fred Lux. Warren and Lux have been named the co-captains for next season if the team is still in existence. Gary Reid has been the captain this year. For the women, Debbie Light and Kathy Kalinosky were the performers.

An attraction at the demonstration was the appearance of 1974 High School Champions, Ann Hayes and Janet Lynch who were invited to perform with the team by Coach Tom Dunkley. Both of these girls will be attending UVM next year. The demonstration consisted of basic stunts which go into the making of gymnastic routines.

This program was one of several such appearances by the team. It is part of the team's continuing effort to keep gymnastics as part of the athletic scene at UVM.

Synchronised Is Grace Underwater

by Mike Schwartz

This past weekend the Catalina Club under the direction of Holly Szabo performed a synchronized swim show at the Forbush Pool. The theme of the show was the constant variety of sport and the various take-offs that water ballet can perform of non-aquatic sports.

For a first time spectator of such athletics it is hard to judge the quality of the performance but some general impressions were gained by this reporter. On the more cynical side was the narration that pieced together the various skits on sports. One wonders why the more or less trite dialogue was directed at sports in a high school. If they were showing the intricacies of the sport of synchronized swim they could have been college sports too. But this being a minor point it is best to turn to some of the performances.

Although the club appeared together in two of the skits, the better ones consisted of solos, duets, and small ensembles. Barb Matheson's ballet of a hurdler, particularly impressed this reporter as she showed great strength and yet grace in mimicking the actions of a track hurdler. Synchronized swim as performed by this girl shows the beauty of the underwater movements, the ballet-like extension of the feet, and the grace of underwater turns which make this form of swim much different than average swimming. Kim Young also performed a solo on the theme of ice skating.

Some of the other themes of sport were croquet, bullfighting, judo, mountain climbing, and archery. Synchronized precision was seen more in the smaller group performances rather than in the larger group skits.

But in these larger routines such things as unison diving off the side of the pool and formations that link into a pyramid-like structure of interlinking swimmers make the faults in the routines less obvious.

In general, the show was short enough not to bore the average spectator and the blackouts between skits did not lose any continuity in the performance. One near highlight was a streaker that swam the length of the pool. But as that fad slowly passes out (rather rapidly) it brought a few chuckles and nothing more. The show was more of a highlight than the streaker.

Baseball Club's Record Now 5-1

by Mark Teirstein

At the University of Vermont, where winning seems to be so important and fan attendance reflects this attitude, there may be many who will regret that baseball was dropped from the budget four years ago. After Sunday's doubleheader with Lyndon College, the UVM club baseball team extended their record to 5-1.

Pitching and tough defense has been the winning formula for Coach John Stanton's Catamounts, with the batters getting the key hits and hustling to get the most out of them. Vermont swept the season opening doubleheader at St. Michael's, then split a pair at St. Lawrence, and wrapped up the weekend by taking both ends of the doubleheader from Lyndon College.

The most impressive game offensively was a 15-5 rout over Lyndon in which Scott Simmel went three for five including a double and Jimmy Edgerton clouted a triple and a single in four at bats.

For the pitching staff, which has been outstanding, the highlight has been a 2-0 victory over St. Lawrence, in which Skip Van Dyne, Marshall Stone, and Mike Emmons combined for the three hit shut-out. Overall the pitching staff has combined E.R.A. of 2.26, allowing an average of only 5.5 hits per game. They have accumulated 27 strikeouts and only 15 walks.

While the pitchers were turning in their excellent shut-out performance against

New Hockey And Basketball Schedules

The seasons have barely ended but the hockey and basketball programs are continually on the job. This week the schedules for next season came out. They provide some new competition for both teams which may provide some interesting results.

The hockey team will have 17 returning lettermen including the line of Koch, O'Connell, and Mallette. John Murphy, the new captain, will lead the defensive crew which should be bolstered by the return of John Glynne.

Among the new opponents as the Cats enter Division I are Dartmouth, Princeton, and Wisconsin. Harvard will also be on the schedule. Of interest is a return match with New Hampshire both home and away, and two more games against St. Louis. Pennsylvania remains on the schedule with a return match in Burlington. The schedule includes 13 Division I games, nine against Division II as old rivalries are renewed, and four against Western competition.

The basketball team has ten returning lettermen and loses no one to graduation. The team will once again benefit from some freshmen and returning sophomore veterans like the trio of Gottschalk, Prehmus, and Trapani. Joe Greco leads the older returning veterans as he returns for a second year as captain.

Among new opponents are Virginia Tech, Tennessee, Columbia, and St. Joseph's. The team will also participate in the Lafayette Tournament against Catholic, St. Joseph's, and Lafayette. The Yankee Conference schedule finds a two game home series with Maine and tough competition in a conference that provided two N.I.T. participants. In essence, the team is playing good tough competition but of the type which upsets can be a distinct possibility.

Tennis Team Stays Undefeated

The UVM Tennis Team remains undefeated as it routed Plattsburgh State College 9-0. All except one of the matches were won in straight set decisions. Among the more one sided victories were Dick Hilmer defeating Tom Wahl, 6–1, 6–0, Kevin Delaney defeating Paul Trella, 6–1, 6–3 and Captain Bob Merritt defeating Gary Braunstein, 6–2, 6–2. In doubles the most impressive performance was the team of Merritt and Delaney beating Trella and Wahl by 6–2, 6–2.

As the season comes to a close, the team played Middlebury yesterday, too late to have the results available for the Cynic. Today has the team visiting UConn and on Friday and Saturday the team will play in the Yankee Conference Championships at URI. The home season features another match next Monday as the Cats host St. Mike's at 2:00.

It cannot be eliminated and becomes a part of the athletic scene. One can speak of an ideal of eliminating costs but the competitive drive of "oneupmanship" means that everyone reaches out to keep the sport competitive.

Aside from these negative ideas, Lambert feels that sports has much positive influence on campus. Though not necessarily, it "does become a focal point of campus activity." It gives a chance for a highly skilled athlete and for the laymen to develop his own physical well-being. He realizes it should not be excessive and that the program should be justified to make "the student have the prime emphasis." Athletics on campus from the varsity point of view provide one of the only ways for the University to get national recognition as the recent experience with the hockey team demonstrates.

Lambert is particularly impressed with such positive influences as with the basketball team where a most unusual development occurred this year. Joe Greco has lived with and become a part of a black suite in the Living – Learning Center. Despite the possible conflicts between black and white, these athletes are the best of friends and can trust and depend on one another.

Of course, the conversation drifted to hockey as this becomes the eminent focus on campus. Much planning is now being done on replacing compressors to allow for full year ice as part of the improvement of the entire gym facility. Part of the gym expansion will allow for indoor tennis courts, another rapidly expanding sport on campus, better locker room facilities, and expansion of women's facilities which Lambert realizes "is becoming more and more important."

But back to hockey, Lambert is quick to say that it will remain on campus and not go to a Burlington Civic Center if that building becomes a reality. A group of students and other people are working on alternatives to the present seating plan. He sees four basic factors to consider with the hockey program. They are first, the needs of the students, second, the income that could be taken in, third, support from other groups other than students and finally the overall program itself.

He feels that at present there is adequate seating, the only problem coming when the good teams provide the three or four sellouts per year. Right now the emphasis is on crowd control, providing better lines of vision by improving the seating along the sides, and alleviating the fire hazards due to the present situation.

Lambert talked of the "Directors Section" where player's families, trustees, and the President's party get seats. He sees this section as a function of the University for

Gymnastics Exhibition

The University of Vermont Gymnastics team demonstrated for the students of Lamoille Union High School on Monday afternoon, April 22. Representing the men were Gary Reid, Chris Kent, John Prushko, Dave Lowry, Gary Warren, and Fred Lux. Warren and Lux have been named the co-captains for next season if the team is still in existence. Gary Reid has been the captain this year. For the women, Debbie Light and Kathy Kalinosky were the performers.

An attraction at the demonstration was the appearance of 1974 High School Champions, Ann Hayes and Janet Lynch who were invited to perform with the team by Coach Tom Dunkley. Both of these girls will be attending UVM next year. The demonstratiom consisted of basic stunts which go into the making of gymnastic routines.

This program was one of several such appearences by the team. It is part of the team's continuing effort to keep gymnastics as part of the athletic scene at UVM.

Synchronized Is Grace Underwater

by Mike Schwartz

This past weekend the Catalina Club under the direction of Holly Szabo performed a synchronized swim show at the Forbush Pool. The theme of the show was the constant variety of sport and the various take-offs that water ballet can perform of non-aquatic sports.

For a first time spectator of such athletics it is hard to judge the quality of the performance but some general impressions were gained by this reporter. On the more cynical side was the narration that pieced together the various skits on sports. One wonders why the more or less trite dialogue was directed at sports in a high school. If they were showing the intricacies of the sport of synchronized swim they could have been college sports too. But this being a minor point it is best to turn to some of the performances.

Although the club appeared together in two of the skits, the better ones consisted of solos, duets, and small ensembles. Barb Matheson's ballet of a hurdler, particularly impressed this reporter as she showed great strength and yet grace in mimicking the actions of a track hurdler. Synchronized swim as performed by this girl shows the beauty of the underwater movements, the ballet-like extension of the feet, and the grace of underwater turns which make this form of swim much different than average swimming. Kim Young also performed a solo on the theme of ice skating.

Some of the other themes of sport were croquet, bullfighting, judo, mountain climbing, and archery. Synchronized precision was seen more in the smaller group performances rather than in the larger group skits.

But in these larger routines such things as unison diving off the side of the pool and formations that link into a pyramid-like structure of interlinking swimmers make the faults in the routines less obvious.

In general, the show was short enough not to bore the average spectator and the blackouts between skits did not lose any continuity in the performance. One near highlight was a streaker that swam the length of the pool. But as that fad slowly passes out (rather rapidly) it brought a few chuckles and nothing more. The show was more of a highlight than the streaker.

Baseball Club's Record Now 5-1

by Mark Teirstein

At the University of Vermont, where winning seems to be so important and fan attendance reflects this attitude, there may be many who will regret that baseball was dropped from the budget four years ago. After Sunday's doubleheader with Lyndon College, the UVM club baseball team extended their record to 5-1.

Pitching and tough defense has been the winning formula for Coach John Stanton's Catamounts, with the batters getting the key hits and hustling to get the most out of them. Vermont swept the season opening doubleheader at St. Michael's, then split a pair at St. Lawrence, and wrapped up the weekend by taking both ends of the doubleheader from Lyndon College.

The most impressive game offensively was a 15-5 rout over Lyndon in which Scott Simmel went three for five including a double and Jimmy Edgerton clouted a triple and a single in four at bats.

For the pitching staff, which has been outstanding, the highlight has been a 2-0 victory over St. Lawrence, in which Skip Van Dyne, Marshall Stone, and Mike Emmons combined for the three hit shut-out. Overall the pitching staff has combined E.R.A. of 2.26, allowing an average of only 5.5 hits per game. They have accumulated 27 strikeouts and only 15 walks.

While the pitchers were turning in their excellent shut-out performance against

New Hockey And Basketball Schedules

The seasons have barely ended but the hockey and basketball programs are continually on the job. This week the schedules for next season came out. They provide some new competition for both teams which may provide some interesting results.

The hockey team will have 17 returning lettermen including the line of Koch, O'Connell, and Mallette. John Murphy, the new captain, will lead the defensive crew which should be bolstered by the return of John Glynne.

Among the new opponents as the Cats enter Division I are Dartmouth, Princeton, and Wisconsin. Harvard will also be on the schedule. Of interest is a return match with New Hampshire both home and away, and two more games against St. Louis. Pennsylvania remains on the schedule with a return match in Burlington. The schedule includes 15 Division I games, nine against Division II as old rivalries are renewed, and four against Western competition.

The basketball team has ten returning lettermen and loses no one to graduation. The team will once again benefit from some freshmen and returning sophomore veterans like the trio of Gottschalk, Prehmus, and Trapani. Joe Greco leads the older returning veterans as he returns for a second year as captain.

Among new opponents are Virginia Tech, Tennessee, Columbia, and St. Joseph's. The team will also participate in the Lafayette Tournament against Catholic, St. Joseph's, and Lafayette. The Yankee Conference schedule finds a two game home series with Maine and tough competition in a conference that provided two N.I.T. participants. In essence, the team is playing good, tough competition but of the type which upsets can be a distinct possibility.

Tennis Team Stays Undefeated

The UVM Tennis Team remains undefeated as it routed Plattsburgh State College 9–0. All except one of the matches were won in straight set decisions. Among the more one sided victories were Dick Hilmer defeating Tom Wahl, 6–1, 6–0, Kevin Delaney defeating Paul Trella, 6–1, 6–3 and Captain Bob Merritt defeating Gary Braunstein, 6–2, 6–2. In doubles the most impressive performance was the team of Merritt and Delaney beating Trella and Wahl by 6–2, 6–2.

As the season comes to a close, the team played indifferently yesterday, too late to have the results available for the Cynic. Today has the team visiting UConn and on Friday and Saturday the team will play in the Yankee Conference Championships at URI. The home season features another match next Monday as the Cats host St. Mike's at 2:00.

Philosophers' Committee Censures UVM And Steven Cahn

by Barbara Frankel

[illegible] University of [illegible] Philosophy [illegible] Steven Cahn [illegible] censured by a [illegible] of the Northern [illegible] gland Philosophical [illegible] n for their activities [illegible] se of the Philosophy [illegible] The members of this [illegible] ittee voted [illegible] ously in favor of the [illegible]

The committee vote will [illegible] to all 129 members of the association through a mass mailing. It is expected that they too will censure the University and Professor Cahn. If they do, the motion will go to the National Philosophical Association.

The committee has sent letters to Professors Alan Paskow, Bob Rice and Gerald Anderson to be included in their dossiers. These letters absolve the three fired professors. The committee also sent letters to its members asking them to help Professors Paskow and Anderson find jobs. Bob Rice has decided to leave the profession.

The committee stated: "There are a number of issues which cluster in this category. The issues arise from the terminations at UVM but are not peculiar to Vermont.

"The Committee finds that the Department of Philosophy failed to provide a determined adequate process for evaluation and that whatever process there was seemed not to have been administered in an even handed manner. The evidence seems to indicate that the failure lies primarily with the chairperson. He has left himself open to the charge of acting arbitrarily, unfairly, unwisely, and unprofessionally.

"It is our obligation to raise the question of possible political purging since there is disturbing evidence which cannot be overlooked. We quote a section of a letter from a well-known philosopher who was a candidate for the Chairmanship. The letter is in reply to an inquiry on precisely the issue we are here raising. 'It was quite clear to me after my second trip to Burlington that the attitude of a number of people who would be influential in choosing the new Chairman was a) that the Philosophy Department was professionally both from a scholarly and pedagogic point of view in a sorry state, and b) that the new Chairman should be prepared to clean house of a number of non-tenured members in order to rectify the situation... It troubled me then, as it does not, that people from a position outside of the field of Philosophy should have been able to impose themselves on a process which ought to have been in a large measure professional in character..."

Alan Paskow commented on the censure. "I am gratified by the unanimous recommendation of the committee. This totally vindicates our claims. I expect that censure will be voted on by the Committee For the Defense of Professional Rights as well as the American Association of University Professors. It won't help the professional job situation, but it's nice to feel that some organization is backing us up."

Gerald Anderson added. "Obviously, I was very pleased by their action. It was a very courageous action on their part. The job situation now is extremely bad so I really welcome their stand to rectify past injustices."

Steven Cahn, when contacted by the Cynic, did not know about the committee's decision. Cahn, surprised by the news, felt that he was not in a position to comment.

Georgia's Julian Bond Criticizes National Political System , Universities

by Kathy Stiesmi

Georgia Legislator Julian Bond in his speech at Patrick Gym on Wednesday, April 24 immediately elicited enthusiasm from the audience. His opening comments in reference to politics and politicians were appealingly humorous. Bond mentioned his pride in belonging "to the finest body of men that money can buy," then briefly made some very derogatory, but clever, comments about President Nixon.

He believed that the President was primarily recognizable to the American public as a man who finds it impossible to tell the truth. Bond was also vaguely cynical of politics at the state level, as he referred to his own legislature as the state "deliberative" body. However, his main criticisms were of the national political situation. He spoke of the past presidential election as one where closemindedness prevailed, as "less an election than a count." It was a "victory for the politics of impropriety which insured a four year reign for people with an arrogant contempt for people."

The 60 per cent national pullback in social services characterized by the fazing out of OEO and the winding down of urban renewal indicate the change in government attitudes from benign concern to malignant regret. "Those opposed to crime in the streets have been criminally involved in suites." Nixon's style generates selfishness and fear. Yet Congress is also blameworthy as it lacks the fortitude to challenge the President. For instance, Mr. Nixon was the first president to veto a minimum wage increase and Congress failed to override his decision.

Even on the more positive side Bond commented, some of the gains of the black people towards racial equality are illusory ones. The ability to participate in public politics has not led to a significantly improved economic situation. "The right to eat at a lunch counter leaves your stomach filled but pocket empty." According to Mr. Bond, when the black man takes three steps forward, he simultaneously takes two steps backward.

Unfortunately, today supporters of the instrumental Students Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, of which Mr. Bond was communications director until 1966, have been diverted. The ecology movements have stolen the spotlight. Students have decided that since they can't change the world, they will clean it up. Furthermore, garbage is easier to handle than black people because it doesn't talk back. Thus, the aspirations of the black people have been sharply curtailed. When nonviolence was replaced by riotous violence in cities in the late nineteen-sixties, the rest of America ran away. SNCC is partly to blame for its disintegration. There was a concentrated effort to shift emphasis from the rural south to the urban north, and in so doing its members took stands its financial supporters wouldn't accept.

Bond regretfully commented that universities used to be thought of as the center of political movements. However, now young people are tired of politics, violence and mass demonstrations claiming that these methods have failed. Bond questioned whether the students of the 1970's have really tried these methods. "Is the one busride to the capital to see a building surrounded by students unsuccessfully, then regained by police, enough?" Students have slowed down, a mood influenced in part by the Nixon administration which stands in pitiful contrast to the activism towards social change during Kennedy's years in office. Drugs on campus have also contributed to the more relaxed pace. Bond whimsically mentioned that "people who think they can smoke America to its knees will never achieve social change."

Julian Bond — SPS Photo: Wynn Gold

In answer to a question as to his future political aspirations, Bond replied that he had no plans at this point to run for federal office. Black candidates running for national office encounter a slight obstacle, white people won't vote for them. In a political system ruled by majority votes the twelve per cent black population can hardly command enough representation to support one of its candidates. Black politicians will gain offices at the local and state levels though. Bond believes politics to be the "only game in town," at least the only [illegible] may be affected.

Travels With Michael :

Parenti On Post-Revolutionary Cuba

by John Van Hoesen

Faint echos of student radicalism fried through the air when Michael Parenti spoke here on Cuba last Thursday evening.

The former UVM political science professor, his hair freying, addressed some 250 persons with a talk on the outcome of the 1959 Cuban Revolution. The 1959 revolution began an era of Cuban socialism.

Parenti summed up the significance of the revolution, "Now you can't go into a grocery store and buy orange juice, not if you're a tourist anyway." He continued to say that orange juice now goes to the Cuban people on a priority basis.

According to Parenti, before the revolution it was the tourists who drank the orange juice and the Cubans who went without. Parenti said the significance of this was that Cubans are generally living better lives.

"Socialism in Cuba is a reality," he commented. Citing examples of free education, free medical care, free rent and a guaranteed minimum wage, Parenti noted that money is not a problem in Cuba. "They are not a consumer society," he said.

Unlike China, Cuba does not demand utilitarian art, literature and music from its populace. Parenti recited lyrics from a Cuban pop song about two Cuban sweethearts: "You can't live your life only on the revolution, let me through your door."

He observed that Cuba was much more relaxed about individualism than China and that the American delegation (of which he was one) was allowed to go anywhere and talk to anyone.

Parenti described briefly the Cuban government. CDRs (Committees for the Defense of the Revolution) are the basic governing organization in Cuba. They are local agencies, they are propaganda agencies, and according to Parenti they "bring out socialist ideas."

Parenti's socialist message was in the context of a travelogue. He showed detailed slides of Cuban life as he perceived it. He also included in his presentation slides of his motel room, fellow travellers, his traveling van and many architectural landmarks.

He concluded his lecture with the statement, "In Cuba, everything is a problem, but they're confronting their problems." He added, "I just liked Cuba."

Why is he a socialist? "I'm a socialist because I believe the wealth of any nation should be for the benefit of the many; Cuba is the only country where you don't see children begging."

The former UVM professor had little to say about the recent court case with the University of Vermont. Recently Parenti settled out of court for $15,000. He indicated that most of that money would be going into charitable organizations which would offer Americans an alternative to the present system.

Parenti, who was fired in 1971 for his political beliefs and because he had had a confrontation with the law in Illinois before he came to UVM, is now a professor at the State University of New York at Albany.

In the past, he has written a number of articles and books. His most recent book is entitled Democracy For the Few.

University Will Spend $ 1.25Million To Get Music Center And Organ

by Sig Heller

The University of Vermont is building a music center which will cost 1.25 million dollars. This new music complex will be located on Redstone campus as an addition to Southwick.

Part of this center will include a pipe organ costing 105,000 dollars. The organ, a tracker type will be handmade and installed by Charles Fisk, one of the foremost organ makers in the world. The organ will be French baroque in style and will have 33 stops. A tracker organ is unique in that all the parts are mechanical which cuts maintenance costs and increases the life of the instrument.

Why such a huge cost? Dr. Metcalfe, Acting Chairman of the Music Department, stated that the organ will be handcrafted and the prices of wood, metal and other materials has skyrocketed. Originally the bid on the instrument was $90,000 but due to inflation and material shortages, the price jumped $15,000 to a present cost of $105,000.

Many questions have been raised as to the need for such an expensive musical instrument. When asked why UVM was getting such an expensive organ, Dr. Metcalfe answered, "Why not?" He went on to explain that the organ will be a fixed part of the building and thus is covered under the Legislature's building allocation. "If it wasn't covered under the allocation, we probably wouldn't be able to get the organ." Metcalfe has stated that pianos, tape recorders and other movable objects have to be funded differently. According to Vice President Patterson, the organ will be paid for by state monies as well as private donations. Claiming that present organ facilities at UVM are severely limited, Metcalfe went on to say that the Ira Allen Chapel organ "is not a particularly good organ to teach or learn on." Dr. Chapman, the professor who teaches organ, stated that "the deficiencies of the organ in the chapel actually cause problems for students who switch from that organ to a better one." Chapman pointed out that the chapel organ has 44 stops, most of which are superfluous. It was originally an old theatre organ and constructed for an entirely different purpose than teaching. Dr. Patterson seemed to feel that one big problem with the chapel organ was the sound distortion produced by the

by Margo Howland

Do's and Don'ts

Cynic: Mr. Smith, what advice do you have for persons that may find themselves in a situation that may result in arrest?

Smith: I'll outline them.

Police Questioning

When approached by a police officer for information relating to a crime in which you have been involved, or which you know something about, respectfully decline to volunteer any information whatever. You need not give even your name and address.

Do not attempt to decide whether you are in pre-custody investigation or custodial interrogation: as, whether or not you are advised of your rights, information you provide which does not directly implicate you (a denial or reference to some other person) may eventually lead to your own arrest and conviction.

All people who have some involvement in a criminal act experience a compulsion to reveal their participation or knowledge. This is an extremely well-known basis for techniques of police interrogation. The compulsion must be resisted.

Going to the Police Station

A police officer has the right to require a subject to accompany him to the police station for questioning. Do not resist going along and do not run away, as that constitutes a separate offense of "escape."

Contacting a Lawyer

If you have been involved in a criminal act and are concerned about the consequences, immediately call a lawyer with experience in criminal defense. Ask him for his advice and information as to your status. As your attorney, any communication you have with him is privileged and he is bound not to reveal it.

A fortiori, if you are questioned by a police officer in that regard, immediately contact such an attorney at your first opportunity.

Maintain Silence

If you are placed in custody and questioned, maintain your silence, and repeatedly demand access to an attorney with criminal experience. You may be told by the police or prosecutor to "save yourself" or reduce the consequences of your involvement by telling all—more particularly by giving them an oral statement (which you can be sure will be recorded) or a written statement.

Any such statement you may give will only assist the police in their investigation and in proving your involvement in the crime. It will not help you in any way. The purpose of taking the statement is to commit you to a position from which you cannot retreat without damage.

Don't Sign Anything

In custodial interrogation or under arrest, do not sign anything, including the form which indicates that you've been given your rights (the warnings) and that you understand them. For example, you may be so intoxicated that the legal question is posed by your condition as to whether you had the capacity to understand. Resist photographing, if possible; the police do have a right to photograph. Similarly resist fingerprinting although the police have a right to fingerprint.

Observation

At all times observe closely what the police officer says and does. You may not resist being searched, but try to remember in detail what the officer said to you first, whether you were under arrest, and how the officer went about the search and where he looked.

If a police officer wants to search your automobile or premises (house or apartment) do not consent verbally to any such search; but do not remain silent, be

VPIRG Releases Report, Quotations of Interest

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group, Inc. (VPIRG) today released a report entitled Quotations of Interest charging that a majority of Vermont banks are violating the federal Truth-in-Lending Act. Complaints have been filed with federal officials.

The purpose of the study was to find whether or not Vermont banks are quoting the interest rates required by law in response to oral consumer inquiries.

Under the federal Truth-in-Lending Act of 1968, banks must state only the annual percentage rate of interest (APR) when quoting credit terms to consumers. Other methods of stating interest such as "add-on" or "discount" are forbidden. The law recognizes that a consumer can not make an informed selection of credit terms unless he or she has a uniform means of contrasting the comparative costs of credit.

"Many banks are quoting confusing and misleading interest rates, instead of the annual percentage rate, required by law," said Sharon Frink, who coordinated the study. She was assisted in the study by sixteen student and community volunteers who called banks to inquire about credit terms for a $2000 car loan financed over three years. "We surveyed by phone because that's the way a person seeking the best possible credit deal would initially compare costs," said Ms. Frink.

The survey uncovered a surprising number of violations of the law by Vermont banks. Over half (24 of 42) were in violation of the Truth-in-Lending laws by quoting interest rates other than the annual percentage rate. Of their 123 separate branches, only 74 were in compliance.

Of the state's larger banks, only the Vermont National Bank was substantially in compliance with 12 of its 15 branches complying with the law. About half of the branches of the Chittenden Trust Co., First National Bank and Trust Co. and the Howard Bank were in violation, while the Merchants National Bank had only 38% of its branches in compliance. Chittenden, Lamoille and Washington Counties had the highest percentage of violations.

According to VPIRG, the number of violating banks is much higher than in surrounding states. As a result of the study, VPIRG has written the presidents of violating banks requesting that they take corrective measures. The group also notified the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Federal Reserve Board, urging that they take action with regard to banks under their jurisdiction.

There's no easy way for Charlie Nelson to become Dr. Nelson.

There is a way. Some of Nelson's fellow students have chosen the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program. It won't soften the rigors of your professions or those you make upon yourself – but it may free you from those financial problems which understandably, can put a crimp in your concentration.

If you qualify, our scholarship program will cover the costs of your medical education. More: you'll receive a good monthly allowance all through your schooling.

But what happens after you graduate?

Then, as a health care officer in the military branch of your choice, you enter a professional environment that is challenging, stimulating and satisfying.

An environment which keeps you in contact with practically all medical specialties. Which gives you the time to observe and learn before you decide on your specialty. Which may present the opportunity to train in that specialty. And to practice it.

You may also find some of the most advanced medical achievements happening right where you work. Like at the Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio, Texas, long noted for its Burn Treatment Center. Or the home of Flight Medicine, the famed Aerospace Medical Division, also in San Antonio. Or the Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C. Or the National Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, Maryland, recognized worldwide for its Medical Research.

And if you've read this far, you may be interested in the details. Just send in the coupon and we'll supply them.

THE END IS HERE!!!

There's no easy way for Charlie Nelson to become Dr. Nelson.

There is a way. Contact a local Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program representative. Or write us. We'll tell you about the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program. It won't soften the demands of your profession or those you make upon yourself – but it may free you from those financial problems which, understandably, can put a crimp in your concentration.

If you qualify, our scholarship program will cover the costs of your medical education. More, you'll receive a good monthly allowance all through your schooling.

But what happens after you graduate?

Then, as a health care officer in the military branch of your choice you enter a professional environment that is challenging, stimulating and satisfying.

An environment which keeps you in contact with practically all medical specialties. Which gives you the time to observe and learn before you decide on your specialty. Which may present the opportunity to train in that specialty. And to practice it.

You may also find some of the most advanced medical achievements happening right where you work. Like at the Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio, Texas, long noted for its Burn Treatment Center. Or the home of Flight Medicine, the famed Aerospace Medical Division, also in San Antonio. Or the National Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, Maryland, recognized worldwide for its work in Medical Research.

And if you've read this far, you may be interested in the details. Just send in the coupon and we'll supply them.

EDPA Awards

Three EDPA leadership development awards for training and development for vocational education personnel are available in Vermont.

Dr. Gerald R. Fuller, professor of VOTEC at the University of Vermont, said he had information on applications and that the deadline for submission of these is Friday, May 3.

The awards, made under the Educational Professional Development Act, provide a stipend and dependency allowance for a year of study at the master's or doctoral level. Applications will be reviewed by a committee. Three awardees and three alternates will be nominated, and announcement of the nominees will be made May 8 by the State Department of Education.

Persons applying must have at least two years of experience in vocational education, industrial training or military technical training, or, in the case of researchers, experience in social science research which is applicable to vocational education. They must be currently employed or reasonably assured of employment in vocational education and have at least a baccalaureate degree, and they must be recommended by an employer, or others, as having leadership potential in the field of vocational education and be eligible for admission to an approved graduate program.

Origami, Ancient Japanese Art Explained

by Margo Howland

Origami is the ancient Japanese art of paper-folding. It dates back at least one thousand years and probably longer. In origami the secret behind the numerous animals, birds and other objects that can be made, is in the folding. Corners must meet corners exactly; little or no cutting is involved.

In the following directions remember these terms:

2)Peak fold– Fold paper so as to bend it up.

3)Valley fold– Fold paper so as to bend it down.

The easiest thing to make from Origami, is the simple paper cup. If you make the cup out of fairly strong paper, it will hold water. Colorful origami paper is available at the University Store and downtown bookstores and craft shops, and is very inexpensive. If you don't care to use it, make sure the paper you use is square.

Paper Cup

1)Fold square piece of paper from corner to corner in a diaper fold.

2)Take the right-hand corner, make a peak fold long enough so that the corner touches the opposite side (crease is indicated by dashed lines).

3)Fold on crease indicated.

4)Do the same on the other side.

5)Now the top flaps are to be tucked in on both sides; tuck each flap into the little pocket made by the folds in (3) and (4).

6)Crease the folds. Open cup by pushing on the sides gently with one hand and sliding the fingers of the other hand into the cup.

A great many origami figures are made out of what is called a "basic form." This will take a little more patience.

Basic Form

1)Make a diaper fold from corner to corner.

2)Fold this triangle in half; make sure corners are exact.

3)Pull the middle of the outermost flap towards you; crease carefully, and match the top and bottom corners. Turn over.

4)Repeat (3) on the other side. Keeping the paper in a diamond position with the loose flap pointing down, fold up the bottom flap and crease.

5)Repeat (4) on the other side. You now should have two matching bottom halves, that are separated.

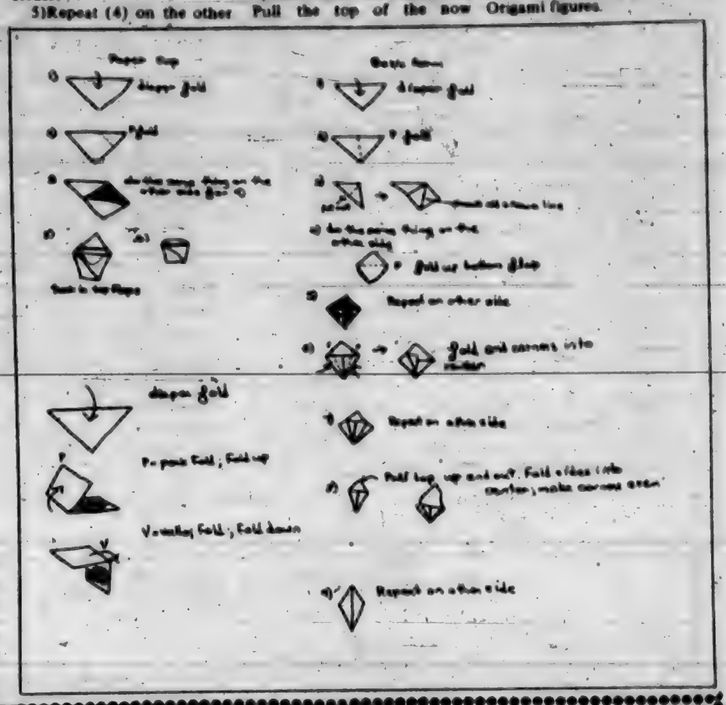
6)Take the end corners on each end and fold them inward towards the center. Make sure the corners at the bottom of the paper fit exactly.

7)Repeat on other side.

8)Here comes the tough part. Pull the top of the now kite-shaped form up and out. Fold sides into center, make corners even. The folds made in (6) and (7) will probably come apart. Don't worry about them, just fold them in again.

9)Repeat on other side.

With this basic form one can make many different Origami figures.



VPIRG Criticizes Blue Cross Board

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group, Inc. (VPIRG) has charged that Blue Cross has failed to comply with an order to drastically reform the composition of its board issued in July of 1972. At that time the commissioner of Banking and Insurance Charles Black (and his New Hampshire counterpart, John Durkin) had ordered the Blue Plans to "reconstitute the membership of their Boards of Directors so that a clear-cut majority has absolutely no connection with hospitals, physicians or insurance complexes but rather are representatives of the working men and women of our state." The Order had followed an early VPIRG report documenting serious conflicts of interest among the "general public representatives" on the Blue Cross and Blue Shield boards of directors.

VPIRG Director Scott Skinner said that an updated report entitled WHO RULES THE BLUES? has been submitted to Insurance Commissioners from Vermont and New Hampshire at a Blue Cross rate hike hearing on Tuesday (January 29) in Montpelier. He said that VPIRG would oppose any rate increase for Blue Cross until the giant health insurer had actually complied with the outstanding order of the commissioners.

Campus Crusaders Survey Student Opinions

During the past year, Campus Crusade for Christ has been answering the National Collegiate Religious Questionnaire with the help of over 250 UVM students. The questionnaire was randomly given to students of all classes, freshmen through seniors. The survey is an indication of student opinions on subjects concerning God, religion, and the basic problems of mankind.

Approximately 92 per cent of those surveyed indicated that they are members of a specific denomination, while 8 percent said that they are not, or never have been, members. 39 per cent were Roman Catholics, 7 per cent Episcopal, 11 per cent Jewish, 3 per cent Methodist, 2 percent Lutheran, 5 per cent Presbyterian, 12 percent Congregational, and 12 per cent belonged to other denominations.

47 per cent of the surveyed students stated that they had a definite philosophy of life, 49 per cent indicated a vague philosophy, and 3 per cent said they had none. When asked how well they lived up to that philosophy, 12 per cent said all the time, 32 per cent–most of the time, 45 per cent–one half of the time, and 10 per cent seldom did.

3 per cent of those asked indicated that lack of education was the basic problem of mankind, 3 per cent racism, 1 per cent politics, 6 per cent intolerance, 2 per cent poverty, 36 per cent self-centeredness, 2 per cent war, and 44 per cent on other things ranging from economics, lack of understanding, etc.

Only 36 per cent had a solution for man's problem, 60 per cent had none, and 4 per cent were unsure of any solution, if indeed there is any.

57 per cent believed in a God who is both infinite and personal, 28 per cent didn't and 15 per cent were unsure. A large 51 per cent said they had not seriously read the New Testament, 28 per cent had read less than one half, 6 per cent more than one half, and 15 percent had read the entire New Testament. 22 per cent thought Jesus Christ to be the Son of God or God-man, 27 per cent a teacher, 15 per cent a philosopher, 11 per cent prophet, 8 per cent myth, and 17 per cent didn't know who He was.

When asked how they came to their understanding of who Christ is, 29 per cent said personal study, 5 per cent books, 46 per cent religious education, 1 per cent secular education, 5 per cent Bible, 14 per cent by other means, like friends or by someone telling them.

When asked how a person becomes a Christian, 17 per cent didn't know, 28 per cent understand and follow Christ's teachings. 4 per cent said by being reared one, 20 per cent – live a good life, 4 per cent by joining a church, 9 per cent by personal convictions, 4 per cent believe the Bible, 12 per cent by belief in Christ as their personal Lord and Savior and 2 per cent baptism.

Of those surveyed, 81 per cent indicated a desire that they would be interested in learning how they could know God in a personal way, 9 per cent said no, and 3 per cent were unsure.

If you are interested in learning more about God in a personal way, and would like free information, call 985–3578.

Becoming a physician is a tremendous satisfaction. Let us give you the job satisfaction that should go with it.

Whether you're still in medical school with the rigors of three to five years of graduate medical education still to be faced, or are already a practicing physician, it's our opinion that the Air Force can offer both professional and personal satisfaction found in duplicate in civilian life.

An overstatement? Not if you consider the specifics.

Take the problem of graduate medical education. It's a pyramid of time that the Air Force can make considerably easier with considerable salary and living conditions.

Greatest confidence aside, the Air Force offers professional advantages. Besides assuming responsibilities in all of the medical specialties, you'll find practices in all of the medical specialties. You'll find practices in an environment which is sometimes challenging and professionally challenging.

Not all physicians pursue post-residency fellowships. But if you are interested, the Air Force offers them both in-house and at civilian institutions.

The physician's ability to practice can both be a relief to other things. If you were looking to the future in the Air Force. For example, there's emphasis on group medicine and specialty physicians. Whatever your specialty or specialty physician. Whatever your interests, there are few specialties which are not found in today's Air Force.

The physician's ability to practice in civilian life has a way of making the years in college seem like a blur. The physician contemplating his practice in the Air Force does not. He finds his office established for him. Supplies and equipment readily available. He has many opinions available to him when treating patients. For example, he can consult with Air Force specialists. He also has referral to other Air Force facilities for consultation. Laws, but they are there, are the considerable that come with having the opportunity for regular follow-ups, and a relatively predictable practice.

Whether you are already a physician, or soon to become one, you might find it extremely interesting to find out what the Air Force has to offer. We think it could be a real eye-opener. If you'll mail in the coupon, we'd be happy to send you detailed information.

An Incredible Year

It's been a strange year for this university, a year in which some rather incredible events have occurred. Throughout this year, the credibility and honesty of the university administration has been challenged. Like our national administration, it has failed miserably.

The University has, most importantly, failed its students. It has done this in many ways. Last fall, the administration hurt the students by unjustly firing three philosophy professors. If faculty members are afraid to teach here or to express their opinions and convictions, this University will become a stagnant dictatorship. Perhaps it already has.

The administration has also hindered the growth of a free, open minded faculty by attempting to block the formation of a faculty union. If the faculty can't protect themselves, neither can the students.

Student opinion was constantly ignored this year, as in every other year. The appointment of Barbara Snelling, the planned construction of the underpass, the four-day week and the tuition hike are only a few examples of administrative decisions made solely by and for the administration.

This year, the chains have grown a little tighter at UVM. This year, the oppression is more evident. Next year, if it doesn't get better, a lot of the so called "troublemakers" will leave. Then the administration will be left with what they want, the yes-men, who are too afraid or too stupid to question what they see. But what will the students be left with?

About My Legal Case...

by Michael Parenti

As you all know, the University of Vermont paid me $15,000 in damages. Some trustees refuse to call it damages. Some would have you think it was a present. One trustee, Hackett, even misrepresented the facts and said that UVM paid only court costs. His words cannot hide the victory we won.

I no longer have an interest in returning to UVM but I do have a strong interest in advancing American radical causes and carrying on the fight for social justice, a fight that can only be won in America when the big money corporate system itself is changed. The $15,000, minus $1,500 for remaining legal fees, will be spent entirely for the defense of victims of political oppression in the U.S. and on radically active organizations, and for support of American radical publications. Among the beneficiaries of the money will be the Attica Defense Committee, the Wounded Knee Defense, the Center for Cuban Studies, Martin Sostre, a Black revolutionary who is serving 41 years in prison on trumped-up charges, the Chile Defense Committee, the Workers World Party, the Youth Against War and Fascism, People for Socialism (Albany), Chesimard and Squire—the two Black Liberation Army persons now on trial, the Worker Action Movement, the Venceremos Brigade, the Black Panther Party and others. To advise and assist me in the distribution of the funds, I have formed a committee consisting of professors and students from UVM. A complete accounting of donations will be made to them so that no question arises as to the distribution of the funds. A number of community protest groups in Vermont will also receive sums from the fund. This is one of those rare instances when the people of Vermont can be assured that their tax money is going not to the rich and powerful, but to those dedicated to the people's cause of social justice.

I should give you a brief explanation as to why I did not pursue the case further. It is a sad fact that under capitalism it is almost impossible to get true justice. The case languished in court for almost two and a half years. The Nixon-appointed federal judge, a former corporation lawyer like many of the trustees, gave every appearance of being hostile to our side in most of his pretrial rulings. The Nixon-appointed Supreme Court has recently handed down several conservative decisions on tenure cases. It looked like a long, impossible expensive road and there was no sure sign that sufficient support, say, another $20,000 or so was available to carry the case all the way.

What I am saying is that in the last two years it has become clear to me that it is an expensive, time-consuming and cruelly deceptive charade to seek "justice" in an unjust system. The court case became a substitute for the more important political work of organizing protest and opposition against the power of the trustees. The task before us is to change the entire structure of the university from a corporation run by and for rich businessmen to a democratic and responsive institution that serves the people.

The real defeat the trustees suffered came at the time they refused to renew my contract. More than a thousand students demonstrated against the decision. UVM faculty talked openly about forming a union and even about striking. Numerous members of the community voiced their criticism of the trustees. Persons throughout the political science profession lent their support to my case. The very power and legitimacy of the trustees to make such arbitrary decisions has been somewhat curtailed—not by some far-off court decision which would be no guarantee to others unless they too pursued costly and far-off court cases. No, the trustees were put to the wall by the mobilized political strength and sentiments of the public. The trustees will think twice before they act so dictatorial again. Our final guarantee that our rights will be respected will come only when we organize ourselves, only when we have the power, and that means the power to control our own lives and be free from the political bigotry and oppression of big business.

Restless So Long

I look across the mountains where the dawn will break as the dark falters and begins to shake
I wonder what move I should make what road I am bound to take no place to hide, no words to fake
I am going and I got to be gone
I bid you farewell with a restless so long with a dose of jealous hate

I crash the force of all of my weight against a high and heavy iron gate collide head on with the fate that curses and quietly waits for those who think they don't belong and brands them with a restless so long the war I'm waging is my own fight need no help nor any advice

I'm willing to bark and to bite whose to tell what is right from where you're standing you might be right and I might appear dead wrong but it's hard to argue with a restless so long

I've made enemies and some friends
I hope to see them all once again who knows where who knows when time don't break it fast bends and The Road it never ends like a diamond that can't be pawned
I'm going to leave you with a restless so long

Streaking Lives!

by Margo Howland

Those who have bemoaned the demise of streaking need do so no longer. While the mass streak-ins that this campus experienced in March have yet to return in full force, streaking is alive and well.

Anyone observing the heat-lightning Sunday night from an upper window of Mason Hall or the immediate vicinity was sure to have noticed the dweeb coming from the direction of Patterson and Slade. A moment later seven dweebettes — three males and four females — raced down the lawn between Mason, Simpson and Hamilton and Christie, Wright and Patterson. They then turned and raced back from whence they came.

Around 1 a.m. Monday morning more dweebs from the far end of the lawn testified that once again the streakers were doing their thing. This time, some fifteen to twenty persons held hands and danced on the lawn, in a circle reminiscent of the Druidic rites of spring. Perhaps they have never read Time or Newsweek.

Letters To The Editor

Landry Responds

To the Editor:

Several weeks ago I wrote a letter to the Free Press critical of an article by two UVM profesmors Paul Eschholz and Alfred Rosa. Following the publication of my letter, an article appeared in the Cynic admonishing Rosa and Eschholz and then drawing generalizations as to their competency. Two things very much disturbed me about this commentary. First of all, Paul Eschholz stated that I had no understanding of slang. To this I must answer that in his article he stated that slang names for courses were apparent on campus; I found no use of it what so ever. I did not attempt to evaluate his expressions; I only attempted to show they did not exist in the students' vocabulary. What is more displeasing to me than any remark by Rosa or Eschholz is the way that Peter Campbell, the author of the Cynic story, used my letter to imply that these teachers were incompetent. Hopefully, their most recent article in the Free Press is not representative of their work here at UVM in the past five years. Therefore they should not be judged merely on the basis of it.

Concerning the publish or perish syndrome Mr. Campbell speaks of, I think we should look at it realistically. Much of the money for university based programs comes from grant money which is awarded on the basis of past publications or on the prospect of future works. Until some other method of distributing money is formulated, we should restrict our criticism to the system and not criticize those who simply function under it.

Sincerely,
David E. Landry

UVM Comes Out

To the Editor:

A couple of weeks ago I was passing through Burlington, and I happened to pick up the April 11 Cynic. I was most impressed by Louie Crew's excellent gay lib piece. It's about time such consciousness reached UVM, God knows.

For three years, from 1966 to 1969, I was a student at this school. UVM was a big closet. At a time when I was discovering my own homosexuality, I could find no one here I could turn to, no one who shared my subversive passion and knew the anguish of growing up queer in a homophobic society. And so I finally had to drop out and move to Boston, so I could come out, share fellowship with my sisters and brothers. Gay liberation has been growing in Vermont, and I commend you for opening your pages to it.

Also, I see that the status of ROTC is still an issue at UVM. As one of the organizers of the massive (600 people) anti-ROTC demonstration five years ago this month, I feel as strongly now as I did then that an institution that teaches unquestioning obedience has no place in a school that (presumably) teaches students to think for themselves. I spent my freshman year at UVM as a cadet. Ironically, it was the most valuable course I ever took; behind my instructor's desperate attempts to justify the war in Vietnam, I saw this imperialistic war for what it was. Probing further, I beheld an intricate structure of calculated lies in the rhetoric of the Johnson and Nixon Administrations. Watergate was no surprise. It is the war and its corruption come home to roost.

No doubt for many of the students then, demonstrations were a fad. For me I know it was not; UVM was the beginning of my continuing association with the anti-war and gay liberation movements. A year ago I visited one of my old professors, who complained, "The place is dead, it's just like the 50's again." Even with the retrenchment in the time since Kent State, things are not the same as they once were, as a cursory glance at the Cynic will attest. Seeing your article about the Trustees' conflicts of interest is proof enough that some idols have been smashed once and for all.

In Support Of Kirk Avery

To the Editor:

The current release of Professor Kirk Avery from the College of Education really disturbed me. Last semester I had the privilege of being in one of his classes.

Unlike many of the courses I've taken, Mr. Avery's was almost totally "student-oriented." Student inter-group and intra-group discussion was the rule instead of the exception. Mr. Avery directed discussion — lecturing and transmission of material to be memorized and fed back were never resorted to. The practice of adhesion to a structured course outline and corresponding date deadline at the expense of expressed student interest in a particular topic was almost non-existent.

Professors as devoted—to their work as Mr. Avery are few and far between. He had no office hours — his door was perpetually open and he was there to talk with you about problems related and unrelated to his course. Mr. Avery also possesses a rare combination of attributes: not only is he well-read and knowledgable in his field, but he is a "teacher" too.

Actually, I don't feel as much pity for this man as I do for those UVM students who have been deprived of the opportunity to meet Mr. Avery and grow from being a student of his.

One More

To the Editor:

I know it's been good for me to work with Kirk Avery of the Education College... and it's more than just sad to know that he won't be back next year. Once again comes that feeling that if actual teaching ability had more to do with the hiring of a professor then Kirk wouldn't be leaving. It's got to get better.

Rescue Squad

To the Editor:

In view of how organized and efficient the UVM Rescue Squad co-ordinated rescue and emergency rescue activities during the Winooski River Raft Race, I find it quite unfair to blame this organization or any of the individuals involved in it for the unfortunate accident of their rescue boat capsizing.

Certainly it would be unfair to condemn the organization as a whole. The individual stations that made up the working unit ran smoothly with no problems in communication, parallel activity, or any other problems which might have been a nuisance at the time when every detail had to have been perfect.

And certainly none of the individual rescuers could be said to be at fault. The river was decidedly not calm, rifts and swirls, turbulent water everywhere. It was commendable that they were able to maneuver the boat as well as they did.

I have come to the conclusion that UVM Rescue should not be chastised for an unfortunate accident; but commended and congratulated for a job well done in it's rescueing efforts.

Very sincerely,
Joan M. Westcot

This is the last issue of the Cynic this semester. We will be publishing a summer issue, which will be mailed to all undergraduates in early August. The regular Cynic will return in September. Have a good summer.

Thanks Trustees

To the Editor:

From the depths of my empty wallet, I'd like to thank the Board of Trustees for their approval of the $100 increase in out-of-state tuition. You say, "Why don't you transfer to a college in our home state (where tuition and fees may be lower) instead of complaining about the financial policies of the University?" If I were an underclassman, I would have no qualms whatsoever about pulling up stakes and enrolling elsewhere. But as a senior (next semester), exercising the option to transfer involves considerations such as the possibility of non-transferable credits, selection of programs and courses of which I know nothing, and orientation with a new academic setting. Is all of this hustling about worth it for one year? For a senior, the problems and effort involved in earning the additional $100 are probably fewer than those connected with transferring. For out-of-state underclassmen, the picture may be seen in a different light.

What do I expect to accomplish with this letter? First, it releases some anxiety. More importantly, I hope some of the non-Vermonters will reexamine their expectations of future costs. In the past, how has UVM usually cured or at least dealt with financial difficulties? With almost hypnotically induced regularity the answer has been: increase out-of-state tuition. When the financial situation is especially bleak, administrators hold out their hands to Vermont students as well. Even with a budgetary surplus, tuition costs are climbing. Can all of this boost be solely accounted for by inflation? There must be other alternatives available which, when employed, could generate the necessary revenues!

If you're an out-of-state underclassman, call a time-out and ask yourself if you are willing and/or able to foot the bill for future tuition increases which seem to be headed your way.

Hooray For OVP

To the Editor:

Probably one of the best bridges between the University and the Greater Burlington community is the UVM Office of Volunteer Programs. As an example of this, recently students from OVP came to us wondering just how volunteers could inter-relate with the volunteer activities of older people in the city who are involved in the Retired Senior Volunteer Program.

In discussing some of the possibilities, two OVP students decided to host a party last week during National Volunteer Week to recognize the services that older volunteers give to the community. This recognition party was planned by OVP students, food was prepared by them, a cake was decorated, folk singing and the program were arranged, the media was contacted, transportation provided, and one of the most successful recognition events ever given in the city for older volunteers took place on Monday, April 22, at Wright Hall, put on by OVP students.

The pleasure that was shown by our RSVP volunteers in having a chance to interact with student volunteers, many of whom are doing the same kind of activities as the older people, was a joy to behold. OVP and UYA are to be congratulated for their continuing efforts to bring together all of us who care about the community in which we live.

On behalf of the older volunteers in Chittenden County, we give our warmest thanks to the students of the University of Vermont and especially to its Office of Volunteer Programs.

Off The Roof

To the Editor:

Recently three of my friends and myself were lounging quite peacefully on the roof of Christie dorm. After a little while an R.A. came out and told us that we had better get off because we were "damaging" the roof and could fall off. Fall off? Leaning against one wall and surrounded by 30 square feet of roof? Hardly.

Finally, after hassling for a while, she threatened us with calling "SECURITY." Unwillingly we got off, deciding it wasn't worth any more hassle with mindless establishment-oriented pawns of society with the caution that if others were going to be able to stay out there, we would return to our roost.

The Security never showed up, the sky clouded over, and I went inside and got high to forget my anger.

Is this democracy for the few? I should say so. Either let us all up there — the same thing to do, or keep us all off — and we'll fight to change this arbitrary rule.

The Conscience Lurks

To the Editor:

Somewhere the conscience lurks. It may be hidden in the Tampax shutes, in the bearing grease, or between Ms. Boisies sheets. We are all specimens so fine but the arrow has been blunted by the concern for the inanimate.

We still function as a unit with direction and fortitude. Our colors are still there and the problems will never be discovered behind Clearasil or QT. There may be watergate in man, but what happened to the man in man. Inconsistantly we grope for the ais, flagrantly we cheat, yellow may be our skin, but it still glimmers in the stars.

The sixties have come and gone. The unions are still boss. The lifestyle doesn't change. Where is the answer; in the Watergate committee, in Rodino's breastpocket, in the trees? Thanks, I needed that: you.

Respectfully,

Watergate In Waterman?

Philo Chair's Vitae A Fraud?

by John Franco

A detailed study of philosophy chairman Steven Cahn's Vitae has revealed that his bibliography of published materials is seriously misleading, and so inflated that it borders on fraud. Steven Cahn was instrumental in starting the machinery that got Philosophy Professors Gerry Anderson, Alan Paskow, and Bob Rice fired this past year. Much of the controversy of the case rested upon Cahn's disputed academic credentials. Many, including this writer, have maintained that Cahn was hardly qualified for the post and was in fact brought here by the UVM administration as a hatchet man: Cahn meteorically rose from his associate position at NYU, which he received a year ago, to the post of full professor and philosophy chairman at UVM.

A pivotal justification for Cahn's UVM appointment and for the firing of the Philosophy professors was that Cahn was academically outstanding while the others were not. The UVM department headed by Cahn was then to charge headlong on a drive for "philosophical excellence." The facts indicate that precisely the opposite is the case.

Most curriculum vitae are divided into five categories: books by the author, edited works, articles in journals, book reviews, and unpublished talks. Cahn, however, blended these two categories into "books" and "papers", which makes it difficult to determine on first glance exactly how much is actually the product of the scholar. Cahn also failed to list the length of his works for a very good reason. They make an impressive list, but very unimpressive actual reading.

Cahn's book, Fate, Logic, and Time is 138 pages, plus a bibliography – a very short work. Moreover it is substantially a rehash of his 1966 Columbia doctoral dissertation entitled Fatalism, A Philosophical Study. It should be noted that his book makes no reference whatsoever to the dissertation. It is customary for a philosopher to give the background of the work, especially when it is primarily taken from dissertational work. Otherwise the unwary observer gets the impression the two works are separate and distinct undertakings.

The rest of Cahn's "books" consist of one and two page introductions to anthologies of other philosophers, very short indeed for anthologies varying from 400 to 700 pages in length. Cahn lists A New Introduction to Philosophy as an original work when in fact he contributed only 134 of the total 533 pages in the volume. The last book, which came out last year, is the infamous Eclipse of Excellence, of 43 page length. In fact this can hardly qualify as a rigorously argued article concerning educational philosophy, let alone a "book."

Cahn's list of "papers" is a good example of a long list of nothing. In fact the average arts college B. A. has pumped out more writing than has Cahn. For instance, a majority of his "papers" are little more than one to two page essays. The longest article "Does Man Have Free Will?" is in fact a reprint of the introduction to A New Introduction to Philosophy.. So we have not only the original entry seriously misleading as to its length and effort, but the reprint of its introduction listed again by Cahn as another work. Sketchy writing and double entries, do a long bibliography make!

The remaining "bulk" of Cahn papers are essays published not in independent and widely circulated journals, as did Paskow, Anderson and company, but in the Reconstructionist, a journal of very limited circulation which is in fact edited by Cahn himself and his father! Not a bad trick. Publish thyself, win a top post at the old "U", and then turn around and fire other professors that you haven't even met because they are not publishing enough! I think that's called a "contradiction." Fraud is another possible label. Little wonder that Cahn was recently turned down at the University of Florida for a regular teaching position because his writing was "too thin."

We have been told ad nauseam by the bankers and real estate men in Waterman that Cahn was hired to build "an even better" philosophy department. Well they really got themselves a plum this time. One might note that the "most qualified" Mr. Cahn was hired not only over the Philosophy Department's 9-1 negative vote, but when some of the administration did more than glance at Cahn's bibliography and take it for a good coin. The circumstances of Cahn's hiring, the course of his career, the lack of substance to his writing, and his subsequent hatchet job on the philosophy department leaves little room for doubt that he was in fact brought up here as an axe man, a boy for UVM's corporate image.

President Andrews' utterances that he personally agonized over the philosophy firings will go on record as another example of the administrations brazen disdain for the truth and utter hypocrisy. The NNEPA censure motion is well taken.

Our Nation Today

by Holly Ladd and Jane Reilly

I wrote to my Congressman and asked him "what can I do to help America stay alive?" He said "Vote for me next November."

I saw an advertisement in Newsweek, from Sylvania, headed, "Less Power to the People, but more light." I showed it to my friends in dismay – they laughed it off.

I asked our professor "what about the future?" And he told me of the glories of satellite communications, home console computerized television and selective programming where the viewer chooses the ending to the television show.

While watching the news last night, I learned that the stock market dropped twelve more points, the oil companies averaged a 90 per cent profit in profits and another coup d'etat – this time in Portugal. Nixon wants to take on Egypt as another cliente state. Oh yes, the President said that when we look back to 1974, it will be seen as a hard year, as were 1973 and 1972 and before that. But that 1976 is still going to be the best year in American history – we will have hit the bottom of the recession.

I watched the "Paper Prison" on ABC and realized how much "Big Brother" knows.

A trip to the Vermont State Employment Office showed me that with a degree in Political Science, I can hope to be a part-time waitress, a secretary, or of course possibly join the vastly increasing unemployment lines, now edging back to six per cent.

And at a hockey game last month, they played the National Anthem. We all rose but saw only a few people actually face their flag and offer the respectful citizens salute.

I have seen a statement in Congress over the issue of amnesty when Ramsey Clark told me last November in Pennsylvania that it was the one issue that could bring this country back together and end Vietnam for us.

I have read Famine 1975 and never thought it could really happen but now I see the beginning.

I am disturbed. I have watched the egg of American government cracked against the frying pan. I have seen America ripped off in a grain deal with the USSR and the bread prices rise. I have watched as the Senate moved its focus from policy making to plans for the 1976 presidential race and I have seen Watergate gouge the time investigation energies of our Congress so that other problems are put on hold. I have watched the college campuses fall into nostalgia and apathy which can only lead to the surrender of more personable liberties.

It is a very profound feeling of nebulization when not only one, but so many people do not know where or what to do. It leaves one with very sublimated nihilistic tendencies. And the answer lies not in emotional and ideological concepts, but in the persistance of getting off our rears and changing...we can be helped but we have to do it also, for ignorance and stagnation never helped anyone or any situation.

And so tonight I am asking Charles Reich, B. F. Skinner, J. K. Galrieth, General Motors, Honeywell, The University of Vermont, ABC T.V., my Congressman, my Senator, my father and my President – what has happened to the America you promised me, and what can we do to get it back, if we really had it to begin with. What are you saying to your twenty-one year old who finds that we are all in this together....

Thoughts On Graduating

by Scott Cahoon

In three weeks I will be a graduate of the University of Vermont.

I lie on my back on the low marble wall at the entrance of Baily Library. It is evening, and the clouds are rolling in after a beautifully warm and sunny day. As I stare at them they are constantly moving, changing shape and size and position.

I read somewhere that it is the sun's creation of thermal imbalances in the earth's atmosphere that causes wind. Now it is the wind that is pushing these clouds around piling them up, breaking them down, forming them into every imaginable shape. People look up and say, oh, it's a bird, look it's Strom Thurmond, and there's Mother Grogan eating a bowl of Prince (marca registrada) spaghetti. But no matter how often people see these shapes of things, they are really only clouds, pushed around by the sun-inspired winds.

In three weeks I will graduate with a bona fide B. A. from Groovy Yuvey. I say this in spite of the fact that I have two papers, four exams, five chapters in psychology, six chapters in ...enough! The thoughts are too painful to bear.

It will be a relief to get out. It's been a long hard grind, and graduation looms as a major event in my life. It's a point of no return, the end of another phase of my life, the beginning of the next.

I lie on my back and watch the clouds. Three stories above me is the library roof. Compared to the clouds it seems close to me. It's as if I could stand up, turn around, and with one leap catch the edge of the roof and pull myself up and over. Looking back at the clouds, they also seem close. From the top of the library I could probably throw a grappling hook and catch it on the edge of that cloud bank. I'd pull myself up the rope, hand over hand, then sit with my feet dangling, watching everyone below. I'd see everyone in their own little trips, and I'd be free as a bird, watching them being born, growing up, living, decaying and dying.

I can see the graduation ceremony now. All the bigwigs, the heroes of our time will be there. The trustees, the senior class president, Ed Andrews, Tom Salmon, Barbara Snelling. John Mitchell will be there too, fresh from his acquittal. He'll tell us how great, strong and wonderful the American system is, how just its justice, how free its freedom, how big its business. He'll tell us that we're going to be a big part of that, part of the American Dream. And I'll be there in the 63rd row, sweltering in my rented cap and gown and brushing the tassle out of my eye between yawns. Four chairs over some dude will be holding his head, recovering from last night's party, living inside his own American Dream.

I watch the dark clouds rolling by. It is uncertain whether they will bring rain or if they are on a different errand. Their imaginary shapes are as illusory as the American Dream, as short-lived and insignificant as my graduation. I am part of a cloud, being pushed and shaped by winds I can't see, affected by a sun I can't comprehend.

My bachelor of arts degree is neither the beginning nor the end of anything whatsoever. It is simply another part of the series of action, thoughts and feelings which are my life, another effect of whatever force (God? Society? Nature?) it is that is shaping my life. But even though it looks like these clouds might bring rain, in a very real way it is fantastically beautiful up here. I wouldn't want to be anywhere else, and I'm sure glad to have all the rest of you clouds here with me.

On Blanket Amnesty

by John J. Welch

I am opposed to the concept of "blanket amnesty." I feel this way because the very notion itself admits of a certain rigidity which I find intolerable as far as matters of legislation are concerned. Laws must be both compassionate and just. Only laws which embody both such characteristics are laws which are responsive to the needs of individuals and hence meaningful.

Accordingly, to those who chose for the highest of moral reasons not to serve when called upon to do so I say come home again; your country needs you, lend us the magnificence of your spirits and be prepared to do rigorous service, hard work through concerted social action – to make America a better place for all of us. To those who chose not to serve for less than honorable reasons, come home prepared to live with the consequences of your acts and be prepared to take your medicine. Finally, to those who did serve, the Congress ought to go the extra mile in terms of jobs, veteran's benefits and the like because this country owes you a debt that can never truly be repaid for your courage is the sort of chemistry that truth and dreams are made of.

UVM Campus Planning Needs Student Input

by Scott Bauer

I believe it is safe to say that our campus is not the most beautiful nor the best planned. Just take a stroll about campus, look around you, think about it, and I'm sure it will become obvious that we do have a problem. There is lots of individual awareness and suggestions toward the problem but there has never been a concentrated, constructive university wide effort to change our campus environment.

Scott Douglas, a third year Botany major, has become aware of the problem and has gathered much information by talking with students, faculty and administration. He took decisive, constructive action by calling a meeting of people with various opinions about this topic. They included: Dr. Edward Andrews, President; Larry Snyder, Administrative Resources; William Luginbuhl, Dean of Medicine; Dr. Carl Reidel, Director of Environmental Studies; Dr. Wallace Christensen, Director of School of Natural Resources; Sam Wiggins, chairperson of Plant and Soil Science Dept.; Ed Owre, Art Professor; Tom Sproston, Botany Professor; Paul Flinn, Landscape Architect; and Mabel Mayforth, Burlington Garden Club.

Scott called the meeting not to blame anyone, but to take a step in an attempt to solve the problem. He believes we need a "campus wide attitude change" in dealing with the problem. He informed me that at the present time we do not have one individual with the technical expertise who has the responsibility of maintaining landscape on campus.

The university spends $250,000 yearly for the care of the grounds. This includes maintenance of existing facilities such as mowing and trimming in the summer and snow removal in the winter. Landscaping funds also come out of this budget.

At the meeting in Bittersweet, all people involved seemed to be aware of the problem. Dr. Christensen mentioned that a well conceived, overall plan is needed. This matter of beautification of the campus can't be done by an existing committee because of the time involved. He believes a well understood philosophy from the president's office is necessary.

Dr. Andrews replied that he encounters many frustrating problems but this landscaping problem is the most frustrating one on campus. He said that our first priority is to take care of what we have. It's obvious that we haven't been too successful in doing this. Look around at the "cowpaths" all over campus. The existing paths simply aren't used and because of this, time and money must be spent to maintain the grounds. Dr. Andrews believes our second priority should be to work on a well designed plan for the University, perhaps starting with the green.

Larry Snyder of Administrative Resources believes people are now starting to look at the total campus environment. There have been site plans done by students and faculty but there is still no administrative office to pull everything together.

After the meeting Snyder explained planning at the University. The Office of Administrative Resources is responsible for the design of the physical plans from the time the problem is comprehended to the solution. The finalized plans are then given to the Administrative Support Services for implementation. Larry believes "coordination is difficult because so many people are involved but we do get more input this way."

He would like to see a landscape professional hired as an administrative staff planner or who has part-time responsibilities as a planner. He believes it is essential that this person also has teaching responsibilities so he or she can get student input.

At the meeting Dean Luginbuhl said that people are becoming aware of what's around them. It's than a matter of education and involvement of the entire campus before things get done.

Maybel Mayforth feels that there is a general disregard for others properties here at UVM. She doesn't believe this must be the case because of her observations at Champlain College. Champlain does have a beautiful campus without a litter problem. Students there just seem to respect their environment a little more.

Students have been working on site planning at the University in Paul Flinn's landscape design course. Patti Hayes, Scott Douglas, and I have been working with Paul on a current landscaping problem at UVM and we feel that he communicates very well with students. He mentioned that landscaping is an ongoing process and he welcomes all student input. He believes that UVM is unique in that credible student input is being implemented. The transformation of the ROTC building into the Royall Tyler Theater is a recent example of one student's involvement. Carroll Williamson developed plans for the exterior grounds of the theater which will be implemented this summer. At many other universities only outside consultants are hired to attempt to solve problems.

One of the reasons for students coming to UVM is the physical beauty of the area and the inherent characteristics of the original architecture. Perhaps the natural and physical beauty of the campus can be maintained and enhanced with ongoing design and planning by the entire campus community.

Dr. Andrews stated that the administration is taking steps to rectify this problem on campus. They are in the process of hiring an aboriculturalist who will supervise and coordinate activities as to the maintenance of existing facilites and the installation of new items. He also believes a full time member of the faculty is needed who is a landscape designer. It would be his responsibility to involve students in courses and supervise their activities.

Dr. Andrews was asked if students could be involved in the hiring of the aboriculturist. He believes they should. However, he pointed out that the hiring will be done this summer. If anyone has an interest in this problem, write a letter to Dr. Andrews. He would be happy to hear from students on the subject of landscaping at the University.

Hurrah
For The Boys In Blue

by Andy Morse

If you're ever sitting around your bunkhouse here at Camp Catamount with nothing to do, if you've run out of dope and have no money for a six pack of Genny, then check out Campus Security's night patrol. Yes, indeed gang, the night patrol is a real thriller.

Just recently I accompanied Officer Munley on his 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. patrol of the camp. Though unarmed, the patrol have all the artifacts of municipal police – badges, caps and two radios. In order to make a thorough check of all buildings on campus, the patrol follows a prescribed route checking doors, windows and vital temperatures. These include the Greenhouse and the cadaver cooler in the Medical Building (a cool stiff is a good stiff).

As Munley said, the basic role of the Campus Security graveyard shift is that of a night watchman. If a window or door is found tampered with, the officer will investigate with hand radio in the place of a gun. If the officer finds trouble he can't handle (i.e. someone is being robbed or a gang is pulling a job) he will radio Burlington Police Department who will check it out.

During the Main Campus patrol, the only thing that happen was that a brand new Vega with no plates was found behind the heating plant. Officer Munley called the car in and it was not on any stolen list. But the mystery was cleared up when the South Burlington Police let Campus Security know that the car was recently purchased by UVM. I must say I was disappointed; I had visioned a rotting body stuffed in the trunk or at least the car could have been stolen.

Throughout the patrol the unit I was riding with made regular contact with the other patrols on campus. There are two other patrols on campus at the same time; one on Redstone campus and the other on foot in the heart of campus. The two patrols convene in the bookstore for a thorough check of the doors and windows and to make sure no one has ripped the place off.

The Blues Concert- That Is Being Possessed

by Peter Campbell

There are some who love the blues. You can tell by the way they bounce when they walk, or the way they talk. Or they might growl and mutter phrases under their breath as they unconsciously sway their body to the twelve-bar music flowing in their blood. They are possessed.

Not so with most others. To them, the blues is somewhat remote. The idiom is too strongly defined, and they are often heard to complain that, like country music, "it all sounds the same."

The three annual spring blues concerts have been very well attended. It is hard to figure out. The audience is obviously into the music and they listen to it with deep respect. Yet I know that for the rest of the year probably the closest most of these people will get to the blues is hearing a B.B. King record on WDOT or maybe an Allman Brothers record at a party. I guess they value its pureness or as Chuck Berry eloquently put it: "I got the rockin' pneumonia; I need a shot of rhythm and blues."

This year it was a night for electric bands and saxophones. I personally cannot stomach Dick Waterman's condescending lectures to the crowd. He seems to believe that he is the only white man alive who knows anything about the blues. But I have to give him credit for being an innovative promotor. Every year has new surprises and going electric was better for the concert. Patrick Gym is too large for good acoustic performance and the heavier sound helped this student, strung out on term papers and take-home exams, to stay awake during the six hours of performance.

Eddie "Clearhead" Vinson was first. His set was short. He played a nice sax but was not a very dynamic singer. He got a standing ovation and an encore anyway (sometimes I wonder if there is anything a UVM audience would not give a standing ovation for).

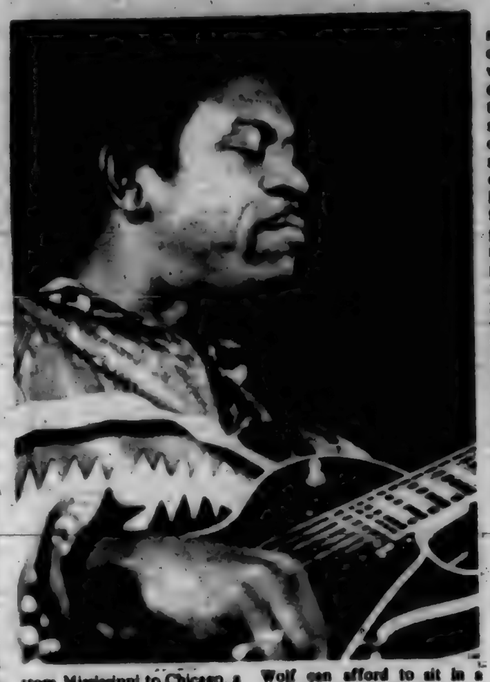
The band that backed Vinson up and then played on their own later, the Roomful of Blues Band, was the pleasant surprise of the night. They are seven white guys from Boston who are successfully tapping a virtually unused resource, rhythm and blues from the forties and early fifties. Their lead guitarist and singer, "the fat man" had a great voice and cool, honed-down hipster delivery. The whole band was breathtakingly professional and they were a joy to dance with.

Luther Allison was a modern Chicago-style guitarist and a good showman. Luther smoked a joint, talked with his guitar, played some strikingly beautiful runs and some incredible hammerhead licks that were sometimes overdone and established an instant rapport with the audience.

Johnny Shine was the only acoustic performer of the evening which was too bad, because he usually has a band and he is essentially an electric guitarist, so I don't understand why he was solo tonight.

Otis Rush was, at least for me, the most satisfying musically. He started out with a beautiful honky-tonk piece and then got into his beautiful original guitar runs. His saxophone player played a great yakety sax and together they were so tight.

Finally, it was time for the big man himself, "Howlin Wolf." There are a few things you have to understand to appreciate "Wolf." A migrant from Mississippi to Chicago, a hard drinker who has killed more than one man in a fight; the author of many famous blues songs, he is the blues if anyone is. Together with Muddy Waters and Willie Dixon, Wolf is the grandsire of the electric blues and rock and roll and one of the last vital links between country blues and city blues. Only the Wolf can afford to sit in a chair when he performs.



The Wolf has a voice and style that is as primal as his name suggests. And though well over sixty, he can still use it. "I asked for whisky—You gave me gasoline..." "awhooh..." awhooh." That is the blues, that is being possessed.

'Murder' Recounts Conflict; Captures Audience

by Lisa Charles

Murder In The Cathedral is not the sort of play which one can actually "enjoy" watching. I didn't like it. I didn't like it because it troubled my mind and forced me to reflect upon the dismal conflict between the Church and State during the twelfth century. This negative effect, however, was the result of fine acting, directing, and production techniques. For it is not easy to enjoy the penetrating ethical questions which T. S. Eliot poses in his play but it is indeed easy to enjoy the artistic adaptation of the author's work. There is a delicate line of distinction between content, and presentation of content, which should be recognized when viewing a play such as this. And I believe that the director, Professor Christopher Lane, achieved a healthy balance between these two aspects of theatrical production.

Eliot's play is a dramatic account of the Great Schism between the Church and State in 1170. King Henry II of England attempts to unite the two powers by appointing his boyhood friend and chancellor, Thomas Beckett, to the position of Archbishop of Canterbury. After discovering that Beckett favors the Church, the king orders him into exile for seven years, during which time the King's oldest son is ordained by the Archbishop of York. But in his absence, Beckett promptly excommunicates everyone who participated in the ceremony. The play opens at the time of Beckett's return to Canterbury.

Chip Towers, who played Thomas Beckett, did a commendable job at unveiling the conscience of a man who resisted the temptation of wealth and power, and principles amidst the decadence of religious scruples. Towers handled the execution of many lengthy soliloquies with an ease and eloquence that marked a polished performance.

The coutse roles of the four Tempters, and the knights who murdered Beckett were effectively played by Paul Ugalde, Jock MacDonald, Craig Toth, and Stephen Kelly. Each did his part to tempt and kill Beckett, and to justify this action during the interlude which concluded the production.

Murder in the Cathedral is a sombre play which captures and oppresses the audience with its political dialogue. For this reason alone, I found the speaking chorus of eleven women (who represented the town of Canterbury) a bit overpowering at times. I enjoyed the creative mixture of dialogue and choreography, but often felt that the entire effect carried the gravity of this play into melodrama. On the whole the chorus was much stronger and more effective during the second half of the performance, which naturally focused on the climax. Nevertheless, the women were successful at projecting the misery and pathetic poverty among the townsfolk who suffered the consequences of the Great Schism.

A special effect which was added by Professor Lane was a male singing chorus of Monks which sang four medieval chants and the funeral chant for Beckett. Directed by James Chapman of the UVM Music Department, the choir set the solemn mood and provided for a strong sense of continuity throughout the play. This, in addition to the modest but authentic costumes and set design, helped to recapture the uncanny circumstance of this historical event.

'The Sting' —Good Fun And Authentic Movie Making

by Bruce Maddern

In a year where movies seemed to be either violent or pornographic, The Sting stands out as the bastion of good clean fun and good authentic movie making.

Led by impeccable performances by Paul Newman and Robert Redford, the movie served as a culmination of fine acting, excellent staging and costuming. Norman Rockwell's chapter portraits added an extra flavor to the movie in the form of a gentle unifying force.

The first scene is an excellent illustration of the entire movie's tone and character. Redford and accomplice set up their party in a typical con in the form of the old switchero only to find out that instead of finding a few dollars in the change, they wind up with a few thousand. The money, they later find out, was from a runner for one of Chicago's biggest mobsters.

The plot thickens when Hooker (Redford) finds his accomplice dead because of the money they conned. On the run, Hooker heads toward a name that his friends had given him, Henry Gondorf (Paul Newman), one of the best conmen in the business.

The action is quick and delightful despite the loss of Redford's teacher and friend. This movie has a springy atmosphere characterized by quick scenes, fast cinemotography and the bouncy theme tune from Marvin Hamlisch and company. Johnny Hooker, with his carefree adolescent nature also contributed to the flow of the movie.

For revenge and profit, Gondorf and Hooker set up the "big con," in this case a fake horse parlor they use to cone the mobster out of half a million dollars.

In cascading fashion the parlor establishes itself and Gondorf becomes a new threat to the mobster. Hooker then cons the mobster into a "sure thing" which the mobster will hopefully has to break the house, so to speak.

The con proceeds smoothly, despite sidetracks and mistakes, mostly by Hooker. With a tense atmosphere and a sense of anticipation, the movie culminates in "the sting."

Throughout, the film was characterized by excellent acting from all the cast and a happy-go-lucky flavor. The costumes and staging realistic approach and delivery of the movie.

The nature of good over evil seems to prevail. Even though Redford and Newman are planning to steal a cool half million, they are made out to be the underdogs and the good guys. Redford's golden boy atmosphere and Newman's coolness contribute to the goodness of their cause.

Despite the fact the The Sting was an excellent production, it remains as one of the good clean fun movies to be produced in a year of turmoil. This could be one of the good reasons for the sweep of Oscars at the Academy Awards.

A trivial but annoying portion of the play occurred towards the end, during the explanatory interlude when the four knights defended their criminal action. The knell of a Church bell rang somewhere between five to seven minutes, and seemed to solemnize or interfere with the only part of the play which could have been considered a relief (from the gravity). This constant knell detracted from the discussion between the four knights. Best Of The Eag

Eagles are pegged as little more than a commercial band. What's wrong with commerciality if it's done right, especially if, as in this case, the artist has the ability to rise above that level?

Almost equally likely and equally unfair is the categorization of the Eagles as just another 'country-rock' group, a generalization necessary only for those who don't want to think about their music too much. What distinguishes the Eagles from all the hippie dullards who insist on laying a pedal steel on otherwise forgettable music is that the Eagles possess a true feel for the C&W idiom and not just a passing fancy for it; they know that it's not how it sounds, but how it feels.

Of course, being a band as the dictionary defines it, the Eagles know how music in general should feel which is why they've now blessed us with On The Borders, as durable a rock and roll record as you'll ever hear. They manage to pack more intensity into each of these ten four-minutes-average cuts than many groups can muster in five hours of live concert playing.

Four tracks leap above all the rest, a pair each at the beginning and end that ensure that you're wide awake and with it whichever side you choose. "Already Gone" is everything Poco's tried to do and more, harmonies soaring as high and free as it gets and just enough of a sharp edge jutting through to keep away that cloying feeling. Written by Jack Tempchin, author of "Peaceful Easy Feeling," this song has some classic lines, as does "Good Day In Hell" (great title, no?), a number that gerrrrinds for its duration. Felder plays slide on this last one and I swear I haven't heard anyone play with such utter abandon since I first heard Duane Allman; the man takes chances most guitarists might never dream of, but he makes 'em all pay.

Every once in a great while, I hear songs that hit me right square where I live. There's just no escape from being touched by them and so it is with "You Never Cry Like a Lover" and "The Best of My Love." It's not just the wistful words or the gentle melodies or drummer Don Henley's poignant vocal delivery, it's the combination of all of these that makes each of them ineffably lovely.

I can't decide whether the rest of the album doesn't compare because they're lesser performances or whether they ju way, basking in the four I've men

The knell of a church bell rang somewhere between five to seven minutes, and seemed to accentuate or interfere with the only part of the play which could have been considered a relief (from the gravity). This constant knell detracted from the discussion between the four knights. Aside from this, however, the production of a rather 'difficult' play was indeed a creative and professional product of a fine director.

The production staff was Professor Lane's final project which concluded his five year stay at the University. At a reception which followed the play on Saturday night, Dr. Fenner announced the addition of an originally designed stained glass window to the Royall Tyler Theatre, as a dedication to Professor Lane's service at UVM.

Best Of The Eagles...

Eagles are pegged as little more than a commercial band. What's wrong with commerciality if it's done right, especially if, as in this case, the artist has the ability to rise above that level?

Almost equally likely and equally unfair is the categorization of the Eagles as just another 'country-rock' group, a generalization necessary only for those who don't want to think about their music too much. What distinguishes the Eagles from all the hippie dullards who insist on laying a pedal steel on otherwise forgettable music is that the Eagles possess a true feel for the C&W idiom and not just a passing fancy for it; they know that it's not how it sounds, but how it feels.

Of course, being a band as the dictionary defines it, the Eagles know how music in general should feel which is why they've now blessed us with On The Borders, as durable a rock and roll record as you'll ever hear. They manage to pack more intensity into each of these ten four-minutes-average cuts than many groups can muster in five hours of live concert playing.

Four tracks leap above all the rest, a pair each at the beginning and end that ensure that you're wide awake and with it whichever side you choose. "Already Gone" is everything Poco's tried to do and more, harmonies soaring as high and free as it gets and just enough of a sharp edge jutting through to keep away that cloying feeling. Written by Jack Tempchin, author of "Peaceful Easy Feeling," this song has some classic lines, as does "Good Day In Hell" (great title, no?), a number that grrrrinds for its duration. Felder plays slide on this last one and I swear I haven't heard anyone play with such utter abandon since I first heard Duane Allman; the man takes chances most guitarists might never dream of, but he makes 'em all pay.

Every once in a great while, I hear songs that hit me right square where I live. There's just no escape from being touched by them and so it is with "You Never Cry Like a Lover" and "The Best of My Love." It's not just the wistful words or the gentle melodies or drummer Don Henley's poignant vocal delivery, it's the combination of all of these that makes each of them ineffably lovely.

I can't decide whether the rest of the album doesn't compare because they're lesser performances or whether they just seem that way, basking in the glow of the four I've mentioned.

Listening to "Ol' 55," any questions of that sort disappear. The Eagles command enough aplomb to choose others' material and when they do, they interpret it with as much sensitivity and grace as they do their own. This Tom Waits tune is – dare I say it – right on par with "Lover" and "My Love." Believe me!

"On the Border" is another toughie, all popping guitars and haunting harmonies that'll spook you not only because they do so much to create the cut's mood of paranoid bewilderment, but because you know the Eagles can put together such vocal tapestries naturally, no seventy-two takes for perfection with these guys. Bassist Randy Meisner composed and sings lead on a smoothie called "Is It True," its own creamy singing spiced with Al Perkins' pedal steel. "Midnight Flyer" would be just another peg for Bernie Leadon's banjo licks to hang on if it weren't for the way Frey's slide whistles its way down the line, but Bernie's brotherly eulogy to Gram Parsons offers as much affection as it does solace; it'd take a man like Gram to inspire a song like this.

The more I listen to the Eagles and the more I think about what they've done and what they have the potential to do, the less leery I am of calling them one of our best American Bands. They're easily the best of their type since the Buffalo Springfield, a self-sufficient group with four distinct vocalists, all multi-instrumentalists, recently given an injection of fresh blood courtesy of Don Felder. Not that I ever doubted them, but the Eagles are sure to be producing things as satisfying as their latest album for a long time to come.

The Music Review: Poco's Seven, Life Machine, Etc.

Seven
Poco
Epic KE 32895

Seven is Poco's first outing without Richie Furay, and his loss hasn't hurt the band at all! Furay was dominating the group, and now that he's left to pursue a solo career, the writing talents of Paul Cotton and Timothy Schmit have surfaced. Surprise! They're both excellent.

Group harmony is tight, countrified delight, while the music is the heaviest Poco have ever taken on. Much of the music roots itself back to the early days of Buffalo Springfield, and for the first time, the ties are more evident than ever before. Yet, at the same time, their only link, Furay, with the Buffalo Springfield has gone. Cotton and Schmit have learned their lessons well. The physical composition of the album is intelligent, going from ballad to ballad, rocker to rocker, throughout the disc.

Acoustic guitar and drums are the trademark of Poco, and good use are made of both. Poco have taken into account how all the elements of each song will sound together, and the final effect of those combinations on the listener. Such acute perceptions in structure have made the difference between a good and great album. Seven is a mature album, an album in which the group members had to demonstrate professionalism, or fall flat on their faces. Everyone anticipated that Furay's departure would ruin the band, Poco have proven their stature as charter members of folk rock in this country, and have delivered a quality product far and above the call of duty.

Selections from Seven include Drivin' Wheel, Just Call My Name, Skatin' and Angel, a song which features a Na Na Na group chorus part, reminiscent of the fine, harmonic exercises of both early Springfield and Bryds. Seven is the culmination of all the years, all the music, and all the experience. It's an incredible, happy album. Poco are, indeed, alive, well, and back on the road.

Life Machine/Hoyt Axton
A&M

Life Machine is the best and most commercial album Hoyt Axton has ever done. It begins with an old Chuck Berry tune, "Maybellene," and also includes Arthur Crudup's "That's All Right," along with Michael Murphy's "Geronimo's Cadillac." The rest of the material is original, and top notch.

Axton's powerful, metallic voice is at its best on Life Machine, in an album that should bring Hoyt to the forefront of an entirely new audience. Instrumental work is superb, especially on the blues – interpretation of "That's All Right." Electric funk. The title tune is tailored to be an A&M hit, but that doesn't detract from its potency as a good, solid song at all. "Geronimo's Cadillac" is a fun number, with a semi-serious message.

Axton performs an assortment of songs which beautifully demonstrate his range and style, and his ability to make the listener tap his feet. There are some fine additional vocals from the album by Linda Ronstadt, Clydie King, Sherlie Matthews, and Merry Clayton. Another fun number, "Boney Fingers," is co-performed by Axton and Renee Armand.

This is an album that will go in style. It's one of the best combinations of country and commercial to be found anywhere, and its ability to make Axton a household word in the most avant-garde of pads is nothing short of incredible. It don't matter where you hang your hat, mister, Hoyt Axton's got something to say to you!

Music Thing invites readers' response. If you know of an artist or album that hasn't received the attention it deserves, let us know. We'll do our best to find new talent with something important to offer. It doesn't matter whether the artists are well-known or nondescript, Music Thing's purpose is to serve the listening public. Greetings From Jamaica
Tidbits
Family Productions FPR 2714
List Price $5.98

Jamaica certainly is the scene of musical activity these days. The Stones, The Wa...s, Loggins & Messina, and now, Tidbits. A little reggae never hurt anyone, right? Especially in a business that's tried everything twice, at least! In any case, Tidbits is an entertaining mix of seasoned rock that rates with the best of the Jamaican product, including that of present day superstars.

Tidbits are J. Steven Soles, Ned Albright, Tali Jackson, and David Kapell. Greetings From Jamaica is a debut album, and is self-produced and arranged, not to mention that all of the material is original. Taking all of this into consideration, Tidbits is a talented group of writers and musicians, obviously possessing a natural flair for putting things together. "My Friend Maude," and "Don't Blame Me;" two particularly striking numbers from the album, hold immeasurable potential as commercial possibilities on the American charts. Both cuts are fine fusions of both electric and acoustic, frosted with melodic, hummy, vocal harmonies.

The tragic flaw of Tidbits lies in their physical dependence upon the studio. The infatuation with perfection and magnetized bliss infects much of the music with the staunch sterility of VU meters and the catty purr of the Ampex. Technocracy emphasizes restraint rather than spontaneity in the music, a blemish that only hydrogen peroxide and live gigs can clear up! But, there's no mistaking, this here ain't a bad album.

Friends & Legends
Michael Stanley

Michael Stanley has been one of those anonymous musicians, appearing in cameo with such groups as Silk. In his travel, his venture to honesty make music, and in writing what he terms as 'real' songs, he has acquired many friends. His reputation as a serious artist has created a following, a brotherhood of musicians reaching for that same goal, "real" songs. Friends & Legends brings us Michael Stanley's country-bred influence, hyped with gentle-rock and silicone studio work.

Joining Michael Stanley are Joe Walsh, Paul Harris, Joe Lala, Dave Sanborn, and Bill Szymczyk. As a network of musicians from various backgrounds, the final product is a loose assortment of Stanley originals, with one exception, an acoustic interpretation of Lennon and McCartney's Help!, done with chorus line and electronic phasing on acyclic backing vocals. The remaining tracks from the album range from fast-pace country-rock, accentuated by Joe Walsh on lead and slide guitar, and Joe Vitale on drums, to balladry and Americana. "Let's Get The Show on the Road," the gentle, closing number from side one, is simply constructed, with repetition of three basic chords. The drums, showcasing Stanley's intensely earnest voice, enrich this three-chord pattern, which is given yet additional color through Dave Sanborn's flighty, yet inventive alto sax lines.

"Funky Is The Drummer" is pure delight, being one of those recorded off-moments in the studio. Out of tune guitar by Walsh, and Kenny Passarelli's hop-scotch bass will have you rolling on the floor! And then the emcee comes in to do the introductions. Members introduced include the Paul Harris Explosion, and Mahavishnu Joe Walsh, plus an assortment of other vocal-blips. Pure ham!

Friends & Legends was recorded at Applewood Sound in Golden, Colorado, with additional work done at the Hit Factory in New York. Final mixing was done at Chicago's Caribou Ranch in Nederland, Colorado. Richi Furay, Carl Hall, and Dan Fogelberg play cameo roles, with J. Geils assisting in the production of the horn section. This is an album of quiet, merciful excellence. It's musical, it's fun, and it revolves at 33 and 1/3 revolutions per minute.

UVM Alumni To Run Theatre Group

A UVM alumna, Ms. Marianne Lust M.Ed. '73 will be co-producing, co-directing, and in general devoting herself to a small theater group this summer.

Ms. Lust, who received her B.A. from Bryn Mawr College in 1969, helped to found the Theatre Group, Ltd. in December 1972 to bring the small city of Vergennes, Vermont a summer season of theater and in the future to provide educational workshops in the theatrical arts.

The first season of Theatre Group, Ltd., summer 1973, saw that company of 20 local job-ins and high school apprentices produce seven plays, including "The Odd Couple," "Kiss Me Kate," and Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Earnest."

For the 1974 summer season, the Theatre Group, Ltd. will sponsor three plays, "Sweet Charity," "Night Must Fall," and "The Madwoman of Chaillot." In addition, the company will host a three-week children's theater workshop. Ms. Lust is currently serving as publicity director for the company and will direct "The Madwoman of Chaillot" during this summer's season, which will run from July 17 to August 17. Working with Ms. Lust is Tom Bloom, an instructor at Brown & Nichols in Boston, who helped to found Theatre Group, Ltd. and serves as an all-around hand at producing, directing, acting, and set design.

In preparation for the month-long summer theater to be housed at the Vergennes Opera House, Ms. Lust is coordinating fundraising efforts for the theater group. A benefit is planned for May 12 and 13 in Middlebury at Mr. Up's entitled "A Spectacular Benefit" to include a local cast performing everything from "The Solid Gold Cadillac," to singing "The Flea" by Mousorgsky.

Auditions for the plays offered by the Theatre Group, Ltd. will be held on May 5 from 12 noon until 6:00 p.m., and May 6 from 5:30 to 8 p.m. at the Vergennes Elementary School. Ms. Lust notes that "We need people" and encourages local talent to join the group as actors, dancers, musicians, singers, and backstage workers. A resume and photo, if possible, are requested for auditions and personal sheet music selections are suggested.

Further information on the Theatre Group, Ltd.'s activities may be obtained from Ms. Lust at R.D. 1, Bristol, Vt. 05443, or by writing the Vergennes Opera House, Main St., (Rt. 22A), Vergennes, Vt.

Drug Law

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group, Inc. (VPIRG) said that it had registered a strong complaint with the Board of Pharmacy over the enforcement of Vermont's prescription drug price posting law. The law requires pharmacists to "conspicuously post" the prices of the 100 most frequently prescribed drugs.

TEP Wins Raft Race

by Paul Prior

The 7th Annual Winooski River Raft Race was won by Tau Epsilon Phi Fraternity on Saturday, April 20. The raft left the starting point at approximately 8:30 a.m. and finished at approximately 9:15 a.m., crossing the finish line some two or three minutes ahead of the first raft, which left the starting point at 8:00 a.m. The official time was 45 minutes, 15 seconds. This writer visited with members of the TEP crew to gain insight on their preparation for the race, as well as their thoughts during and after the event.

"The most important part of the race is the preparation," says this year's raft captain. "The raft's design is integral to winning. A six by sixteen foot wooden platform was bolted to two styrofoam pontoons. It's the same raft that won last year."

The design of the raft wasn't the only unique thing about it – the TEP raft was one of the most colorful objects floating during the race, with its red, white, and blue platform and oars. A fierce looking red and blue shark adorned each pontoon. This added a nice touch of professionalism to the race, which, in raft captain Dennis Johnson's words, was "Well organized, though I'm sorry there wasn't more competition."

Everyone had a different method of getting properly psyched for the race, and in addition to their own preparation, took part in performing secret fire and beer rituals throughout the night. Winning the race was very important to the TEP crew, mostly because there was only one member remaining from last year's team, Dennis Johnson. Some of the thoughts of this year's first-timers follow:

John "Kid" Geller: "Water was cold as a bitch!"

Fletcher Baltz: "The rapids weren't as hairy as I thought they would be."

Steve "Greek" Galles: "You don't know how far 6 miles is until you row it."

Bunny Bazcek: "Exciting – lots of good trout pools on the way down."

Paul "Jacques" Breslin: "It was a high day."

The 7th member, Ralph "Mink" Costanza, was unavailable for comment.

During conversations with the members, it became evident that though, the recognition of winning the race is important, having a good time is equally important. One disgruntled member of the crew disagreed however. "That Johnson – I was waiting for a whip to crack across my back – he was like Captain Hook!"

S.A. Senate Passes Budget

by Bruce Maddern

At the final meeting of the S.A. Senate, the budget of over $116,000 was passed with relatively few alterations. Long discussion was given to the President's Discretionary Fund and the Lacrosse and Sailing Clubs.

The chief subjects of discussion concerned the need for the S.A. to allocate funds to sports clubs. Senators believed that the Athletic Department should help these sports instead of having the S.A. allocate money. The Lacrosse Club was given an allocation of $1875 despite the Finance Committee's original denial for any money. Last semester the club was given $750 and said then that it would not ask for a further allocation. Long discussion concerned alternate funding and the possibility of Lacrosse becoming a varsity sport.

The Sailing Club was denied its request for an additional $250 for travel and entrance fees. The addition was to be used for racing in regattas in Boston and Connecticut. The club's purpose is one of recreational sailing only. The Senate therefore voted the denial of funds.

A motion was made to reduce the President's Discretionary Fund from $1000 to $500. Peter MacAusland, S.A. President, spoke in defense of the allocation. He said that the fund will cover researching and lawyer's fees that the S.A. will incur over the next year in various areas he wants to investigate.

Despite 25 per cent attendance, the meeting entertained business and voted on the budget for the next fiscal year.

In the Executive Report, MacAusland announced that there will be summer internships at Lyndon State for the Vermont Student Lobby. Student input is also being sought in helping determine what the proposed gym addition should include.

The Senate meeting adjourned at 9:00 p.m. The next meeting will be in September.

The Bar Review: Chucker Paradise: The Hot Spot (Joe Barry's)

Remember all that smaltz they told you about going to college to "broaden your horizons" and "develop your critical faculties." They claimed that a university education would make you more "aware" of the "relevant priorities" that "confront" our "post-industrial" society. So you came to Camp Catamount brimming over with hopes of meeting "new and exciting" people, becoming the next T. S. Eliot, Florence Nightingale, Neil Armstrong or Clarence Darrow and figured you could get in some good skiing on the side. And your parents packed up the New Jersey license-plated LTD station wagon for the long trek to Burlington, helped the Chittenden give out some car-loans by paying your tuition, took you to the Sirloin Saloon for dinner and proudly waved goodbye as young Johnny or Janey started their college "careers."

But after a semester or so you woke up one morning and the revelation came: UVM was, of course, the same middle-class wasteland you thought you were escaping when you received your high-school diploma and all those "new and exciting" people you were supposed to meet were exactly the same as you, except perhaps that their parents had more money. And you soon realized that your only escapes were Hannibal's, hockey games and taking advantage of 24 hour parietals.

Well, if you're tired of the same old Groovy U. crowd and you've tried all the other escapes from mescaline to meditation and are sick and tired of Kurt Vonnegut novels and Kahil Gibsan's maple syrup excuse for poetry, why not really broaden your horizons and take in a Friday evening at The Hot Spot – Joe Barry's.

For the Joe Barry's crowd really is the other half – the people you'll never see in Bailey Library, the Den or a Sigma Nu frat party. The Joe Barry's man is your All-American guy – he's the fellow who jacks up his fire-engine red GTO, buys his clothes at a Gaynes fire sale, takes his date to the Mallets Bay drive-in for the tenth re-run of "Deep Throat" and caps his evening by running a few stop lights before he and his honey take in a quick burger at the Hitchin' Post. He chain smokes Marlboros, drinks Bud out of the can, never misses deer hunting season and hasn't been outside Winooski or Williston since his Basic Training at Fort Dix. The Joe Barry's man perhaps made a trip to Montreal or Boston once, but all he ever saw was St. Catherine Street's strip joints or the Athens of America's famous combat zone. He's not an overly scholarly fellow, but does read his Hot Rod and Motor Trend and probably knows his second amendment rights better than Professor Gould. Even his white socks have those black and red racing strips on the ankle.

And ladies – well, does the Hot Spot have ladies? Your Joe Barry's girl is a twice-divorced hairdresser who obviously didn't heed the Clearasil commercials in her youth. Her favorite T.V. shows are Hee-Haw and As the World Turns. To keep up with what's happening in the world, she religously reads the National Enquirer and Midnight Tattler every week. Though she wears more than enough make-up to cover that terminal acne case, the Joe Barry's woman never seems to understand that her five-day deodorant gets a little gritty after three nights of dancing up a storm at the Hot Spot.

Joe Barry's is easily the most nakedly chucker bar this side of Cabin Creek, West Virginia. Its predecessor was probably the square dance at the local Grange Hall; unlike real workingman's pubs, Joe Barry's has no football hammers, marine posters or reminders of drunken Saturday afternoons spent watching ballgames with the boys. Though there are a few dusty trophies on the bar mantlepiece, and the place does smell like a locker room, the atmosphere is unadulterated S-L-E-E-Z-E, country-western style. The Hot Spot is filled with the odor of cheap hairspray, Andy Granatelli's STP and Brylcream.

One of the best sideshows that the Joe Barry's three ring circus has to offer is the action out in the parking lot. Besides the omnipresent greasemobiles, you'll find plenty of Campers and pick-up trucks with "If guns are outlawed, only outlaws will have guns" bumper stickers. It wouldn't surprise this reviewer if a berserk chucker drove into Joe Barry's parking lot around with a pitchfork, sitting proudly atop one of John Deere's newest manure spreaders. The chuckers usually have something "in the truck" so the parking lot drinking action is the best in town. Also, you immediately realize why these chucks always order stiff shock absorbers for the Greasemobile; at Joe Barry's, the guys don't worry much about bourgeois conveniences such as beds or motel rooms, as all you need to get it on at the Hot Spot is a pack of gas-station mens room vending-maching rubbers and the backseat of the ole GTO.

And there's no generation gap at Joe Barry's. The old chucks and their young brethren both equally revel in watching the Sweathearts that Joe Barry's euphemistically call "Go-Go-Girls" do their thing.

So, if you really want to experience some "new horizons" see Joe Barry's at least once before you leave Easy Ed's Day Care Center. Or, if you're a beautiful young junior chick with a well-intentioned but absolutely repugnant freshman guy calling you up for a date every weekend, you could get rid of him by suggesting he take you to Joe Barry's as it's your idea of a "good time." One last bit of advice about your Joe Barry's excursion – if you are an unescorted young lady, we suggest you wear a sign around your neck that reads: "I am not really a pick-up – I just like to drink." Amen.

Last Call

With this column, The Bar Review closes down.

We hope our readers have enjoyed this column as much as we enjoyed researching and writing it. There is plenty left to do. We contemplated visits to many more places; time wouldn't let us.

Many willing geologists offered opinion and encouragement; we offer our thanks through individual suggestion:

–to our friend, the Frank Zappa-lookalike, we suggest he refrain from literary criticism and that he concentrate his efforts on synthesizing Grand Marnier;

–to one of our favorite faculty critics, temporarily on the disabled list, who suggested TBR visit a faculty cocktail party, we respond by suggesting a re-reading of the recent discussion of fraternity parties with the substitution of better grammar, less vernacular, better clothing, better liquor, no better conversation, and many, yes, many more "sleazes" in attendance. We would also like to go on record by saying that TBR would like to see him open a civilized little bookstore – bistro (perhaps constructed of Carerra marble) serving dark rum and Madeira exclusively. Needless to say, we hope he marshals his constitution sufficiently enough to be taken off the disabled list.

–to another faculty member who thinks TBR is a writer's initials (Theodore Bryan Roosevelt?), we will reveal ourselves to him upon the receipt of a dinner invitation or a royalty check for his use of the column as a teaching aid in one of his social science classes.

–to another faculty critic-favorite, we suggest that if he goes anywhere alone in his car this summer, he should make sure he does the driving.

–to those who disdain our efforts, do your homework, take two aspirin before bed, drink plenty of liquids, and brush after meals.

–to those who will miss us, read the Boston Globe and George Frazier. We love him.

–to several directly involved in the business we concern ourselves with, you have made writing this column difficult and we love you for it.

–to John Franco. Hang in there.

–to our favorite jock, thanks for your irreverance to us. You'll never be Tom Buchanan.

–to George and Martha, our congratulations for your having better things to do than going to bars; you're probably right.

–to the Cynic staff generally (and editors Frankel, Van Hoesen, and Steinberg especially), we just offer our thanks. If the three editors remain in journalism, we hope they never again have to deal with two more insufferable bastards than we.

–to our jockette critics, hopes that Coach Cross will finally recruit some players who can major in elementary education without compunction.

For our purposes, it's two A.M.

The lights are turned up now. The people start to trickle out now, all except those who had the good sense to order three beers at 1:55. Some others remain too, in a last-ditch effort to avoid sleeping alone. CJFM, 95.9 Montreal, reads the news. They're putting the bar stools and chairs on the tables now for tomorrow's sweepers.

The perfume of beer and sweat is forgotten once out in the glare of the street.

We'd like it if someone played "Greensleeves."

UVM Blood Drive A Success

by Lawrence Doton

For the first time in recent UVM blood drive history, the mid-March drive was a four day affair. This was in conjunction with the four-day week and the heavier schedules of students. As a result the drawing netted 45 more units of whole blood than the October, 1973 drawing with a grand total of 775 units. Monday through Thursday drawings drew 172, 208, 191, 204 units respectively.

The cumulative total of blood donations at UVM dating back to 1950 now stands at 19,570 units.

The following earned gallon pins, multiples of eight, donations:

ONE GALLON: Patricia Andres, Brenda Butler, Sara Cross, Roger Eaton, Debra King, Michael McNamara, Thomas Novak, Paul Restino, Louise Rocheleau, Charles Simpson, Lawrence Turner, Elizabeth Walton, James Werther and Barbara Young.

TWO GALLONS: Mrs. Edna Curtin and David Potash.

FOUR GALLONS: Edward Costello, Jr.

SIX GALLONS: Thomas Fennell

In the Trophy competition for largest percentage of participation per housing unit and fraternities and sororities, Wright Hall gained possession from Slade with 47.5 per cent participation followed by Marsh and D Building L/L with 23.7 and 17.9 per cent respectively. ATO retained the fraternity trophy with 83.3 per cent participation followed closely by Alpha Gamma Rho and Theta Chi. In a similar fashion, Gamma Phi Beta retained the sorority trophy for a second semester with 87.5 per cent participation followed closely by Alpha Chi Omega and Delta Delta Delta.

The Fall, '74 blood drive will occur on a Monday – Wednesday, 3 day schedule in early October. So get those sleeves rolled up and watch for the advanced publicity.

Rev. John D. Perry Leaves Ministry

After nine years' service at the University of Vermont, the Reverend John D. Perry, Jr., has resigned as Protestant Chaplain effective at the end of the current semester. He will pursue research and teaching in Social Psychology during the coming year.

Reverend Perry came to UVM directly from Yale University Divinity School in 1965, where he majored in Campus Ministry. He was already a national authority on non-profit coffee houses, having conducted research on the topic for the National Council of Churches. His book, the Coffee House Ministry, was published in 1966 and has subsequently sold almost 20,000 copies.

For seven of the nine years Reverend Perry worked out of an office in St. Anselm's Chapel, on Redstone Campus. In his first [illegible] here, he organized [illegible]M tutoring Program [illegible] Big Brothers Program, served as advisor and director of the programs until 1970, when they were taken over by the Office of Volunteer Programs, which was formed at his urging.

In 1966 he organized and ran the Watertower Coffee House at St. Anselm's Chapel, which was for several years a popular Friday night activity on campus. Later he closed his coffeehouse and served as advisor to the Roundhouse Coffee House in Billings Center for its first year.

In 1968 he began work on a project of student evaluation of teaching, which culminated in The Albatross, published in 1970. The course critique project was then turned over to the University, but never successfully published. Reverend Perry's last official responsibility for the campus ministry is a revival of The Albatross, which is going on in many classes this week.

Also in 1967-68 Reverend Perry began leading various sensitivity and encounter groups at the Chapel and elsewhere on campus. That activity has culminated in the founding of The Center for Human Potential, in East Monkton, Vermont, two years ago. His center conducts a variety of growth and educational groups for students and others on a weekend basis. Several longer workshops will be held beginning this summer.

In 1970 he was one of the organizers of The Next Thing, a federally-funded drug education and alternatives project. He has served on the staff in various roles ever since.

The main reason for his leaving the campus ministry, according to Reverend Perry, is economic. American churches are no longer willing to afford the heavy subsidies which they have been paying for the campus ministry ever since World War II. The budget of the UVM ministry, he said, reached a high point of about $18,000 in 1970 and dropped after that. Last year it was down to about $14,000. He is being replaced by a student intern from a seminary on an annual basis, and a team of part-time, non-clergy workers.

Behind the economic problems, however, is another factor, according to Reverend Perry. Ever since the student radicals of the late 1960's, American churches have been suspicious of the University and its personnel. As money became tighter, campus ministry budgets were cut back.

Four Day

by Obie O'Neill-Butler

A questionnaire was written to find out the effects of the four day school week, during both the four days of actual school and the three remaining non-school days. The effects concerning academics were about the quality of instruction, grades, and the ability to absorb knowledge. All the questions were in relation to the previous fall semester, when there were five days of school and shorter class periods. The nonacademic questions concerned participation in certain winter types of recreation, such as down-hill skiing, walking and hiking, driving, and cross-country skiing.

The questionnaires were distributed through most of the campus dorms; the only two missed were Jeanne Mance and Robinson Experimental Dorm. The questionnaires were passed out to two floors in each dorm. Due to the unavailability of some students at the time of polling, there was about half a floor's response per dorm. Out of a total of 500 questionnaires the following results were obtained.

Out of a total of 500 questionnaires the following results were obtained.

QUESTION 2. About what percent of your time on Mondays (8 a.m. to 7 p.m.) is spent in the following activities? Studying Average -- 35.4 per cent; Recreation -- 36.4 per cent; Resting -- 28.2 per cent.

Sex. Male -- 232; Female -- 265.

QUESTION 9. How many hours are you carrying this semester? Average 16 hours.

QUESTION 10. Do you have a car? Yes -- 142; No -- 356; Total -- 498.

Live on campus? Yes -- 470; No -- 25; Total -- 495.

QUESTION 11. Would you like to see a four day school week next semester? Yes -- 353; No -- 138; Total -- 491.

The conclusions of this data show that a majority of the on-campus students liked the four day school week. Those students living on campus owning cars seemed to be traveling more. The amount of time spent participating in skiing, or in the gymnasium, or x-country skiing remained the same. Some of the students wrote in comments on the questionnaire; a large number of these read "I would have if there had been more snow." This could be part of the reason for no increase in the amount of time spent recreating with skis. There was a fairly significant increase in the amount of time spent hiking or walking. The distribution of students from different colleges was fairly even with the ratio of students enrolled in those colleges.

Students not only spent this newly acquired time on recreation but also spent 35 per cent of their time studying, and as a result a majority felt their grades had stayed the same or improved. They also felt that the quality of instruction had stayed the same or improved, by a majority. The ability of the student to absorb knowledge was fairly evenly matched between those that felt it had been impaired and those that felt that it remained the same.

Gary Laighman questioned the educational validity of extending classroom periods to seventy-five minutes, claiming that the attention spans of most students simply don't last that long. The freshman said he felt offended at not being asked to react to the administration's plan. Another student, in the same room, lamented, "Quite a courtesy, wasn't it?"

From these results it would seem that the student body had adjusted to this new four day school week with wide acceptance, as their response to the last question would verify.

Show Biz Meets Acedemia In The Lecture Hall

by Wyatt Kash

This somniferi species of student that spends his lectures drifting from sentence to sentence later to be read as unintelligible scribble that runs off the page -- it something every professor must contend with. Crashing out at four in the morning no doubt contributes to the nodding notetakers in the lecture hall. But in many cases, a lecturer's presentation can in itself be enough to sedate a whole platoon of students.

The problem of phlegmatic, colorless lectures is more than something to yawn about. Because style of presentation is given much less consideration in relation to the material presented, the learning potential of the lecture hall often diminishes to a level far below educational expectations. A dull presentation, no matter what the subject, means a reduced attention span and the material obviously suffers for it.

One possible remedy which has shown some progress is a (rather logical) mixture of academia and show biz. The concept is being tried at the University of Southern California where a new pilot program has recently been started by the dean of the School of Social Sciences and Communication, Donald Lewis.

"Schools have fallen down badly in teaching teachers how to teach," says Dean Lewis to the Wall Street Journal. "They give a guy a Ph.D. and turn him loose. So we're trying to merge the academic talents of the faculty with the theatrical talents of people whose business it is to command the attention of an audience."

In initiating the program, Dean Lewis enlisted the help of comedy writer-performer Eric Cohen (a USC alumnus) and actor-director Dick Schaal in staging a workshop at the university for a group of volunteer lecturers from several departments. Through the sessions, the teachers are learning the art of holding the audiences attention -- by employing various show business tricks and are developing their spontaneity and concentration. But the program takes dimension when show biz meets academia in the lecture hall.

The results, according to the same Wall Street Journal article, are encouraging:

Some 400 students settle unenthusiastically into their seats to hear a Prof. Edward Conolley give a psychology lecture on abnormal behavior. The professor gestures to the class. He then begins by relating a story about the head of his department who maintains a strict philosophy by which he refuses to lecture on any form of abnormal conduct without trying it himself. "Unfortunately, the arresting officer didn't see it that way," says a straight faced Professor Conolley. "The department head was caught in Ralph's (a local supermarket chain) exposing himself to the frozen turkeys."

Eyes light up and a surprised titter breaks the stagnant auditorium hush. Professor Conolley lecturers on, interjecting more gags into the otherwise serious text. It used to be that the devil was responsible for the aberrant actions of individuals, explains Conolley; who then adds, the White House seemingly holds the same notion in advancing its "minister force" theory. Quotes the Journal of Professor Conolley, "It was either the devil that caused the 18½-minute hum on the tapes or President Nixon was having a Mazda tuned in his office."

The Journal continues: The lecture goes on for nearly 2½ hours before Professor Conolley concludes by warning, "Though estimates vary statistically, about one in every three people is troubled. I'd like each of you to think of your two closest friends. If they both seem alright to you -- well, then you're the one."

Professor Conolley, who was rated below average as an instructor by 51 per cent of the students queried from his classes, while 18 per cent said he was "one of the worst" teachers they'd ever had, left the stage with a round of applause...a USC rarity.

Despite the encouraging results Dean Lewis has received, there is still a great deal of opposition from his colleagues to Lewis's plans to extend the project to a permanent campus center that would teach the faculty the art of presentation. They maintain that the students are going to an institution to learn and that the instructor should not have to do a song and dance routine in order to teach them. Apparently, the introduction to "show biz" threatens their standard of professionalism in education.

Though the process of educating has often treaded precariously beneath community and administrative approval, the innovative concept of Dean Lewis to enhance learning should receive a devoted recognition, at least. At least if a student fell asleep in a class taught by a professor indoctrinated in the art of yock 'n' is lecture, the professor would have a little defense.

chapel's design. This means that the cost of improving the organ in Ira Allen would have to include the cost of changing the chapel's interior.

Metcalfe and Chapman both feel that, although few students have taken organ lessons (only two this semester), with a new facility and this unusually fine instrument interest in instruction will increase dramatically. Metcalfe sees the organ as a drawing point for serious organ students in the East, stating that the organ will probably be the finest French baroque organ in the country. Metcalfe and Chapman both felt that the public relations value to the University would be immense. Dr. Chapman had already heard that many music and organ magazines and journals will cover and feature this new instrument. Chapman stated that a convention of organists had been planned in Burlington, with the focus of the conference being Vermont's new musical addition.

When asked about the sudden interest and support of Music at the University, Metcalfe replied that the interest has not been sudden but a growing awareness of some of the problems the department was facing and a growing interest in fine arts as a whole. He feels the University realized that the music department was under supported and is now in the midst of a catching-up process. Metcalfe pointed out that musical activity at UVM has increased tremendously in the past few years and he cited as examples the many performances given by the music department this year and the overflow of audiences at these events. "The University is doing for the arts what it has done for other areas of interest in the past."

Responding to a question as to the need for a new facility, Dr. Metcalfe stated that in the last five or six years, there has been a large increase in the enrollment of students in music courses and private instruction. Dr. Chapman concurred with this view and added that the present facilities were much too overcrowded. After the interview, this reporter looked over the present facilities and found tiny, crowded classrooms, few practice rooms; all of which had thin walls which allows one to hear someone practicing the piano on the second floor when down on the main floor. The building itself was in great need of repair. The students' views as to a new facility seem to be as optimistic and enthusiastic as the faculty and administration's. All the students questioned were happy to see the facility going up and thought it about time.

The Music Department appears to be actively involved with its own development. Dr. Metcalfe stated that four professors were involved in the planning process and on the study committee. When asked about student input in regard to the new center, there were discrepancies in the statements. Dr. Metcalfe stated that no students were active on the committee and he felt this was a mistake. Dr. Nick Muller, Director of the Living and Learning Center and Chairman of the Study Committee of the Music Center, claimed that two students were on the committee, but couldn't remember their names. Checking with Larry Synder, head of Administrative Support Services, this reporter found no students in the minutes or communication records of the committees. Dr. Patterson said that before any building is built at UVM, a study committee of students, faculty and administrators will look at the situation and develop plans and programs for the new facility.

As an added feature to the new music center, the Music Department is pushing for the establishment of a Bachelor of Music degree. Presently, no college or university in the state gives this degree. Metcalfe was reluctant to discuss the question because it is still being evaluated by various administrative and academic channels. It has, however, recently been passed unanimously by the College of Arts and Sciences and from here it must be passed by the Faculty Senate, the Council of Academic Deans, and finally, the Board of Trustees. Metcalfe emphasized the importance of the degree to the music program at UVM, and especially to Vermont students who have no where else in the state to earn the degree, which is considered "The" degree in music for an undergraduate to earn.

The Music Center will consist of expanded classrooms, nineteen practice rooms and professor's offices. There will be a recital hall in which the organ will be placed. The Chapel is presently the only place where the Music Department can hold public recitals and performances and this at times conflicts with other activities.

The facility is running about 45 days behind schedule and will hopefully be finished the second semester of next year. The organ will be installed in the summer months due to a contract clause which states the organ must be installed in complete and dust free conditions.

Big Burger — Meat Of The Matter

by Sig Haller

With the large number of fast food establishments already present in Burlington, it was a surprise to see a new hamburger eatery. The Big Burger follows in the tradition of the infamous "Lure" upon which its foundation is built. B. B. has the usual black and orange interior as well as blinding bright fluorescent lights. I am convinced that these colors and the whole shape of the establishment are used to subliminally affect the speed with which one eats.

Besides the usual selection of hamburgers, french fries, shakes, etc., Big Burger has a few items usually missing from a typical hamburger fast food franchise. These include onion rings, ice cream, steak sandwiches, hamwiches and hotdogs.

The ordering and cooking areas bustle with the activity of at least 15 employees, most of whom look like they were hired just to add color with their bright red and white shirts and hats. The service is courteous, pleasant, and fast. The ordering process is a nice change from other hamburger places because the food is cooked for you and it is given to you hot; no more packed goods cooked and waiting for you to arrive.

Now to the meat of the matter. This author and his eating companion sampled many items from the menu, unfortunately not all because of budget restraints and digestive quotas. This writer ordered a rib eye steak sandwich, a most unfortunate and expensive choice at 99 cents. The sandwich was tough, stringy and fell apart too easily while eating.

My companion, a notorious burger-hater, was pleasantly surprised with his Big Deal, an oversized patty of beef weighing one quarter of a pound when cooked. It was tasty with just enough special sauce. Special praise goes to the fresh lettuce and tomatoes that garnish this big burger.

The onion rings (which I recommend you stay away from) are bland and expensive at $.55. The other fried commodity on the menu, the french fries, were crisp, evenly salted and as grease-free as can be expected. The shakes are thick and tasty, but were a little warm for my liking.

For dessert: ice cream, which included the old favorite flavors of vanilla, chocolate chip, strawberry, coffee, and chocolate. Although not home-made, the ice cream and sugar cones team up to put a cool delightful finish to a meal or snack.

I was particularly impressed with the action that takes place if a long line develops. The people who take the orders come out from behind the counter, attach a microphone, and take orders from the line to cut down the wait considerably.

Green Mt. Wrestling Grabs First Place

by Randy Janson

The Green Mt. Wrestling Club took first place in the UVM Wrestling Intramural Tournament last Tuesday and Wednesday. The Green Mt. Wrestling Club, an independent team, took three firsts, one second, and one third. Delta Psi took second place with two firsts, two seconds and one third.

Even with the poor publicity there was a good showing of wrestling talent. Piche (GMWC) took first in the 130 lb. class after defeating Aleskofsky (SAE). Piche showed good knowledge of moves and with his speed was able to defeat his opponent.

In the 137 lb. class Barr (SAE) was the champion after two forfeits. Von Turkovich (GMWC) was victor in the 145 lb. class after Plomaritus (Wasted) failed to show up. In the sibling match at 152 lb. class, Mike Paquette (Delta Psi) defeated his brother Tom (Delta Psi). Jaasen (GMWC) was the champion of the 160 lb. class after wrestling Carpenter (GMWC) in an overtime match. Cronin (Delta Psi) vanquished Lubbers (Wasted) in the 167 lb. class.

The 177 lb. class produced Weinstock (Buckham) as the winner after the defeat of Dushe (Davis). In a fast moving contest Hughes (Harris-Millis) defeated Burns (Wasted). The heavyweight class was won by Grant (Davis) over Gladding (Delta Psi).

The Wrestling Tournament was hampered by poor planning and publicity. There were some good wrestlers who in the case of UVM Wrestling Team could form a good solid basis for it. The tournament was also hampered by contestants who signed up but failed to show up.

The Winning teams were: The Green Mountain Wrestling Club, Delta Psi, SAE, Davis Hall, Wasted (Independent team). Harris-Millis, ATO, Joe Barry's, and Buckham Hall were all tied.

that may be looked upon as consent.

A police officer may conduct a warrantless search incident to a lawful arrest. A search with warrant may not be resisted; but the warrant might be defective on its face by failing to properly identify what is to be found and where, or by not being properly issued. These are matters for your counsel to determine after the fact.

The Lie-Detector Test

You may be asked to take a polygraph examination (lie detector test) to establish your innocence. Decline such an examination until you have consulted with your attorney about the merits of doing so. The results (pass/fail) of such an examination are not presently admissible in court as proof of guilt or innocence. Your answers to the questions asked are admissible, may be recorded and will be used against you.

Polygraph examination results indicating innocence are often used by defense counsel to demonstrate to prosecutors that a criminal investigation should be discontinued or a charge nolle prossed (dropped for lack of prosecution). If the examination demonstrates his guilt, the prosecution will require him to plead guilty to the crime, which is frequently a prior condition of the test.

Testifying in Court

A person with knowledge of a criminal act may be required to testify as a witness and disclose his knowledge upon being granted by the State immunity from prosecution for knowledge of or involvement in said act.

If, after having been granted such immunity and ordered by the Court to testify, a witness refuses to do so, he may be jailed for contempt until such time as he chooses to so testify. It should be noted that a person who has knowledge of a felonious act has a duty to reveal such knowledge to the authorities; and it is considered to be a crime, misprisonment of a felony, if he does not do so.

Facts About Grass

If dope is in a car, all the occupants are presumed to be in possession. If you are walking down the street with someone who has it in a pocket somewhere, the presumption does not apply to you.

If you are in an apartment where dope is stored it must be proved that 1) you knew it was there, and 2) that you knew what it was.

QUESTION: How important is physical exercise really? I note that some students are jogging, walking everywhere, taking phys ed courses, playing tennis, etc. Others are riding the bus, sitting around most of the time and seem to do little exercise. What do you recommend?

ANSWER: Arguments can be found to support a number of positions on this question. Cosmetic factors aside, there are two compelling reasons for remaining in good physical shape. There are all sorts of activities that are fun to engage in but require some degree of stamina. And, practically speaking, there are advantages to being able to climb a few flights of stairs or walk a few blocks in a hurry without getting winded. Jogging, though, strikes me as being pure suffering which actually can be very dangerous for older people who are not very carefully supervised or who are not in good condition to start with. Anyway, going in circles and random scampering through streets never impressed me that much.

Another compelling reason for maintaining a reasonable level of physical activity is the strong suggestion that such activity has a beneficial effect on one's cardiovascular system. Modern society has deprived man of many of the normal types of physical activity which may have a protective effect against the development of certain types of heart disease.

QUESTION: I have had a full beard for about the last three years. Within the last year or so the skin under my beard has begun to itch and particles have occasionally flaked off. I shampoo the beard at least twice a week with special formula shampoos to relieve dandruff and while itching might be relieved for a few days, the skin under my beard still appears dry and flaky.

ANSWER: Obviously this is not a case of habitual sloppy eating of pea soup but rather a variation on the dry flaky scalp, a condition which is very common in the winter but which is not dandruff. In the past, the cure I have recommended is to periodically fertilize one's scalp with olive oil and wrap one's head in hot wet towels for a couple of hours followed by washing the whole thing out with a mild shampoo. Some shampoo products on the market tend to be so drying that they only make the condition worse, so be careful.

I am sure the olive oil deal would work well on your face but there is a less odoriferous alternative. Wash your beard thoroughly and vigorously massage your face getting rid of as many of the flakes as you can. After you dry your face apply a moisturizing lotion and run it into the skin. Any common run-of-the-mill moisturizing lotion sold to apply to hands and body should work fine but you might want to get the least perfumed one available.

QUESTION: My problem is that my hair grows abnormally slowly. In fact, it has grown a total of an inch and a half in the last five months. When I comb my hair, a light colored substance accumulates on my comb and also gets under my fingernails when I scratch my head. Anti-dandruff shampoos do no good. Could my slow growing hair and messed up comb be related?

ANSWER: There are some medical conditions in which hair will grow very slowly or in which it will break off before it gets very long. One such condition is hypothyroidism, or low thyroid function. This is usually associated with dry hair, dry skin and fatigue as well as discomfort in cold weather. The scalp condition you describe could also go along with this.

On the other hand, there are some fungus infections of the scalp which certainly could effect the length of the hair and produce a similar situation. Some people naturally have hair that grows very slowly and there is no cause for alarm and no medical condition associated with it. If there are serious concerns about hair or scalp conditions, the best person to see would be a dermatologist who would be prepared to check out your thyroid status as well as examine your scalp and perform proper tests on any material you scrape up. In your situation, I would urge you to see such a physician.

QUESTION: Could you please give me some information about migraine headaches? For instance what is the cause and can going on the birth control pill six months ago have any effect upon the onset of my first migraine headache? I have heard that they are a sign of intelligence, is there any truth to this? Do they have to do with tension? Are there any hereditary factors?

ANSWER: Migraine headaches are caused by a disturbance of function of small arteries in and outside of the head which results in an unusual constriction followed by painful enlargement of the arteries. These headaches typically are preceded by visual changes, including flashing lights and blind spots, as well as by certain sensory changes such as numbness in a hand or leg. The headache itself pulses and is usually restricted to one side of the head. Many of these headaches are extremely mild and easily stopped by aspirin or other medication at the first signs of the headache but, sometimes they are very severe and disabling. They are often associated with nausea and vomiting. There is a familial pattern and many sufferers have the headache when they are under pressure or when they are tense. Migraine is an unlikely sign of intelligence but one would expect them to be more common in striving, success-oriented people.

There appears to be a fairly definite increase in incidence of migrainous headaches in women taking the birth control pill. Women with preexisting mild migraine have had severe attacks with the pill and the headache has appeared for the first time in many women after they began the pill. Many physicians feel that the presence of migraine headache is a contraindication to the use of the birth control pill.

QUESTION: Can the regular use of tampons stretch the opening of the hymen? In other words, can the virginal hymen change in size to become that of the non-virginal hymen through the use of tampons?

ANSWER: The use of tampons does result in some stretching of the hymeneal opening. However, the degree of stretching is mild and is not to the same extent as appears in a woman who is having regular sexual intercourse.

The use of tampons has become tremendously widespread in the last twenty to twenty-five years, having all sorts of advantages in terms of neatness, cleanliness and convenience. There is no reason why the virginal girl or woman with normal anatomy cannot use tampons. In fact, if she has difficulty inserting the tampon, this would be reason enough to visit a physician for a pelvic examination.

The mild hymeneal stretching that occurs through the use of tampons over a period of several years probably reduces considerably the likelihood of painful first intercourse.

QUESTION: In my semen I have quite a few small translucent jelly like particles. Is this any cause for alarm?

ANSWER: No. Semen is made up of a small amount of sperm and larger amounts of secretions produced by the seminal vesicles and the prostate gland. It should come as no surprise to you that there are people who have studied the stuff very carefully. They report that the prostate, among other things, contributes two enzymes to the ejaculate. One of the enzymes causes coagulation and the other causes liquifaction of the semen after several minutes of time. These substances are added to the semen in the last milliseconds before ejaculation. Most likely, you are observing normal coagulated semen. Consistency of semen varies somewhat depending on the frequency of ejaculation and the degree of sexual excitement, among other things.

QUESTION: Recently, while filling out a medical history for a job application, I came upon this question: "Do you have a hernia or loose rings?" What are loose rings?

ANSWER: The rings referred to are not found on fingers, but are the inguinal rings. These are the anatomic structures through which most hernias protrude. They are in the lower abdomen above the inguinal area and in men is the place through which the testes descended into the scrotal sac from inside the abdomen very early in development. Comparable structures exist in women.

The term hernia generally refers to a loop of intestine protruding through any opening in the abdominal wall. Loose rings are merely a vernacular expression for a somewhat widened inguinal opening without there actually being a hernia present.

UVM Tennis Team Captures Yankee Conference Crown

by Peter MacAusland

Last weekend, the UVM tennis team captured the Yankee Conference Tennis Championships, defeating tough competition from UConn and UMass Vermont, which last won the championship eight years ago, dethroned UMass, title holder for the last four years.

Under the leadership of Coach Hal Greig and Captain Bob Merritt, the Vermont team exhibited excellent match play throughout the tournament. In the singles competition, Kirk Dice, Jay Moorhead, Dick Hilmer and Kevin Delaney reached the finals in their respective flights by decisive victories. In the singles finals competition, Dick Hilmer won in straight sets 7-5, 7-5 to capture the number 4 singles championship. Kirk Dice lost to George Illrich of UConn in three sets at the number one flight. Don Douglas of UMass defeated Jay Moorhead at the number two flight in three sets, with a double match point in the third set tie-breaker.

After the singles competition, Vermont earned 10 points, trailing UConn, which had 12 points. Yet the doubles competition gained the victory for Vermont. In all three flights, the UVM doubles teams reached the finals and in the process collected 6 more points. Going into the final round, Vermont held 16 points with UConn and UMass close behind with 14 points each. The number one doubles team, Dick Hilmer and Jay Moorhead defeated the UMass team of Bob Scheiser and Douglas in straight sets, 6-4, 6-4 to win their flight championship. The number 2 team of Kirk Dice and Tom Lenci trounced UMass by a score of 6-2, 6-2. It was this match that clinched the title for Vermont. At the third doubles, Kevin Delaney and Peter MacAusland of Vermont lost to New Hampshire 6-2, 6-2 after beating the UMass third doubles by a score of 6-2, 6-0. The final tally was 18 points for Vermont, 14 points each for UMass and UConn, 9 points for New Hampshire, and Rhode Island and Maine collecting a few points each.

In winning the Yankee Conference Title, Vermont climaxed a successful season. The team record is at 7-1, with a close loss to Middlebury, 5-4. Vermont beat Middlebury 8-1 earlier in the season. Next year looks just as good as most players will be returning. Several of the players will be competing for Vermont at the New Englands in mid-May at Dartmouth.

Lettermen's Dinner

Tickets for the annual Senior Lettermen's Dinner, sponsored by the University's Centennial Club, are now available at the Athletic Ticket Office, Patrick Gym (Room 206). The dinner is set for May 4 at the Acropolis Restaurant (60 Pearl St., Essex Jct.), beginning at 6:30 p.m. The public is welcome.

Women Undefeated

The UVM Women's Softball team extended their winning streak by two more games (they're now 3-0) as they beat Castleton in both games of their doubleheader at Castleton, 11-9 the first game, and 9-2 the second game. Offensively, UVM was led in the first game by Howie Howrigan and Anne Quantrell, with Barb Pulling the winning pitcher. In the second game, UVM was led by Jenny Raney, Howie Howrigan and Yvonne Ouist. The winning pitcher in this game was Louise Riche.

Golf Team Wins Championship

Paced by freshmen the UVM golf team won its third straight State Golf Championship held Sunday at the Middlebury College Golf Course. In the closest match in years, UVM defeated the 2nd place Norwich Cadets by a slim three stroke margin, 414-417. One stroke back was St. Michaels at 418 with the host Middlebury College Panthers bringing up the rear with a 421.

UVM's young team was paced by freshman Andy Morse who shot a tournament low 76 on the windswept course. Morse's 76 was enough to beat his high school teammate, Middlebury freshman, Rod Bicknell who fired a 2nd place 80. Finishing fourth was UVM freshman Dave Gaffney who's strong 82 insured Vermont's defense of the state golf crown. A doubtful performer, because of a hand injury, sophomore Craig Myote, did very well, shooting an 86.

The inexperienced team featuring three freshmen and no seniors are now playing in the New Englands today and Friday held at the Manchester C.C. in Manchester, N.H.

Alumni-Varsity Football Clash

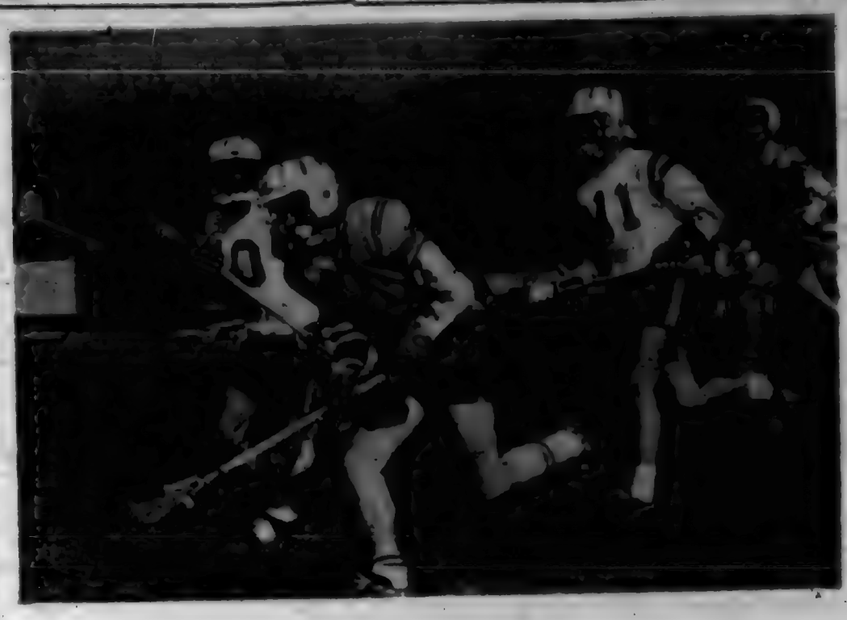
Several alumni football players, including 16 from this year's senior class, will square off against the varsity, May 4, in the fourth annual Alumni-Varsity football game. Joining the alumni squad for the first time are All Yankee conference wide receiver, Tony Jones; tackles Mark Rowse, Bill Rudkin, John Hemphill and Peter Trono; Fullback Steve Conn; defensive backs Frank Luisi and Mark Delorme; quarterback Frank Baczek; offensive guard David Hibma; tight end Craig Erikson; defensive ends Dave Brown, John Anderson and Bob Brand; and linebackers Glenn Martel and Glenn Thigpen. "We expect that all these seniors will be ready to go for the game, resting some of us older alumni," said Denis Blanck ('65) chairman of this year's game.

Some of the older alumni expected back for the traditional game are center Joe Albanese ('66), Dick Hebert ('67), flanker; defensive end Ron Tice ('69), quarterback Scott Fitz ('66); Gene Monahan ('70), one of the top receivers ever at Vermont; quarter back-running back Fran Peterson ('70), an All-Yankee Conference pick in 1969; Charlie Russo ('72), defensive tackle; George Oelze ('65), premier tackle from the mid-60's; linebacker Rich Rostowsky ('73), All-New England pick in 1972 and Jeff Kuhman ('68), tight end, a former Denver Bronco draftee.

Also signed up to play are Den Martin ('68), offensive guard and All-Yankee Conference in 1966; Paul Walker ('72), defensive back; fullback Carl Ettlinger ('65); defensive tackle Gary Holtz ('73); Jack Pelcher ('72), defensive back and running back; Bill Bonczek ('71), an offensive tackle; field goal specialist and quarterback, Paul Jakubielski ('73) and Bob Miller ('72), defensive tackle. Tickets for the game are available at the Patrick Gymnasium, Room 206.

Alumni Allstars May Meet UVM Baseball Club

Several names have been added to the alumni baseball list, as the alumni prepares for its game with the UVM club baseball team, May 4, at 9:30 a.m. Such former stars as All-Yankee Conference and All-New England pitcher, Dick Cassani ('63); All-Yankee Conference outfielder Dave Wayne ('66); relief pitcher and current CVU mentor, Bill Christie ('65) and All-YanCon infielder, Bob Cronin ('66), have expressed an interest in the game. The game, scheduled for Centennial Field, is open to the public and there is no charge.



Laccrosse Club Wins Two!

by Peter Campbell

The Lacrosse Club picked up two unusual wins Monday to make their first season. The first win was by default. St. Michaels, whom they were supposed to oppose, never showed up. A quick call to their coach confirmed that he thought the game was the next day.

In order to utilize the $90 dollars they had spent for the two referees, the team divided themselves in half and had a fine scrimmage. That was the second win, because, as one team member put it, "No matter how you look at it, UVM won." It should be noted that Coach "Odie" Odeira helped the losing team by letting in six goals. Gradual chaos ensued as the team members tried out each other's positions, but it was a lot of fun.

After the game, the team moved up to St. Anselm's for a hot dog and beer feast, and gave out awards.

The "Most Valuable Player" and "Highest Scorer" awards went to Gil Lowe, a freshman from Providence, Rhode Island; the "Most Points" award (goals, plus assists) went to Gary Watts, a junior from Centerport, New York; "Most Improved Player" was awarded to Sheldon Roesche, a sophomore from Pennington, New Jersey, and "Most Valuable Drinker" went to Howard Burrows.

The "Golden Jock" award was given to Ken Bartlett, who, it was explained, in the last part of the fourth quarter, when UVM was losing by eleven points to Springfield College asked Chaplain Odeira, "How are we doing Coach?"

The team also gave the Coach a couple of presents as "a token of their appreciation" for all the time and effort he put into coaching UVM's first Lacrosse team.

Interest Growing In Women's Lacrosse

The girls' lacrosse team at UVM has been an official collegiate team sport for five years. The 1974 season began in mid-March with practices in Southwick Gym and in the Gutterson Field House. Though the team has been in existence for a number of years, many of the girls that turned out for practice were new at the sport.

This year the team is coached by Nancy Edson, who previously coached lacrosse at Rosemary Hall in Connecticut. Along with player-coach Ann Margolis, Edson had the team prepared for their tough season opener against Castleton State College. Last Friday the girls lost at Castleton in an action-packed game, 13-7. Down 9-2 at the half, the UVM girls played an offensive second-half battle.

Girls' lacrosse differs in many aspects from men's lacrosse. There are 12 members on a team, lining up in a vertical positioning from goal to goal. The game is a fast and gracefully paced game. There is no body checking or rough stick checking allowed, and therefore no padding is necessary. Starting off with a center draw the game runs for two twenty-five minute halves, with no time outs. There are no boundaries on the girls' lacrosse field, except those designed by the officials.

On Friday, the girls meet Middlebury in their first home game. In past years, Middlebury has had a strong team, and the UVM girls are preparing for a tough game. All games are played on Southwick Field.

This year's schedule runs into exam week, with the last game on May 7 away at Plymouth State in New Hampshire. The girls are looking forward to a successful season, and hopefully next year they will be able to increase the number of games.

Crowding Moves UVM To Seek Trinity Housing For Freshmen

by Barbara Frankel

The Office of Residence Halls faced with its yearly dilemma of overcrowding, has decided to try a new approach this fall. In an effort to avoid placing freshmen and transfer students in triples and floor changes, the Housing Office has decided to rent space from neighboring Trinity College.

Although this year's freshman class will be smaller than last year's, the Housing Office has still experienced vast overcrowding. According to Dr. Keith Miser, Director of the Housing Office, approximately 500 upperclassmen have elected to move back on campus this semester.

In order to alleviate this problem, UVM will rent two floors of McAuley Hall at Trinity College. Freshmen women will be placed there and will have to follow the dormitory rules of Trinity College. Dr. Miser explained, however, that the rules do not differ greatly from UVM dormitory rules. The only substantial difference is in the matter of parietals. All UVM dormitories now offer 24 hour visiting privileges, as of last year, Trinity College only offered parietals from noon to one a.m. There is a possibility that Trinity may switch to 24 hour parietals this year.

At this time, it is unknown whether or not UVM will be able to rent additional space in Burgess Hall, where many female freshmen were housed last year. Officials of the hospital which owns Burgess feel the space occupied by the girls should now be utilized for administrative purposes.

Many incoming freshmen men will be housed on the third floor of Christie Hall, which was purposely left vacant during room choosing in order to secure a place for the expected overflow of students.

The Wing-Davis-Wilks complex will also be changed this year. Wing Hall will remain entirely female, while Davis Hall will become coed by floors. The big change will occur in Wilks Hall, where floors will be coed by wings. Separate bathrooms will exist for men and women. Converse Hall may be closed during the second semester, because of extensive repairs which are needed. All upperclassmen who chose to live in Converse Hall were notified of this during room choosing. The August Board of Trustees meeting will determine whether or not repairs will begin in January.

Redstone Hall, which closed last October because of possible hazardous fumes, will not open in September, as had been previously hoped. Last spring, the Trustees overruled a decision to leave Redstone unoccupied and unrenovated because of the expenses involved in making it meet all health codes. The Housing Office has therefore proceded with its plans to restore Redstone to its historical beauty. They hope to have it open for residency by the second semester.

The new SAGA meal plan will go into effect in September. Plans are still being negotiated for students to be able to eat at the Given and Allied Health Buildings. The new system involves the use of coupons. Students who own a meal ticket must purchase a base plan of 840 coupons (420 per semester) at $494. Additionally, students can buy extra coupons in books of 140 for $28. Dr. Miser hopes that the girls who will live at Trinity will be able to eat at both schools. Trinity College also uses SAGA food service.

Fire Blazes In Patrick Gym: Water Damage, But No Injuries

by Rick Steinberg

On Monday morning, June 17, a chlorine fire erupted in the basement of the Roy L. Patrick Gymnasium. The two alarm fire lasted for several hours and was finally extinguished at 2:42 p.m. There was no extensive fire damage, but putting out the fire created considerable water damage. Two firemen were treated at Medical Center Hospital for irritated eyes caused by noxious fumes.

The fire was caused by a chemical reaction in the concrete storageroom where barrels of chlorine powder are stored for Forbush Pool. Marcel Pigeon, a buildings and grounds superintendent, was removing chlorine powder from one of the barrels when it suddenly exploded and burst into flames. The fire was self-generated, and was sustained due to the moisture in the air. Pigeon escaped uninjured.

There was no exact figure placed on the damage and it will be a matter of time before the total damage can be measured. There was flooding in the lockerrooms, the cage, and in the handball and squash courts. The water in the courts could be costly. The water has caused the floors to buckle slightly and should the problem intensify, the floors would have to be totally replaced.

There was also damage in the Hall of Fame room, but fortunately no irreplaceable trophies or records were damaged. The walls in the room were slightly charred, the rug was torn and tiles on the ceiling were broken. Work is now under way to repair the room.

The fire also knocked out telephone service in the gymnasium for several weeks, but it is now in working order.

In an effort to avoid a similar mishap, the university will switch to liquid chlorine. An automatic injection system will be built into the filtration system precluding the possibility of a similar fire.

Freshmen To Attend Week-Long Orientation

by John Van Hoesen

Students will be at ease in a mandatory freshmen orientation program from August 26 - September 2, according to Gerry Bellush, a co-ordinator of the program.

Some 1800 freshmen will attend the week-long program which the coordinator called, "a preview of academic, social, cultural, and community activities."

Unlike previous orientation sessions, Orientation '74 is primarily concerned with advising and academics. "The University has got to make advising a priority," Nancy Magnus, also a coordinator of orientation said. Students will meet with their advisors on August 27 and 28.

Academic departments will sponsor open houses and lectures on various topics. There will be lectures on hypnosis and autosuggestion and workshops ranging from meditation to communication and theater.

Many other changes in the traditional orientation program have been implemented. To iron out what the coordinators called housing problems, they said that students will take their year long housing assignment at orientation.

Students this year have pre-enrolled by mail to avoid long registration lines at Patrick Gym. Earlier this summer, freshmen received a packet of departmental requirements for specific majors and suggested semester courses to begin a major.

Special events for freshmen are scheduled for the week. Freshmen may attend movies, dinners, mixers, barbeques and bike trips. Festivities will end on September 2. All students will begin classes on September 3.

Should freshmen have summer jobs through September 2, Magnus told the Cynic that the orientation committee would attempt to iron out conflicts with the students' employers.

AFT Supports National Labor Appeal

by Kathy Stiassni

The American Federation of Teachers has recently agreed to support an appeal of the National Labor Relations Board decision stating that UVM does not come under the National Labor Relations Act. The initial NLRB decision, which disclaimed jurisdiction over UVM employees, came from the regional office in Boston. Thus, the new appeal is being filed to the Washington Board which has assured local union members that it "will try to give a quick decision."

At present, the faculty union is "in limbo" explained Mark Kessler, a professor of psychology and active union member. He pointed out that UVM employees are exempt from protection under both the State Employee's Labor Relations Act and the National Labor Relations Act. The state colleges, such as Johnson, do qualify for protection from the state law, which means "in essence that UVM is not a state university," according to Mr. Kessler. He feels that UVM's exclusion from state jurisdiction was an oversight. However, he feels it is an oversight which must be compensated.

In April the John Dewey Federation filed unfair labor practice charges against the University. The charges were aimed at a series of discriminatory actions on the part of the administration which prevented the union from meeting on campus, using campus mailing privileges, and publishing opinions in This Week. However, since the union was exempt from protection under a state or national law, these charges were dismissed.

It is necessary that the faculty union come under the jurisdiction of either a state or national law, in order to establish a collective bargaining unit. Union members have assurances from the state education committee that they will be accepted under the state law in the event that national protection fails to materialize. Unfortunately, these technical delays have interrupted the momentum of the recruitment process. The union membership has stayed at 80 or 90 members. Although one doesn't have to be a member of the union to be part of the bargaining unit, the petition to initiate collective bargaining must represent one third of the total unit. At UVM the petition must have approximately 200 signatures to reach this one third ratio. Right now it has reached the half-way mark.

The initial decision of UVM's local union to join forces with the American Teacher's Federation created potentially a new atmosphere for the discussion and determination of issues such as salaries, tenure, professional standards, and academic freedom. However, there are misconceptions as to who controls the local unit. Union members urge that the AFT's role is supportive, not dictatorial and furthermore that ultimately faculty here will control the union by joining and becoming involved. The AFT imposes only two policies, firstly that the local unit hold democratic elections and secondly that there be no discrimination among members. All other policies are decided by local members.

University Applications Continue To Rise

by John Van Hoesen

While the University attempts to limit its enrollment, the number of applications for admission continues to rise, according to Director of Admissions, Richard Steele.

"I just can't believe it will last forever," Steele said, concerning the rise in applications. "It is the largest number of applications we've ever had." Applications (including transfers) for 1974-75 reached 11,500, the director said.

However, in keeping with the administrative five-year plan to limit university growth, Steele added, "we will do everything we can to keep the growth of the institution level. The director said his office would enroll about 1700 freshmen for 1974-75. Last year the University enrolled over 2000 freshmen.

Freshmen applications alone have increased 18 per cent this year, according to Steele. He reported that the largest part of that increase is due to an increase in out-of-state applications. Over the last three years the University experienced a 46 per cent increase in freshmen applications.

Steele told the Cynic why there are more applications each year. "We have a number of unique features here. The big city universities are suffering partly because of bad student experiences. We are close to the mountains, the lake, and we are in a beautiful city. The increase is very closely linked to the reputation we've established."

The University of Vermont has one of the highest ratios of total applications to places available in state universities and land-grant colleges, according to a national association survey of admissions performed in March of this year.

Of all the colleges surveyed by the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges (NASULGC) the University of Vermont had the largest increase in out-of-state applications. UVM ranked fifth in increases in total applications.

The UVM Court Case

The School Law Newsletter recently cited two cases dealing with "Student Fees and the Law." One of these cases dealt with UVM, where the legality of the student activity fee was challenged. The other case concerns the University of Nebraska and the constitutionality of their mandatory student fee.

In this case, the University of Vermont charged a $21.50 student activity fee as a condition of enrollment. The fee was collected by the University and allocated by the student association. Several students objected to the mandatory student fee on the grounds that it forced them to support radical causes. Further, they objected to the funds being used to support a speakers' bureau, the campus newspaper, and a film series which they claimed to be repugnant to "loyal and patriotic citizens." The students filed suit in the county court which found the mandatory student fee to be unconstitutional. The University appealed to the Supreme Court of Vermont which reversed the county court decision and upheld the University. The state court pointed out that the campus must remain a free marketplace of ideas, and simply because ideas are controversial and disagreeable does not necessarily make them non-educational. Thus, according to this court, the students' rights were not violated. Lace v. University of Vermont, 303 A. 2d 475 (Sup. Court Vermont 73).

In this case, a student challenged the constitutionality of a mandatory student activity fee of $51.50 per semester at the University of Nebraska. Among other things, the fees were used to subsidize the campus newspaper, the student association, and the speakers' program. The student argued that he opposed the philosophy of many of the speakers brought to the campus and the editorial policy of the newspaper. He contended that the mandatory nature of the activity fee forced him to become associated with philosophies repugnant to his own and thereby violated his constitutional rights of freedom of religion, speech, press, and association. In upholding the University's right to assess such fees, the court ruled that a state is free to adopt such educational philosophy as it chooses and that it had embraced a philosophy that the education of students extends beyond the classroom. Thus, according to this court, the student's rights were not violated.

Cat's Tale Near Completion

The Cat's Tale will soon be a reality as finishing touches are being made to the book before its trip to the printer. A word of thanks goes out to these people as well as the Student Association, Orientation Committee, Family Associates, Inter-Residence Association and the Public Relations Office for contributing financially to the cause.

The handbook should be a useful guide to the campus and the community for both the new student and those already familiar with UVM. You can pick one up at the Billings Center Information Desk upon your return from the summer.

Student Admissions Representatives

The UVM Admissions Office is looking for qualified undergraduates as Student Admissions Representatives.

Student Admissions Representatives will be interviewing prospective students who request to talk with someone on a one-to-one basis. The interviews will be informal and non-evaluative in nature, giving the prospective student a chance to ask questions about undergraduate life at UVM. The interviews will be scheduled for week days when regular classes are in session.

Each Representative will be responsible for interviewing approximately one or two hours every week.

A Student Admissions Representative must be someone who knows about UVM and would enjoy meeting and helping prospective new students. Finally, he or she must be willing to assume full responsibility for performing this important service.

Twenty students will be selected. If interested, write before fall semester to: Carol Kenison, Admissions Office, Clement House, UVM, Burlington, Vt. 05401.

Contact the office for an interview upon arrival for the Fall semester.

Revisions In Gutterson

Officials at the University of Vermont on June 8 announced that construction of new seats for the Gutterson hockey rink will take place this fall. The new seats, the same as in the end zone section, will provide every fan with an unobstructed view of the game.

"Although we will lose approximately 150 seats along the sides, the important factor is that every seat in the house will be a good one," said Denis Lambert, UVM's Director of Athletics. The new Gutterson Fieldhouse capacity will be 3,450.

Announcement on season ticket books (reserve and general admission) will be made soon by the University's Athletic Ticket Office.

Conference On Citizenship

For some time, students in Indiana and other states have been working with the National Conference on Citizenship -- an organization chartered by Congress to promote citizen involvement in politics and government. They have been concerned with policy and with program development, and they have been able to make a significant difference in this organization's activities.

To help continue this work, they are sponsoring the 29th Annual National Conference on Citizenship, to be help in Washington, D.C., on September 13, 14 and 15, 1974. Students from twenty states attended last year's meeting.

The focus of the 1974 Conference will be on New Citizen Action for Better Government. Among those being invited to address the group, which is expected to number more than 1,000, are Vice President Gerald Ford, Senator Edward Kennedy, Father Theodore Hesburgh, Dorothy Height, William Buckley, Jesse Jackson, and Alexander Bickel. There will be workshops on effective means for getting citizens involved, with special emphasis on students and younger voters. Perhaps most importantly, there will be a representative assembly to set the future course of the National Conference.

why does a man join Maryknoll?

There are probably as many answers as there are individual Maryknoll priests and Brothers. Some men are deeply moved when they hear of babies dying in their mother's arms because of hunger or disease. Others are distressed by the growing antagonism and separation between the rich and the poor nations. More are concerned about the great injustices that have been inflicted upon the poor by those who possess wealth and power to an excessive degree. Others look to learn from peoples who have grown up with a different mentality than that which is theirs. All feel that the only solution to the crises that threaten to split men asunder is the love of God as shown in the life of His Son, Jesus Christ. This love of God urges men to go forward and be missioners so men can love one another. What could be your reason for joining Maryknoll?

If you keep saying you want to do something with your life – here's your chance to prove it

Trustees A

At the June 1 Board of Trustees meeting, President Edward Andrews presented the balanced university budget for fiscal year 1975, which begins July 1, 1974 and continues through the last day of June, 1975. The budget was approved by the Board.

The budget of $54 million represents a $5.1 million increase over the revised budget of $48.9 million for the current fiscal year, which ends June 30. the Board also gave its approval to that revision.

Approval of the university budget for the next fiscal year came quickly in spite of a prolonged debate at the meeting Friday (May 31) of the Board's finance and budget committee, which finally recommended approval at the full Board meeting on June 1.

At the Friday committee meeting, Trustees Daniel Burke of Rye, N.Y. and Paul Low of Harrison, N.Y. discussed projected fiscal hard times, tuition increase and the spectre of declining state tax revenues.

The debate was triggered in part by a "rough projection" of the budget for fiscal year 1976 presented by Dr. Andrews. That preliminary budget anticipates severe fiscal problems, and Dr. Low repeated at the Saturday meeting his concern that university costs and revenues are "chasing each other."

Dr. Andrews had stated earlier that the projection for fiscal year 1976 offers only the parameters for that year's budget.

The budget for the coming fiscal year, as approved by the Board, incorporates surpluses totaling $1.423 million. Of that amount, $323,000 is a surplus accrued in fiscal year 1973 and "carried through" the current fiscal year, plus a surplus of $1.1 million in the budget of the current fiscal year.

Reporting for the Board's investment committee chairman Howard A. Allen, Jr. of Burlington noted that his committee heard Friday a lengthy report from officials of Jennison Associates Capital Corporation of New York City, which manages an investment portfolio of some $5 million for the University. Trustees Approve 1975 Budget

At the June 1 Board of Trustees meeting, President Edward Andrews presented the balanced university budget for fiscal year 1975, which begins July 1, 1974 and continues through the last day of June, 1975. The budget was approved by the Board.

The budget of $54 million represents a $5.1 million increase over the revised budget of $48.9 million for the current fiscal year, which ends June 30; the Board also gave its approval to that revision.

Approval of the university budget for the next fiscal year came quickly in spite of a prolonged debate at the meeting Friday (May 31) of the Board's finance and budget committee, which finally recommended approval at the full Board meeting on June 1.

At the Friday committee meeting, Trustees Daniel Burke of Rye, N.Y. and Paul Low of Harrison, N.Y. discussed projected fiscal hard times, tuition increase and the spectre of declining state tax revenues.

The debate was triggered in part by a "rough projection" of the budget for fiscal year 1976 presented by Dr. Andrews. That preliminary budget anticipates severe fiscal problems, and Dr. Low repeated at the Saturday meeting his concern that university costs and revenues are "chasing each other."

Dr. Andrews had stated earlier that the projection for fiscal year 1976 offers only the parameters for that year's budget.

The budget for the coming fiscal year, as approved by the Board, incorporates surpluses totaling $1.423 million. Of that amount, $323,000 is a surplus accrued in fiscal year 1973 and "carried through" the current fiscal year, plus a surplus of $1.1 million in the budget of the current fiscal year.

Reporting for the Board's investment committee chairman Howard A. Allen Jr. of Burlington, noted that his committee heard Friday a lengthy report from officials of Jennison Associates Capital Corporation of New York City, which manages an investment portfolio of some $5 million for the University. Recent declines in the value of the portfolio were accounted for by Jennison Director John Hobbs and managing director John Hagler who tentatively predicted improvement in market conditions.

Trustee Allen also noted that University Treasurer George N. Clerkin and his assistant Gordon Paterson had developed "weekend investments" which netted the University some $9,000 in a typical weekend.

Other fiscal good news was offered by Trustee Burke, reporting for the Alumni development and external affairs committee, who said that "most of our annual funds are ahead of last year." He noted that Vermont ETV has already raised $72,000 of its current fund-raising goal of $82,000.

The Board authorized a "letter of interest" to the Roman Catholic Diocese of Burlington in case it should decide to sell its property at 52 Williams St., now the Chancery Office of the Diocese.

A similar letter will be sent to the American Red Cross Blood Center expressing the University's possible interest in the event the Center decides to sell its headquarters property on Mansfield Ave.

Several of the University's oldest buildings are in line for renovation according to a buildings and grounds committee report accepted by the Board, which also said "yes" to the committee's recommendation to take the next step in the construction of a pedestrian underpass on upper Main St.

Converse Hall, a student residence adjacent to Given Medical Building, may be renovated after a feasibility study approved by the Board, which will examine the cost of bringing the 1895 residence hall up to current fire and safety standards.

The Board also approved contracts for engineering services, and gave its approval to award a construction contract with State approval, for Phase II of a central Heating Plant design which would utilize the plant, located behind the Royall Tyler Theatre, to supplement the heating system in Given Medical Building.

Approval was also given to the University administration to award engineering and design contracts for the upper Main St. pedestrian underpass and, with State approval, to award the construction contract to the successful bidder.

At the urging of Scott B. Bauer of Essex Junction, a UVM student, the resolution was amended to appoint a subcommittee of the Board which will review the final design before the construction contract is awarded.

Proctor M. Lovell, director of administrative support services, ran down a list of renovation project progress reports for the Board:

Southwick Hall music addition; "about 90 days behind schedule because they encountered some ledge that had to be blasted, but the classrooms and practice rooms should be ready to occupy by the second semester of next year."

Renovation of the old Art Building adjacent to Votey Building; "We'll have quotes on this project next week" on the cost of renovating the building to house the Pringle Herbarium, classrooms and textile laboratories.

The student infirmary; "They're ready to start the first of July and should be done at the end of the year" in renovation of the former municipal nursing home on East Ave.

Proposed expansion of the Patrick-Forbush Gymnasium; "We're in the preliminary stages of planning."

In the midst of gloomy financial predictions the Board welcomed the opportunity to accept gifts to the University amounting to $497,984, and grants totaling $1,068,227.

During discussion of the fiscal year 1975 budget and the presentation of "parameters" for the fiscal year 1976 budget Dr. Low urged that evaluation of the University's major problems be included in future budget consideration.

Prof. Wilfred Roth, Chairman of Electrical Engineering and of the Faculty Senate, rose to ask that faculty be included in the evaluation process, and that Trustees "look also at the more difficult part of the equation — the value to society" of the various programs.

Trustee Francis Peisch of Burlington responded positively, outlining the financial difficulties facing higher education in the state, and asked "What would you do?"

NSA Holds Annual Congress

The National Student Association is holding its annual congress in St. Louis from August 18 through the 24.

The congress is literally an "information explosion" — NSA's Larry Friedman calls it an "instant university" — and provides a wealth of background material and contacts to help in dealing with today's issues in higher education: from women's and minority rights to collective bargaining, student lobbying to tenure, educational innovation to academic governance.

Autocratic Expansion

A new semester will soon begin, with the usual hopes and ideals for our University. Yet the basic problem which torments and splits this University remains. UVM is still run by a handful of bureaucrats who seek little or no input from the members of the student body and faculty.

The situation has been further augmented by a new policy, implemented this year. In the past, the process for review of non-tenured faculty members began in early September and ended in mid-December. Now, supposedly to let professors know earlier about their job situation, the administration begins the process in late April and hopes to finish by November.

The earlier deadline has not helped the situation. It has, instead, taken away an important avenue of input for those who review faculty appointments. The first step in evaluating a professor is the report of the professor's Dean. This was the level at which students and faculty members were permitted to have a minimal effect on the Dean's decision. Now, even this slight privilege has been taken away from us.

During the summer months, the majority of students and faculty members are not in Burlington. By the time we return in the fall, the decision on rehiring professors will have reached a high administrative level. At the upper echelons, it is impossible to have any student or faculty input.

Last year, this sad fact was evidenced by the controversial case of the three fired philosophy professors. Despite heavy support from their peers and their students, Professors Anderson, Paskow and Rice will not teach at UVM this fall.

The present reviewing situation only makes matters worse. This university has become known for its lack of proper standards in judging the teaching staff. With student and faculty input further eliminated, the autocratic atmosphere can only expand.

Poll Tax

To the Editor:

For the first time in 20 years a disabled person living with an aged parent has received a poll tax bill from the town of Putney – and 1,000 other Vermonters may be in a similar situation.

The reason seems to be that the law and administrative procedure have lagged.

By law the state welfare office is required to provide the listers with the names of persons receiving aid to the aged, blind or disabled, and thus eligible for poll tax exemption.

This year the Federal Social Security Administration assumed responsibility for the total income of about 1,000 persons of the 6,000 who were getting this kind of aid.

Thus the 1,000 persons were no longer on the state lists and as a consequence have not been reported to the towns. Their incomes are not necessarily great, but they are not automatically eligible for the exemption.

By poll tax time next year the situation will be corrected administratively, a Social Welfare Department spokesman told me.

But in the meantime, the law does provide for poll tax exemption for persons "actually poor," whether they get state aid or not.

But the individual must appeal for exemption through the town clerk.

If earlier this year the person was getting aid, that information can be released by his request if the State Welfare Department Regional Office is asked.

An individual or family getting aid through other programs could also use that fact, when verified, to justify poll tax exemption.

In the meantime, some of us will work again in 1975 to get the poll tax repealed.

Bureaucrats And Lobbyists

To the Editor:

Flowers, both wild and domesticated, are plentiful enough this season for two BOUQUETS I suggest.

The first bouquet is for BUREAUCRATS.

As a member of the Vermont House I got a hot letter from Dow Fullam of Westminster, protesting the resignation of the chief biologist of the Vermont Fish and Game Department because the "bureaucrat" is too frustrated by legislative interference with deer heard management.

It is "our" government and our legislature which are supposed to represent the popular judgment, but I believe that trained, experienced public servants deserve a lot of credit for taking the guff they do.

Too often citizens have firm opinions on subjects about which they know very little.

Too often legislators try to make decisions in technical areas without even listening to the persons who day-in and day-out work with the problems and with the persons affected.

I believe in popular government but it is not the persons we hire (or elect) and can fire who are our consistent enemies – but those who because of private power in big corporations can work against majority interests with only government to check them. If your business is big enough, competition does not restrain.

So bouquets to our public servants.

The other final bouquet is for LOBBYISTS – not the ones who work hard and long and too often successfully for narrow interests – but for paid and unpaid persons in the League of Women Voters and Vermont Public Interest Research Group.

Sometimes these citizen lobbies make legislators uncomfortable, and sometimes their medium gets derided – but they supply not only facts on issues like child dental needs or prescription drug prices, they also provide examples for us amateur lawmakers.

Many persons do seek the good of the greater number.

Your readers can certainly find others who deserve bouquets – and give them.

Destruction

To the Editor:

I don't know how to let you know how frustrated I am by the actions of a few students toward the model of the Burlington Waterfront which was on display in the Living/Learning Center.

I was one of the two or three people who worked for more than six months building that model. We didn't design Urban Renewal, we just represented it. Someone who didn't like the idea of Urban Renewal and its design (who does?) felt that they would be justified in expressing themselves by writing on the model, and others, probably through curiosity, poked their fingers and fingernails into the high-density styrofoam of which the buildings on the model were made.

Whether or not anyone likes the design of the model really doesn't matter. The model is important for its own sake. Just the fact that it exists has brought a lot of people and organizations together to discuss fixing up the waterfront. I am happy to say that the prospects look better all the time.

Not to mention the damage done to the model (which represents thousands of dollars worth of materials and labor), just the fact that somtone would do such a thing at UVM is personally embarrassing to me, being a student myself. It would be nice if we students wouldn't keep proving that anti-university sentiments on the part of some townspeople are justified.

Sincerely,
Sandy Post '75

What's It All About?

by Jeff Ryback

The years pile up one upon the other gradually adding bulk to our bodies and minds. Along the way we stumble over a myriad of sign posts urging us on this way or pointing to the new horizons that will supposedly quench the unanswerables of existence. Then a quick look back and that first job pumping gas comes to mind; maybe it was the answer??? Hell no, it was like all those other menial jobs, an ephemeral attraction but hardly appetizing enough to satiate the unrelenting hunger to find that special niche. And before long we find ourselves plopped in the middle of an intersection perplexed with the awesome decision: college or work. And the decision is no easy one, for unlike the past where college was deemed necessary to satisfy the age old adage, "we're all in this to make a buck" hardly applies. So a freshman finds himself one bright September day staring into the lifeless green eyes of Ira Allen pondering the question of what university life is all about.

Indeed, why go to college? Is it for the sake of a good paying job? To date jobs for graduates are increasingly difficult to find and it's hard to beat a crane operator's fifteen dollars an hour. Perhaps it's prestige or maybe the social pressures? But how can one answer the typical Burlington Free Press ad: "beautiful three room apartment for rent – students need not apply." Is it because students are so [illegible] discriminated against? Even if a student is able to find suitable accommodations more often than naught he is exploited with exorbitant rates forcing him to find roommates. Well, if college is not for jobs or prestige, maybe it's main function is as a stepping stone to a professional school (medical, dental, etc.)? Agreed, if the past is any indication, pre-meds generally attain the highest grade point averages and, to some minds, realize the total educational possibilities. But how does "total educational possibilities" answer psychologists claims that retainment of between 8 and 10 per cent of the knowledge encountered in college classifies one as a genius (unless there are thousands of geniuses running around). Further, having suffered the pre-med route myself, the drive for a grade becomes so intense that "cut throat tactics" (eg. cheating, bludgeoning professors for a grade, stealing reserved books, etc.) actually prevents the recognition of the most important reason for attending the university, namely the development of awareness. In fact, it is no secret that many of our devoted 4.00 parrots consider themselves outside the problems of not only the university but of the country itself. Obviously there is no claim here nor justification that "bookers" lack the perspicacity of "non-bookers," indeed the gist of this argument aims directly towards the integration of knowledge into interpreting the real world (and your campus in particular). For of what use is a mass of words when they lead to no assimilation towards improving the quality of life?

To be specific about the importance of developing an acumen of awareness one need only examine the apathy last year's student body displayed towards university and national problems. The purging of three instructors from the philosophy department, for example, though well publicized on these pages hardly angered more than a handful of students. And John Franco's series, "Watergate in Waterman," while raising a number of serious questions concerning corruptive possibilities in the administration seemed to manifest a mere smidgen of enthusiastic student support. In fact, most read the headlines and immediately decided the Cynic was gimmicking again. This raises the questions of the relevance of a university paper; for whether the philosophy trio were at fault or whether administrative malfeasance existed (or exists) matters little to the concept of "newspaper," rather, the facts are presented and "you, the college community" assume the responsibility of reading, interpreting, and deciding on courses of action. One might say it is similar to judging good art: there are reasons why a work is considered excellent or poor but it takes the development of a certain awareness or criteria to justify such determinations.

On the national level, it is unlikely any half thinking individual can refute the premise that corruption in the federal government is unprecedented. Yet, unlike the sixties where policy was forced to endure the scrutiny of the young intellectuals, a general student disinterest seems to prevail. Again, reason points to a loss of "awareness." Thus, those programs and ideas which should be regarded as obvious priorities (i.e. moral priorities) continue to stagnate in the muck of dormancy; simply put, "students just don't care anymore!"

So to you entering the university for the first time, pick up the staff of responsibility. For it is up to you to carry on the traditional roll of the young intellectual. It is up to you to study, examine, dissect, and finally to act for the betterment of mankind. And some day the rich harvest purported as America will share its abundance with all men.

The Cynic welcomes letters and columns from students, faculty, or any other readers. Materials for publication must be signed, but names will be withheld upon request.

Religious Fads: Alternative Solutions?

This article is written for people who won't read it and are unconcerned with their inability to get along with a troubled world. We talk about answers, about people and groups who claim to have answers to questions about the meaning of life, people and groups who propose solutions or means of individual and social salvation.

The established denominational religions propose definite means of dealing with instability and stress. Yet other organizations deviate from their opinions. We plan to focus specifically on three less firmly rooted groups in Burlington which deal with problems by appealing to spiritual or subconscious levels of the mind.

Within the past five years Americans have been swept up by the phenomenon of transcendental meditation, as taught by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi. Presently, there are 150,000 meditating, approximately 250 of which are at UVM. Why is it so popular? TM is recognized as a "way of coping," a simple way to reduce tension. Its releasing basis for inefficiency, and the negative tendencies due to the accumulation of stress enable the individual to realize new potential within themselves.

It's a cure-all, with a price. The technique, the practical tool of meditation is taught in a four day course which costs families $200, non students, $125, college students, $65 and high school students $55.

"Anyone can meditate, the only stipulation being that one must be able to keep a secret." The secret refers to the word or mantra which is the vehicle of the meditation process. When the mind is cleared of everything except the mantra, a trance follows. Apparently no two mantras are the same and for some inexplainable reason saying one's mantra out loud destroys the magic of the word. Mantras are distributed in private, secretive incense-laden rituals between the meditator and his instructor. Mantras come in a variety of prices and depending on who you are (see breakdown above).

After the short course one is on his own. Meditators are encouraged to return to the learning center for a follow-up session maybe once a month.

However, TM isn't an organization with followers, nor is it a belief or religion. "It would have fewer people if it were thought of as a religion," according to one of the TM teachers at the 308 Main St. Burlington center. Its appeal lies in its insistence on individuality. In its refusal to proscribe a life style. Once one is meditating there is no real need for meditators to congregate or to worship a teacher. Meditators do not look upon Maharishi as a charismatic leader. His teachings are respected, yet people develop individually as a result of them.

"...it beats the hell out of two stiff scotches," commented a California lobbyist and lawyer Reed in answer to queries about his involvement with transcendental meditation. TM is a simple mental exercise which is practiced for a few minutes morning and evening as one sits comfortably with eyes closed. It may be thought of as an experience where one goes beyond thought, where one's mind realizes subtler states or sources of thought. It is a fourth consciousness of "restful alertness" which is as natural to man as the other three physiologically defined states – wakefulness, dreaming, and deep sleep. TM may be distinguished from all other techniques which involve effort, control, hypnosis, or autosuggestion. It is a process of direct experience rather than one of intellectual analysis.

In today's contemporary society where people are challenged by increasing stress aspirations are realized more rapidly than capabilities. Meditation is filling this vacuum by motivating sources of energy or movement and intelligence or direction. While intelligence is a basic quality of existence exemplified in the purpose and order of change, creativity is the cause of change. Maharishi has evolved the science of creative intelligence which has the ability to extricate and stimulate every human being's innate source of energy, intelligence and happiness.

The science of creative intelligence has been lauded by scientists and educators. Scientific investigation has found that during the period of transcendental meditation oxygen consumption, carbon dioxide elimination, cardiac output, heart rate and respiratory rate significantly decrease. The metabolic rate is reduced by an average of 16 percent. Skin resistance, a measure of relaxation, increases markedly.

TM has been experimented with in mental institutions. It is the first repeatable procedure for reliably contacting the latent resources of the mind. The previous lack of a reproducible method has hindered the unfolding of mental potential in psychiatry and psychotherapy.

TM is also a trend setter in education. It has loftily been ascribed as an interdisciplinary science able to forge the links connecting specialized disciplines. It is an "interconnection," a "foundation," a "basis," a "nexus," a "unification" in the words of many of the nation's educators. It is the key to balanced development and happiness. It is the key, it is the key... Enter, self-esteem, and self-actualization.

"Even some newspaper reporters, those ultimate cynics and skeptics, are beginning to meditate," according to an article in The San Francisco Examiner.

Many groups, today, who have an alternative for alienation from society, whether they be concerned with altered states of consciousness or religious faith are struggling to set themselves up in the limelights of education and science. They are seeking mass popularity. They need the support of society's intelligencia. Reverend Moon, the founder of the Unification Church and the "New Hope for Christianity." The face superimposed on a dairy farmer in the Cynic's April Fools Issue is trying to hold hands with the "ivory towers" of education. He hopes to establish his Divine Principle or reinterpretation of the bible as a system of education. The members of the movement in Burlington have a center on George Street and an organization called C.A.P.E., the Collegiate Association for Principled Education. C.A.P.E. has lectures regularly on Tuesday nights in Billings and holds workshops for those who are anxious to expand their understanding of alternative methods of believing and living. The Unification Church is now sponsoring International leadership seminars at which distinguished Political Scientists, Historians, Scientists, Economists, and Sociologists will lecture on the relation of religion to other topics as a foundation for good leadership and world harmony.

Many of us have met members of the Unification Church in dorms, classroom buildings and streets, most probably during the mass invasion earlier this past February. Reverend Moon claims to have been divinely guided and instilled with a sense of mission. The followers of the movement regard him with a sense of awe. As one accepts the divine principle, one gains an appreciation of Reverend Moon, for he is a living representation of many of the ideas about the messiah which are expressed in the principle and as such is vital to the growth of this movement. Although Reverend Moon is heralded world-wide as a religious prophet, he has also dabbled quite successfully in entrepenurial activities. He has made a small fortune producing and marketing Jin Sing tea – a special drink which is meant to be spiritually uplifting. This unique concoction sells for $12.00 a 6 oz. bottle, and can be found in most health food stores.

The student reaction to Reverend Moon's mass proselytization was an angry uncordial one. There were several angry letters to the Vermont Cynic and Burlington Free Press from distraught UVM students and Burlington citizens. It was felt that Reverend Moon's followers had "worn out their welcome," while one student expressed more directly the sentiments of many, that the followers were "pains in the ass." He continued, "Perhaps the fact that many of these fanatics didn't even speak English epitomized their alienation with UVM and the greater Burlington community. I believe most everyone had the experience of running into the lady who insisted she was going to cry if you didn't take one of her tickets. Others insisted on walking into people's rooms without even knocking." Even the religious leaders on campus drew up a statement against proselytization in order to protect themselves from disfavor and a stereotype mold of religious people.

Reverend Moon's movement is not very popular in Burlington. There aren't more than 20 members. He has a goal of bringing 8,000 new members into the movement this year as a result of the Day of Hope tour, a series of talks nationwide. We sincerely doubt that UVM will make a significant contribution towards increasing membership. Membership in the Unification Church involves a greater committment than the four day transcendental meditation course. Members are strongly urged to move into the communal center on George Street and to drop out of school. They must regard themselves as people chosen by God to provide a communicative link with man. They have been directed towards the movement to help Reverend Moon carry out God's mission of saving mankind. The Divine Principle is considered a unique answer to the problems of mankind in that it deals with questions of the meaning of life and of the meaninglessness we are experiencing today. Thus the lifestyles of members are dictated by the leaders of the movement. Followers must proselytize, raise funds, teach the principle to others and continue to study it intensively themselves. They are sacrificing themselves, placing their implicit faith in Reverend Moon and God.

Many of the ideas expressed in the Divine Principle are quite similar to the basic tenets of the Judeo-Christian

Whether or not anyone likes the design of the model really doesn't matter. The model is important for its own sake. Just the fact that it exists has brought a lot of people and organizations together to discuss fixing up the waterfront. I am happy to say that the prospects look better all the time.

Not to mention the damage done to the model (which represents thousands of dollars worth of materials and labor), just the fact that someone would do such a thing at UVM is personally embarrassing to me, being a student myself. It would be nice if we students wouldn't keep proving that anti-university sentiments on the part of some townspeople are justified.

The Bar Review: Curtain Call

Plagued with alternating humidity and precipitation, both serious and deficient have returned to the summer re-runs of Easy Ed's Daycare Camp. Like the fickle local weather, the crowds vary in the ham.

Few reports have come over the wire from TBR's Massachusetts correspondent, suggesting that the cultural life of Worcester textile mills have been satisfactory. Notes kept on several roving minions to the Hanover-White River Junction area are intact and unsubpoenaed. However, as some may know, is the home of Dartmouth College, alma mater of Nelson Rockefeller, Michael Corleone, and Dr. Seuss. Hanover's main street is, of course, Main Street, an attractive block-or-so of stores, restaurants, and offices with the acquired quaintness of a rural Cambridge. Research (of three nights duration) into the existence of suitable area roadhouses yielded a decision to assess the compiled data at the bar of the Holiday Inn in White River Junction. Upon the seminar's completion, TBR and guest critics headed for Woodstock and a dollar-and-a-half admission to the finest motion picture theatre in existence.

Regarding Hanover, it should be noted that the major bar in town, Peter Christian's, is equipped with a blackboard, chalk, and erasers in the gentlemen 's lavatory. Some investigation back in Burlington revealed that such an innovation is being considered here. Cave painting by-the-numbers.

One of Hanover's redeeming features is the Hopkins Center, a magnificent facility housing Dartmouth's fine arts and music programs. Aside from its great attractiveness, the Hopkins is constructed in such a way that one can easily reach the bar at the Hanover Inn next door without getting frozen or soaked in inclement weather.

Hopkins is a sharp contrast to the arts at UVM. Camp Catamount's are scattered into departmental fiefdoms placed in strategic hamlets here and there in keeping with the local tradition of loosely-confederated departmental nation states that all await the coming of a Garibaldi, Bismarck, or Jefferson Davis. Meanwhile, Hopkins, Dartmouth's showplace, makes one wonder where the Grantwriters were on coffee break when planning for the fine arts was going on at UVM. Perhaps the Waterman mandarins can furnish substantial empirical evidence that creativity simmers best on separate burners.

From speculation, TBR turns to actual news in the fine arts and natural sciences. Most have noted the existence of Burlington's answer to the San Andreas Fault located between the Old Mill and Morrill Hall. This geologic occurrence surprised many observers, especially in the Old Mill, who have named it the Feidner Fault. Few know that a special scientific team from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology investigated this "trench" and have concluded that any substantial earth tremors within a five hundred mile radius may have the effect of enlarging it to such an extent as to separate Waterman from the remaining campus.

On the subject of the sciences, the endangered species list now contains the alligator as the symbol of Youvecreatyle. The familiar Lacoste shirt is no longer imported and the all-cotton knit is now generally unavailable throughout New England.

IMPEACHMENT NEWS

Several readers have requested TBR's opinion on the ... currently underway in the District of Columbia.

As Mr. St. Clair's client's case has travelled to the upper limits of the appellate jurisdiction, TBR has sought the advice of several independent analysts the columnists have relied upon in the past.

Back when TBR readily patronized these outside consultants, business was good, but not as good as now. Ever alert to the prospects of a new service industry, the general public has been driven by inflation to the doorstep of the bookmaker.

A phone call to the Newark, N. J. area revealed that Bookie Benny had retired from the U.S. Postal Service where as a suburban mailman he earned more taking numbers bets than he did as a letter carrier, including Christmas gifts and tips along the route. He is enjoying his retirement and spending a great deal of his leisure time at cultural events at Aqueduct and Monmouth Park this summer. While he enjoys equine competition more than political, he rated impeachment of Mr. St. Clair's client as a "dark horse." Even considering an unfavorable outcome from the Supreme Court, Benny noted that the odds against impeachment were greater than the occasion when this writer, while junior in high school, lost twenty dollars on a Nova Scotia-bred two-year-old named Ethier in the horse's first race at the Big A.

The long distance bill increased again; this time to Boston's lush North End. His wife answered the phone, saying she would have him call back when he returned. When he did call back, Sean the Greek proceeded to evade the impeachment question by recounting his activities of the past three years. He had married a lady he met at On The Rocks in East Falmouth during a trip to the Cape to avoid paying off some bets four years ago. Six months later, the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Massachusetts admitted him to graduate work at the Lewisburg Federal Penetentiary for his advanced work in income tax evasion. Serving two-and-a-half years of a five year sentence, Sean the Greek demonstrated his rehabilitation and was released in time to enroll in several computer courses at M.I.T. Still involved in the applications of probability to computers, Sean has toed the straight-and-narrow since prison. Instead of bookmaking, Sean now invests heavily in petroleum company stocks. Since he feels the Justice Department shares a party line with him to this day, Sean roundaboutly suggested that betting on impeachment will yield the same as betting against Secretariat last summer.

You pays your money and you takes your choice. TBR, despite dissents from two of the finest consultant handicappers in the Northeast, feels a successful impeachment has better odds than Benny and Sean the Greek will admit. However, we can't imagine Eric Severeid at the two dollar window either.

THAT RAREST OF ALL SPECIALISTS

Under news less relevant to life at the top of College St., some readers may recollect this column's frequent references to a character named George Frazier. At least thirty UVM students are wandering around convinced that George Frazier is the heavyweight who took a decision from Muhammed Ali back in '71. (Or so they were led to believe by a professor who found a recent Bar Review convenient to analyze in class one day last semester.)

George Frazier was never a professional boxer. He may have engaged in a few bar room brawls in his time though, probably observing Marquis of Queensbury rules. He was not an NBA player either.

George Frazier was a columnist for the Boston Globe. In the preceding Bar Review, we suggested frequent readings of Frazier's columns. That was in early May. The last column Frazier wrote for the Globe appeared April 17. Two months later, George Frazier died in a Cambridge hospital several days after his sixty-third birthday.

If one read Frazier once and immediately liked him, one was undoubtedly wrong in their opinion. One reading of Frazier would lead anyone to conclude that Frazier was a specialist in the area he was writing about. So, a reading of one of the columns where Robert Redford was commended for the damage he did to The Great Gatsby would convince the infrequent reader that Frazier was a movie critic.

Frazier's interests went far beyond those of the run-of-the-mill columnist. Merely writing a newspaper column was enough specialization for him. In one column, he could recount the perils of a train ride from Boston to Marblehead one Sunday when the conductor, familiar with Frazier's opinions-in-print concerning people who wear white socks, mustered up to the columnist to display his.

In another article, this published in the Saturday Evening Post, George Frazier provided a brilliant analysis of The Great Gatsby (Fitzgerald's, not Redford's).

Despite a diversity of interests, George Frazier avoided dilletantism. His writing was passionately involved with his subjects with a knowledge of subject usually equal to the passion. His last article in the Globe was a loud praise for a Village Voice article by Jack Newfield investigating judicial corruption in New York City courts, hardly a "normal" interest for a Harvard-educated Boston Irishman who hung around fancy Manhattan night clubs. But Frazier cared about the future of American print journalism and did what he could to encourage younger journalists, the only hope against those who file their stories in front of a videotape camera when the red light goes on; the extemporaneous thirty-second report made without ever setting pen to paper; easily produced, easily digested, and just as easily forgotten.

His critics usually accused Frazier of deftly-worded cheap shots. Frazier usually replied by suggesting that his critics concern themselves with doing their homework, making their beds daily, and going to bed early. When asked his opinion of a former editor, Frazier said that the gentleman merited being called a "prick", however Frazier felt that such a use of the word would result in the word getting a bad name.

Another memorable Frazier occurred last year in "Making Dean's List." Not a reminiscence of his undergraduate days, it was Frazier's reaction to discovering his membership on the famous White House Enemies List. (Dean, if you'll remember, was a former member of the Executive Office Buildings' team of Little Rascals... Sammy Glick gone-to-Brooks Brothers spilling the beans to the Senate Watergate Committee while his wife sat primly nearby looking like a Glamour magazine advertisement" for nosejobs.) Frazier's reaction to his election as an enemy of

of you,
my heart and stomach
are one.
They churn together
as if thrown in a tumbler
but they do not shine.

Thinking that there is a chance it walking down dingy corridors alone, trying to tell yourself that you are not lonely.

Everyone sees a man deep in thought.
His watery eyes are stone cold as he gazes.
His face reflects an absence of emotion.
And when he is asked he speaks one word.

A word which is mundanely common to others but which is strangely exotic to his ears.
One word.

The word has chilled his heart and has toasted his body warm.
The word has broken him and made him whole again.

Now he hears it ever so often.
Sometimes it crashes upon his ears like cymbals and sometimes it delicately touches him as pealing silver bells from the churchyard.

The Freshman Flood

by Scott MacKay

Though still hung over from last semester's inebriated efforts at The Bar Review (TBR), yours truly will nonetheless attempt to get it together sufficiently to again churn out a column once every week or so. With this issue, my partner at TBR is departing, hopefully for greener pastures, and thus the format of The Cynic's weekly idiot sheet will be altered somewhat. More significantly, we won't deal exclusively with gin mills, but will also delve into other Campus Concerns – i.e. this semester I plan to write about any goddamn insane item that burrows its way inside my foggy, contorted mind. In deference to the burgeoning Women's Liberation movement at UVM, which last semester hit the campus with the same impact as a lone Tirefly attempting to illuminate Shea Stadium so the Mets could play a night game, this writer parried with the idea of replacing my TBR co-conspirator with a member of the fairer sex. Alas, this effort has ignominously failed, mainly because we couldn't dig up a woman who let us buy her breakfast after a hard night of research at Burlington's numerous watering holes. I remain convinced that Groovy U. could use less Women's Liberation and infinitely more liberated women. (That one ought to rate us being called at least a few choice expletive deleteds.)

Confronted with this infernal, inexorable timetable I am working under – this is being composed in the heat of a July tenth evening – we can only conjecture what Camp Catamount will bring come September. Yet, I believe we have unearthed an event that never really changes, a perennial autumn happening that can be forecasted as accurately as the leaves falling by November, or another losing football season: The Arrival of the Frosh.

Now there are many campus locations from which to observe the Freshman Flood, including the great views from WDW's parking lot and the Redstone Green, but the best vantage point this writer has discovered is anywhere in the vicinity of the Harris-Millis, Living/Learning and M.A.T. "residence halls." From here, one can gape at a virtual three ring circus. You have your choice of the caged-rats about to enter that maze known as Harris-Millis, where anyone who can find the bathrooms by the end of September ought to automatically be elevated to Dean's list status. Or perhaps you prefer the austere look of M.A.T., that living testimony to the theory that the same architects who built all those dreadful, decaying Harlem Public Housing Projects in the 1950's always get hired by State Universities to design dormitories. And for the pseudo-Aristocrats we have Living/Learning. The Garden Apartments, where even the guys who run the place have advanced degrees in cocktail party chatter. Boy, will Suburbia love Living/Learning.

So, pick out a good seat, arm oneself with a six of brew and some of that fine Columbian that has been floating around the Queen City of late, and watch the Suburban Arrival Show, Brought to you by the class of '78.

The sun percolates through the perpetually overcast Northern Vermont sky, glistening down upon the New Jersey, New York and Connecticut license-plated Cadillacs and rustic wood panelled LTD Country Squire Station Wagons meandering their way up Williston Road towards Camp Catamount. Lots of M.D. letters on those mud-speckled license plates. A few pick-up trucks... Vermonters, of course.

The parking lot is full now as the Suburban Susies and Johnnies, shadowed by little sister, sternly supervised by Mommy and Daddy, meekly disembark from the overloaded Station Wagon. The deluge begins.

The doors of the air-conditioned gas guzzler open as the accouterments (effulents?) of life in Larchmont, Long Island, Wellesley, Shaker Heights, Darien, Scarsdale, Short Hills and Woodstock are unloaded. Out pour electric hair dryer-stylers-curlers that will never suffice to shroud that terminal acne case acquired by a steady McDonald's diet, stereos to drive roommates beserk with, bicycles that can only be ridden one lousy month of the whole wintry Camp Catamount year, gold-framed Senior Prom/yearbook pictures of that soon to be forgotten high school honey, those new Rossignols that won't see Stowe's slopes because the lift ticket funds went for Tequilla Sunrises at Hannibals', and Daddy's thoughtful high-school graduation present of an electric typewriter... dammit, doesn't Daddy know elementary education majors don't need typewriters and that he should have conjured up some practical, utilitarian gift... like a birth-control pill prescription. These Surburban Susies and Johnnies don't want to do what Daddy's done all his life, but they sure as hell want him to keep on doing it!

Mommy nervously inhales another Salem into her rapidly aging lungs and readies her make-up for the trek into the Dorm. The Society that relishes tossing Forty-second street, two-bit prostitutes in the slammer somehow never caught up with the Surburban Housewife. But, then again, she doesn't work cheap; Split-Levels, charge accounts, LTD Station Wagons, country clubs and even Valium prescriptions are all very expensive items, what with the prime rate over twelve percent and all...

Once inside the dorm, inspection of the cinder-block cell immediately becomes secondary to that common arrival apprehension, that tremulous moment, known as meeting the Roommate. Now Camp Catamount, you'll have to understand, is as adept at creating mis-matches in freshmen roomies as Peter Salzberg is at scheduling basketball opponents... lest we forget Barry Cohen one-on-one versus David Thompson. Housing always seems to put the lithe young Queen of the Prom, right off the High School Cheerleading Line in the same room with the bra-less, stoned hipster woman who started attending Anti-War rallies on Boston Common about the same time the cheerleader had her debut rah-rahing at Spaulding High football games. It's a perfect match. Chicago meets Jefferson Airplane, those new skirts get hung in the same closet with eight pair of faded Levis, Rod McKuen says hello to Allen Ginsberg. The Congregational Church Harvest Supper casts a supercilious stare at the Bar Mitzvah. Summer as an A&W Root Beer Stand waitress meets Summer sampling Hashish in Amsterdam. The Student Council Social Committee warily eyes the local N.O.W. coordinator, Virgin naively wonders where boyfriend from B.U. will be sleeping this weekend. Nursing manuals get

"The Stuff That Dreams Are Made Of"

Champlain Shakespeare Festival:
The Tempest: Feidner'sTouch Succeeds

by Peter Campbell

The sixteenth season of the Champlain Shakespeare Festival is off and running with a very-spirited and very good Tempest.

The Tempest is not one of my Shakespeare favorites. Written just before retirement, this play is a sophisticated blend of fantasy, philosophy, and humour. It lacks those transcendental moments of raw emotion that mark many of Shakespeare's earlier plays. The Tempest escapes being trite, because, as always in Shakespeare, the words sparkle forth like mountain water.

The Tempest is under the dubious category of "tragi-comedy," and the director, Ed Feidner, has predictably opted for the latter element. The players are decked out in turn of the century costumes, and they use derringers instead of stilettoes. This little bit of novelty took a few moments getting used to, but it became enjoyable as the play proceeded. The costumes helped create a brisk atmosphere of tongue-in-cheek-modern but-not-too-modern ambience. This "Your Father's Mustache" (and some cutting, I believe) diminished the more philosophical moments in the play, but that was balanced by an imaginative and technically perfect production.

John Milligan set the tone by playing Prospero with a light touch. He and Ariel, played by Andrew Jones, were very good together. Jones' deft gymnastics helped give him the illusion of being a spirit, while, at the other end of the spectrum, Robert Rovin was excellent as the lowly and wretched Caliban. His scenes with Stephano and Trinculo were very nice; the audience responded to their antics with real gut-level laughter, and Dennis Liscomb, as Trinculo parodied Charlie Chaplin quite well... to list the attributes of each actor might be tedious, so I will just say that all were good. Only Miranda, played by Stephanie Satie, seemed awkward. Her lines were fine, but I believe a softer characterization would have been more fitting.

The only ineffective scene was the marriage blessing with Ceres, Juno, and Iris. It was slow, and did not fit in with the faster gait of the other scenes. Otherwise, good comedy and some dazzling magic effects combine to make Ed Feidner's Tempest very appealing entertainment, even for those not well acquainted with the great Bard's plays.

The relative success of The Tempest indicated that this year's Festival is blessed with some very professional acting and a creative stage crew to support them. I am just waiting to see if they can bring off the more complex Cymbeline and Hamlet as handily. I hope so.

Loving and Free
Kiki Dee
Rocket–MCA 395

Very rarely does a debut album cause as much advance speculation and commotion. Rumors that Elton John and company would be performing on Kiki Dee's first Rocket release, coupled with an excellent single, Amoureuse, drawn from the album, won the favors and hopes of American listeners and critics alike. And now, surprise! Loving and Free is out, containing numbers that'll spin your head. The album is co-produced by Clive Franks and Elton John, and includes session men Dee Murray, Davey Johnstone, and Nigel Olsson, the crux of John's back-up band. The selections from the album include compositions by Kiki herself, as well as contributions from Elton John and Bernie Taupin, Jackson Browne, and Joe Egan with Gerry Rafferty, of Stealer's Wheel.

Despite the credits, and the incredible list of contributors, Loving and Free fully belongs to Kiki Dee. She's pure, she's simple, and her honest, earnest approach to lyricism and expression, her appreciation for inflection and phrasing help bring Loving and Free into the limelight as an intimate and perfect collection. Kiki can keep time with the best of the rockers, to which Supercool is testament, and yet remain mellow when called upon, best demonstrated in the title tune and Amoureuse. When it comes to production numbers, Lonnie and Josie and Sugar On the Floor among them, Kiki Dee comes alive with talent, timing, and the attitude of a professional. She has more range, and more facets to her music than either Baez or Collins, and yet finds no need to trespass on the grounds of Bonnie Raitt or Maria Muldaur. It's a middle of the road position, lived with spunk, spark, and integrity. Her delivery of original material offers a glimpse of an artist desiring to write, perform, and express herself well, while delivery of contributed material portrays creative interpretation, acute perception, and understanding. Kiki Dee isn't coy – she's blunt, forward, and on the line. Loving and Free is one of the best new albums of 1974, and certainly won't be the final word from a girl who's got everything, and deserves it!

Straight Ahead
Brian Auger & The Oblivion Express
RCA APL1-0454 – $5.98

Auger's last album, Closer To It! is the epitome of a see-saw career. 1968 saw Auger as the driving force behind contemporary British jazz. His masterful structure and keyboard jive is best displayed by Streetnoise, his two-disc set with Julie Driscoll and the Trinity. The 'in-between' albums, a category which includes numbers injected with all that funk and boogie bayou rockers could ever hope for. Call Me The Breeze includes an Al Kooper horn arrangement, while Second Helping itself is not only produced, but recorded and mixed by Kooper, as well. The looseness of the material is not an inherent trait of the music. It's the result of accomplished musicianship. Ya gotta be good before ya can be loose, and still make it work. Lynyrd Skynyrd's Second Helping is all of the above.

Better Land and Second Wind, demonstrated sore attempts at transition from British underground to American overground.

Auger is becoming the master of Easy Listening jazz. Samba influenced instrumentals, punctuated with Lettermen vocals is a mix that would turn few heads, until those heads heard songs like Inner City Blues, You'll Stay In My Heart, and Bumpin' On Sunset. Auger still has it!? He's a talented man with delicate sensitivity for simple-minded lyrics, offset by complex, tribal rhythms. Straight Ahead's opener, Beginning Again," is Backwards, Pengola, and C'Thlu. Caravan have travelled the countryside, marketing their wares to interested parties. For Girls Who Grow Plump In The Night opens new doors, and provides yet another chance at commercial appeal in this country. Let's not deprive ourselves, again.

Mozart Festival A Box Office Hit

Mozart has proved to be big box office in Vermont.

A month after tickets went on sale for the first Vermont Mozart Festival, six of the eight originally scheduled concerts and one of two concerts added in response to the demand have been sold out.

The Festival, together with a Mozart Institute, is being sponsored by the University of Vermont department of music and UVM's George Bishop Lane Artists Series with support from the Vermont Council on the Arts, the National Endowment for the Arts, and the Lane Series.

Participating artists include the New York Chamber Soloists, the Fine Arts Quartet, the Festival Winds, the University Choral Union and Menahem Pressler, piano; Arthur Weisberg, bassoon; Jean Haked, soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Raymond Murcell, bass.

One of the appeals of the Festival would appear to be not only the variety of Mozart's music being offered, starting with a Carrousel with horses, presented by the American Dressage Institute with Mozart's Music for a Cavalry Display; but also the variety of settings, which include a Lake Champlain ferry boat cruise.

The grand opening concert July 21, preceded by the Carrousel, was staged at the University of Vermont Show Barn; which was also the scene for the July 28 concert featuring "The Young Mozart."

The ballroom of the Shelburne Farms estate was the scene for July 24 and 31 concerts featuring respectively the "Viennese Mozart," and "Wind Serenades." A third concert in "Wind Serenades" is scheduled for August 1 at 8 p.m. at the Fleming Museum.

On July 26, three piano concerti were performed on a cruise aboard the S.S. Champlain; while the King of Prussia Quartets was offered on July 27 in the University's Royall Tyler Theatre. Both sold out.

A Divertimento Program at the Tyler Theatre August 2 is sold out.

Also sold out is the final concert scheduled August 3 for St. Paul's Cathedral in Burlington, but seats may still be available for a newly-scheduled matinee performance there at 2 p.m.

For further information about the Festival or about the Institute, which offers undergraduate and graduate courses and lectures entitled "Mozart and His Times," contact the Lane Series, University of Vermont, Burlington, Vt. 05401. Festival director is Melvin Kaplan; Institute director is William Metcalfe, chairman, department of music, University of Vermont.

Fragile: Williams' Glass Menagerie

by John Van Hoesen

The Glass Menagerie, which opened to a small audience in Billings Center earlier this summer, was a play touched with the hand of reality.

The play, produced by the UVM Summer Season, dealt with reality, not as Williams intended, but through more conventional techniques of interpreting experience. In toto, the production was not the "memory play" which Williams envisioned. The play was more photographic than expressionistic.

Many of the component parts of the play were successful. Director Terry Demas chose a largely responsible cast. Good performances by Paula Reeder as Amanda Wingfield, and Peter Reynolds as James O'Connor, carried the play to its desperate end.

Paula Reeder's Hepburnian antics accented the production. Carrying a flawless southern accent, she was the energetic, yet tender mother of the original Williams play.

Reynolds, as the gentleman caller, was a marvelous example of the "nice, ordinary, young man."

Deborah Dow (Laura Wingfield) was as delicate as the glass she touched and as holy as the glass she worshipped. The intricate reflection of the glass on Laura's face was an accomplishment for the lighting crew.

The part of Tom Wingfield was played by Scott Ogilby.

But the screen device, which was conceived by Williams to emphasize the most important point in each scene, was not used as such, rather as a commentary by Amanda's long-lost husband, Michael Levine.

Although the screech was successful in pointing to the eternal presence of Amanda's husband, it did not emphasize nor mock the smaller, but necessary, scenes of the play.

Fire escape slides used to develop a peculiar atmosphere in the early portions of the play were an innovative notion on Demas' part; they added to the closed in feeling of this particular family in St. Louis in the 1930's.

Yet, that peculiar air, the desperateness of the situation and the unreal qualities which are so common in a Williams play were not attainable in this production. Like the fragile horn of the glass unicorn, the play too, could have found itself broken into pieces.

The Glass Menagerie was first produced in Chicago in 1944. It was one of Williams' earliest plays.

Music Thing: Two Record Reviews

For Girls Who Grow Plump In The Night
Caravan
London – XPS 637

Caravan is one of those bands that relentlessly produces excellent material but seldom finds commercial success with that output. In The Land of Grey and Pink and Waterloo Lily are two albums of grandiose experiment and worthwhile music, yet both are known only to serious music collectors and critics, while the general public has been left out in the cold. For Girls, the latest from Caravan, appears to be travelling much the same route, and what deprivation that is!

For Girls is partially concept album, with musical and lyrical themes running through a string of two or three songs, crocheted together by riffs and melodies reminiscent of early Moody Blues and Pink Floyd. There is heavy emphasis on specific lead and bass lines, repeatedly popping up for internal identification within the album. Well-structured introductions spring tangents of creative, improvisational rock, and then, as if summarizing, those leads will reappear, serving both as bridge and finale. This structure readily lends itself to comparison with early Ten Years After, especially notable on their albums Shhhh... and Undead.

Caravan has dimension. Self-arranged and composed, For Girls is an intricate trip of design and mechanics. It's one of those albums that bears new fruit for the listener each time it's played. The music is distinctive, but covers adequate ground not to seem repetitious and boring. The experimentation of the early albums is still predominant, but far from amateur. Caravan's experimentation is polished, phylogenetic perfection. The best examples of this experimental success from For Girls are Memory Lain, High/Headloss, The Dog, The Dog, He's At It Again, and Chance of A Lifetime. Additional cuts include prime example of tribalism wagered with verbal frosting. Bumpin' On Sunset elicits Auger's slower, abstract blues talents, similar to those which contributed to Closer To It's depth and perception. Slow blues, with haunting echo on lyricism has become an Auger trademark, and reveals itself on some of his best numbers.

Auger's talents as producer have matured, with hints of further sophistication and complexity. All members of the band play equally important roles in the total composition of the music, for the first time. Auger's choice of accented instruments, and choice of placement of individual numbers within the album parallels the way he constructs a song. Production of the album, in itself, resembles a fine jazz piece. In earlier endeavors, much of the supplemental instruments became obscured by Auger's over-production of his own keyboard work. The title cut, and an additional number entitled Change show the diversity and talents of the rest of the band best. Auger may never be the victim of mad zealotry, but nonetheless, he's gaining listeners and friends. He commands respect for his talent, and for the dues he's paid. Straight Ahead, his latest contribution, is a leap in the obvious direction.

Pussycats Can Go Far
Buzzy Linhart
Atch-SD-7044 – $5.98

In your head, calculate all the neat things that can happen in 37 minutes. Pussycats Can Go Far is one more thing to add to that list. Buzzy Linhart's new album, his first for Atlantic, is a joyous celebration of life, wit, and music. Recorded in Muscle Shoals, Alabama, Pussycats fulfills dreams for Buzzy, both to record here, and to work for this label. Throughout it all, Buzzy remains casual, collected, and funny, backed up by some of the finest session men in this country.

Buzzy Linhart has been the underdog of this industry for years, having missed out on chances to play with the Lovin' Spoonful, to be lead singer with Blood, Sweat & Tears, to join Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young, all of which fell through, without explanation or second thought. So what? Buzzy shrugs it off. He drifted from label to label, and has won critical acclaim for such projects as the score for an off-Broadway show, The Trials of Oz, from which two of the Pussycats numbers are drawn.

Production on Pussycats is exquisite, meandering from full-bodied session numbers to parodies, satires, choral phrases, and four-part harmony. You Don't Have To Tell Me Good-bye is one of the best tracks from the disc, boasting verses by Buzzy, while the refrain in group chorus with alto, soprano, tenor, and a lot of bass. The Greatest Person I Know is a cute ditty, put together and produced much in the manner of Ringo's recent I'm the Greatest from his Ringo album. Rightfully, Buzzy dedicates the song to Ringo Starr. If You Can't Join 'Em, Beat 'Em and The Justice Game are taken from The Trials of Oz score, and both reflect comical yet realistic portraits of our social culture, peer group pressure and our idea of justice. Friends, the Bette Midler hit, is included here, a Linhart original.

Pussycats Can Go Far is best summed up by the title tune, a self-admittance that the meek and humble shall inherit the earth. Even this is satire. Linhart isn't out to hurt anybody. He just wants to get his humor and music to the people. This here pussycat is the cat's meow!

mized up with D. H. Lawrence novels... eh... then comes the real cruncher... Parents meet parents... Barre's Chamber of Commerce Man of the Year in 1968, Dick Mallary's local campaign chairman cautiously extends his hand to Brandeis's leading Marxist Philosopher... Machiavelli greets Kuropotkin.

So much for the Melting Pot.

Then, naturally, the most anxious occasion in the arrival of any college freshman... oops... freshperson: Boy meets Girl. It usually occurs in some exciting place like the endless line at the bookstore, or at the first Friday Afternoon Drinking Club. (Stop dreaming guys and forget what they told you about co-ed dorms... it never happens in the shower).

At the F.A.D.C., Boy shuffles over toward Girl target, displaying the artful moves of a Hank Finkel, brandishing the grace and panache of a fellow with diarreah fumbling for that last dime in front of a pay toilet. Hard to tell he's a freshman.

"eh... Where ya from?"

"oh... Half Hollow Hills... it's in New Jersey"

"Whats yer major"

"eh... French... whats yours?"

"I wanna go to Law School... (the inevitable thirty second silence that seems like two years)... eh...well...eh... (Lights a Marlboro)... eh... Wouldja like anudder beer?"

"...sure..."

The stuff from which great romances are built. Strictly YOUVEEEM STYLE

So much for your Frosh Arrival. Like your first date, family reunions and Youth for Nixon Rallies, your first arrival at college is something to be dreaded, stoically endured and then quickly forgotten, packed away into the cobwebs of consciousness. Thank Christ – praying, naturally, that mine is not too closely related to Charlie Colson's – it only happens once.

... Applications Continue To Rise

In-state applications and admissions are expected to remain constant, Steele supplemented.

"We're deluged with transfers and we also have a surge in the number of applications from private schools," he added.

Most out-of-state applicants are natives of Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, or Pennsylvania. Steele believes that UVM's high out-of-state tuition rate does not deter applicants from these states.

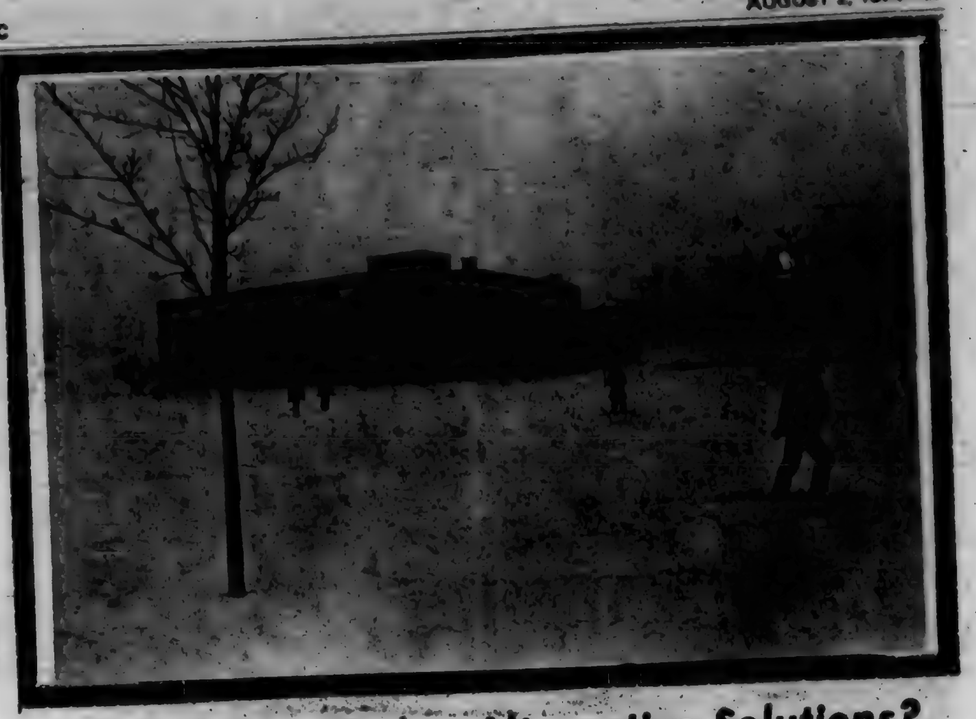
In-staters and out-of-staters often debate over the resident–non-resident ratio established by the University.

For the last two years the ratio has been 50-50 because of unusually large freshmen classes, Director Steele said. However, he expects to see the ratio return to a 40-60 figure this year.

But enrollment figures fluctuate almost daily because of students' decisions to attend other colleges or because students simply drop out. Steele said that the Admissions Office does not attempt to overcompensate though. Should the University fall short of its projected enrollment, Steele said the difference could be made up in January admissions.

And many students could be applying for January admission because competition among freshmen was tougher this year than usual. Steele reported that some out-of-state students have done research, others have published books, and still others have traveled all over the world.

Despite increased competition, the criteria for admission remain the same. Although the SAT's received criticism from academic sources in the past, Steele maintains "that they are a valid criterion as well as class rank and performance in the secondary school.



... The Bar Review

the state was philosophical and hilarious. John Wesley Dean III's chutzpah was given exactly what it deserved. Dean picking on Frazier was akin to Radar O'Reilly threatening Kojak.

Several weeks ago, the Globe ran five days of "The Best of George Frazier," a series providing examples of some of his best columns written in the past year. In lieu of a much-hoped-for comprehensive anthology, this series provides a good insight into the varied subjects George Frazier wrote about. "The Best of George Frazier" is highly recommended to anyone interested in reading one man's opinions on the amenities that make life more pleasant and the absurdities that make it less so.

Frazier was close to being a modern H. L. Mencken. Yet he remained George Frazier the Bostonian in New York; movie critic, music critic, literary critic, political columnist, critic of his trade, saloon philosopher and humorist, friend of taxidrivers and enemy of Presidents, oldest author ever to publish in Rolling Stone, and ... master obituary writer. Obits are a pain-in-the-ass to write. Obituaries demand a writer distill a man's life into a few sentences, usually ignorant of the man's hopes and fears, highly personalized and never expressed. Few obituaries have any dimension. They are drab recordings of facts to be turned into later statistics.

We hope this has not been an obituary. We hope it is an overdue thank-you note.

It's easy to get a laugh.

It's not so easy to keep them thinking while they laugh.

... Religious Fads: Alternative Solutions?

Next came speaking in tongues – a ritual in which everyone babbles nonsensically as an admittance that there are powers greater than man that control us to the point of even making us talk funny. After that a few people stood up and, smiling, reconfirmed their faith in the Lord by testifying how Jesus had touched their particular lives the previous week. More song was followed by bible study in the fire-and-brimstone style of the evangelist. The Jesus People interpret the bible literally, correlating disbelief in Jesus with the eternal fires of hell.

In terms of conversion techniques, the Jesus people are as obnoxious and unsubtle as Mr. Moon and the Unifiers with one difference. At least Jesus bums you out in English.

The Jesus people offer Jesus as the ticket to peace and understanding. Belief is all it takes they say. The four-part harmony and everlasting smile come later.

Ideology. The major difference centers around Reverend Moon's perception of the role of new Messiah. He says that "Jesus will no longer be the central sun. The New Lord will be the New Sun of Heaven." He tends to minimize Jesus's role in biblical history and speaks at length of the Lord of the Second Advent, the new Messiah.

When Reverend Moon came to speak in Burlington his audience received a propaganda statement denying Moon's effectiveness and identifying him as a false prophet. These leaflets were distributed by Jesus' modern day disciples from Bethel, their church in Burlington. The stir caused by these notices climaxed as members of the audience stood up unexpectedly to voice faith in Jesus and to disdain Reverend Moon's predicted coming of a New Messiah. One of the followers from His Church angrily claimed "If any man come unto you speaking another gospel let him be accursed." These confrontations demonstrate the ideological controversy between the Unification Church and Bethel.

Part of a national movement, the members of Bethel are known to outsiders as Jesus People or Jesus Freaks, and their beliefs have been called everything from a passing fad and mass hysteria to a blessing from the Lord. The Burlington group consists of a small nucleus of fervent believers plus a reasonably sized following who attend Sunday worship and Bible sessions but shy away from selling Jesus on Church Street on sunny Saturday afternoons.

Unlike the formal coat and tie, Ramada Inn image of the Moon men, the Jesus people are relatively down to earth. Bluejeans-casual dominates their weekly meeting in their livingroom, home-spun chapel in the old building on the corner of Pine and College Streets which is Bethel. A large "Jesus Saves" sign hangs from the roof.

Attending one of these gatherings is like witnessing a "who has the biggest smile" contest. Jesus People smile all the time (ad nauseum) and for one reason. "Because Jesus loves me," explained one grinning female, her mouth stretching from ear to ear. For the most part, the Sunday service is light with laughter and song. Accompanied by a lone guitar, the tightly knit congregation belts out tunes in beautiful four-part harmony. "I've been redeemed by the blood of the lamb," they crooned at the meeting these reporters sat through. We tried to sing along but mostly shifted uncomfortably in our grey folding chairs envious of those who had arrived early and secured a place on the soft sofa in the rear of the room.

System $279

WHEN LOOKING FOR A SYSTEM IN THE $300.00 RANGE, WE HIGHLY RECOMMEND A SYSTEM BUILT AROUND THE NEW JVC-5445. WE THINK IT TO BE THE BEST VALUE POSSIBLE. COMPARE IT TO THE SANSUI-210, SHERWOOD S-7500, OR THE SONY STR-6055 AND SEE FOR YOURSELF THAT JVC BUILT A LOT OF VALUE INTO THIS RECEIVER.

THE RECEIVER:

The JVC VR-5445, 40 Watt FM/AM Stereo receiver delivers 20 watts of power per channel into 4 ohms, making it large enough to provide a pair of medium sized speakers and fill a good size room with clean sound. Its FM tuner section achieves a good deal of attention to detail, with its 3-gang tuning set, efficient varactor front end 4 ceramic mechanical filters in the IF stage. Sensitivity of this unit is low 2.2 on with capture ratio rated at 2.0 db and stereo separation of 30 db. It also includes the usual stereo features, wired FM headphone jack, muting for easy and precise FM tuning. Other fine features are equally valuable and important, like a professional tuning meter, bass, treble and balance controls, stereo 3 position tape monitor, front panel adjustment of tape levels. Attractively styled and finished, with handsome cabinet.

THE SPEAKERS:

For speakers we chose the new CRITERION 300 3-way air suspension system. Big size performance from this outstanding ultra compact 2 speaker 3 way system. It achieves a quality of sound and great music quality that is astounding for a speaker system measuring only 10½" x 13½" x 8½". Perfect for use anywhere in your home or office. You get rich styling plus true high fidelity sound. Priced at a great price. This system consists of a powerful 8" woofer which provides smooth bass sound reproduction down to 55 Hz and a 2½" dome tweeter that gives you sparkling clean high frequencies. Also includes a built in 7,000 Hz electrical crossover network. Power handling capacity of 25 watts makes it compatible for use with the JVC 5445.

THE TURNTABLE:

The SSR 300 is a four speed automatic stereo turntable designed especially for use in low priced hi fi systems. Features introduced, weighted turntable, tubular counterbalanced arm. SONY STR-6035A FM STEREO/FM-AM RECEIVER

There's something for everyone in the world of Sony sound. It's easy to zero in on the STR 6035A. With a power output of 15/15 watts rms 20 Hz 20 000 Hz power into 8 ohms the STR 6035A is great for a beginning system or it makes a fine second system. An ultra-compact tuner with FET's (Field Effect Transistors), solid state IF filters plus a 3 gang variable capacitor in the front end puts in even the weakest stations. The powerful amplifier section delivers lots of room filling sound. A major breakthrough in maximizing the delicate balance between low cost and superior performance, the STR-6035A dollar for dollar offers you much greater value than receivers priced much higher. You can count on the STR-6035A for many hours of listening pleasure on FM stereo, FM-AM broadcasts, records and tapes.

SPEAKERS

The CRITERION 300 3 speaker 3-way acoustic suspension system is a superb THREE WAY acoustic suspension system employing midrange and crystal dome high frequencies. The powerful bass is produced by a 10" high compliance woofer that is astonishingly large for a speaker of this size and price. It has a huge 4 lb. magnet structure and a 1½" diameter 4 layer voice coil. The 5" sealed-back midrange speaker, with a 1½" diameter, 4 layer voice coil reproduces the middle frequencies with excellent fidelity. The woofer and midrange speaker each have polypropylene cone surround to further enhance their capabilities. The 3" dia sealed, dome domed cone tweeter cleanly extends the system through the upper frequencies. And the precision-engineered L/C crossover network assures that throughout its entire frequency range, the CRITERION 300 exhibits exceptional smoothness and the high level of transparency that is characteristic of the entire new CRITERION speaker line. A high frequency brilliance control is located on the rear of the speaker to adjust the sound to your room. The fronts of the speakers are top grade, dust free by an attractive charcoal brown grille cloth. A GREAT MATCH FOR THE SONY STR-6035A RECEIVER.

TURNTABLE

Again, we chose the SSR 310AXE turntable. It plays 33, 45 and 78 LP/EP records. Full manual control, single lever cueing, low mass tone arm with fixed counterweight. Stable cartridge and stylus overhang adjustment. Easy to adjust stylus pressure. Smooth and tracks well. A component element moves to the rear out of the way for manual play. As you can see the SSR 310AXE is the work horse of the line.

Gym Expansion To Be Proposed

by Rick Steinberg

Within the next few months the Physical Education Department will be making a proposal to greatly expand the present facilities in Patrick Gymnasium and Gutterson Fieldhouse. The proposal stems from two basic factors: the conversion of Southwick Gymnasium into the new music building and the increased utilization of the existing complex.

The present facilities, which were constructed in 1962, were built to accomodate 4400 individuals. But since then, the population of the university has increased more than two-fold.

Included in the proposal are plans for an additional swimming pool, six new handball and six squash courts, eight indoor tennis courts, a separate gymnastics area, year-round ice skating facilities and expanded office and locker room space. Bob Christensen, Director of Physical Education, stated that "these plans are very preliminary and are apt to change three or four times before completion. Nothing is concrete. These are ideas looked at so as to meet program needs."

According to the plans, the new swimming pool will be much larger than Forbush. The present pool is a twenty-five yard, 7 lane pool while the proposed one will be a fifty meter, eight lane pool. It is hoped that the addition of a new pool will allow the Physical Education Department to expand its course offerings into new and diversified areas. There could be greater scuba diving instruction and activities such as water polo. "Right now the pool can not serve everybody," stated Christensen. "We are trying to provide better recreational facilities."

Another area which has seen an increase in use is paddleball, handball, and squash. The demand is so great that it is almost impossible to reserve a court. With the proposed addition of six squash courts and six paddleball courts, the overcrowding will be substantially reduced.

With UVM transferring into Division I and with the expansion of the tennis program at the university, several changes are being looked into. These plans include the construction of eight indoor tennis courts to be housed on the far side of Post Field near the country club. At the present time, the courts are only available from April through October. The proposed courts will be open year round.

The compressor for the hockey rink must also be replaced. According to Christensen, the thirteen-year-old machine, in all likelihood, could not make it through the winter. With new tennis courts and an improved compressor, there will be potential for year-round use of the ice skating rink. Whether this is feasible depends on what type of activities can be scheduled in the summer.

There are plans to improve or change the present locker rooms for both the home and visiting hockey teams. At the present, the visiting hockey team is forced to stay in the warmup room which lacks showers and lockers. It is possible that Division I rules will require improved facilities for the visiting team.

With the loss of Southwick's gym accomodations, women's athletics will be transferred into Patrick. This will necessitate the construction of additional classrooms, showers and lockers, dance rooms, equipment storage areas, and offices. The university is required to provide women with a prescribed standard of facilities according to Title IX of the Health, Education, and Welfare's Educational Amendment Act of 1972. Due to the loss of Southwick, some type of revision is definitely needed.

The proposed expanded facilities are being based on existing utilization. It is being planned to accomodate a university with 7500 undergraduates.

Financing of the expansion will come from the issuance of a twenty-year bond and through alumni donations. The development office is aiding in raising funds. The student athletic fee of thirty dollars will remain intact.

The overall thrust of the expansion is geared toward the physical education department's philosophy of emphasizing life time carry-over sports. Swimming, tennis, handball and ice skating are prime examples of these types of activities.

Although planning is in the early stages, a rough estimate of the cost of the expansion was placed at 4 million dollars. It is hoped that with new construction techniques, a great deal of the work can be completed by the fall of 1975.

UVM To Sponsor Field Hockey Camp

A Girls Field Hockey Camp, sponsored by the University of Vermont Summer Session, will be held from August 19-23.

The camp, directed by popular UVM coach, Jean Condon, will be geared "to the current field hockey skills, techniques and game play" for specific age-grouped students.

Ms. Condon expects that girls 12-14 will be accommodated at the morning sessions from 9 a.m. to 12 noon and girls 15-18 at the afternoon session from 1-5 p.m.

For further information concerning the field hockey camp, contact Ms. Condon at the Southwick Gymansium, the University of Vermont (656-3240).

Football Cats To Open Against Norwich

by Rick Steinberg

With the arrival of August, the opening of college training camps for the 1974 football season is only three weeks away. For the Catamounts practice begins with double sessions on August 23.

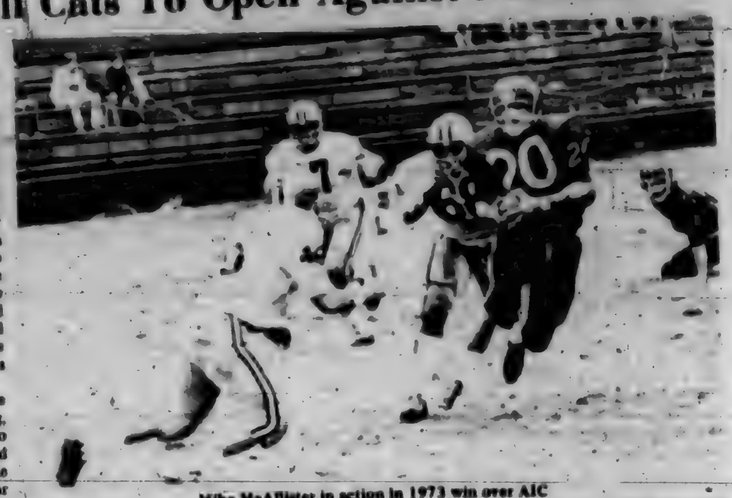
UVM is hoping to improve upon its 3-6 record of last season. Injuries played a major factor in last season's record as the Cats sustained injuries to several key starters. These injuries caused Coach Falivene to use many inexperienced players. The experience gained last season should prove to be a valuable asset for the Cats this year.

Having had several practice sessions this past spring, Falivene has had a chance to evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of the team. He believes that the major improvement evidenced this past spring was in the running game. "We now have class backs," stated Falivene.

The improved running game was seen in the Green-White game when the offense sustained an 85 yard 20 play drive. In the backfield, Falivene believes, there is a good combination of speed and blocking. In the tailback spot is Billy Looker who transferred from wide receiver. Looker is one of the fastest men on the team and according to Falivene "ran very well this spring." Also competing for the tailback spot will be Sam Blood and freshman Bob Gilligan.

At fullback there are two strong runners returning in Mike McAllister and Larry Lockwood. Falivene felt that they both did a good job in the spring and should be important factors in the running attack. At wingback will be Ralph Thompson, a converted wide receiver, and Mark Byrne.

Returning at quarterback is Bob Bateman. Bateman was the starter for most of last season and according to Falivene is a "premier quarterback." Also eyeing the quarterback spot is John Margarita.



Mike McAllister in action in 1973 win over AIC

The offensive line lost several starters through graduation but should be fairly experienced. Many of the players saw action last season when injuries set in. At the guards should be offensive captain Bob Weiler, who moved over from center, and [illegible] Juscen who is returning to the team after a year's absence. Both men are over 200 pounds and extremely quick.

Looking to replace Weiler at center will be Jim Boyle, a converted defensive end and a 6-4, 225 pound freshman from Connecticut, Peter Gerskey.

At tackle the Cats have substantial depth in Bob Neal, Chris Henry, Dave Ionnone and two freshmen recruits, David Schnurbusch and Steve Kirkbaumer. Falivene feels that depth is very critical. "Numbers are important," stated Falivene. "In case of injuries, you always need replacements."

At wide receiver the Cats lost Tony Jones, an all conference end last season. Falivene is hoping that Paul Jarry, Chuck Casella and Looker can make up for the gap created by Jones' graduation. Casella was a quarterback last season and according to Falivene, "he may be the best athlete on the team."

Overall, the offense looked "much improved" this spring. If the offense can put points on the board, UVM may be in contention for the Yankee Conference title. The defense was very strong last season and has many starters returning. The major losses through graduation were all-Conference lineman John Hemphill and John Thomson, a second team all-conference linebacker.

In the spring the defense asserted itself in shutting out the alumni for the first time. "Our defense has exceptional speed and hitting ability," Falivene stated. "They had a great spring and were very aggressive."

On the defensive line, Falivene feels the Cats are strong. At the ends should be George Brunst and Mike Johns. "Brunst may be one of the premier ends in the league," Falivene said. "He had a great year as a freshman and is very mature and a fine athlete." Also at end will be Tim Richards who moved over from defensive back in the spring.

Rounding out the line, at tackle, will be Patt Dwyer, Dave Alberico, Fred Fournier, and Tom Gambone, a recruit from Cantop, Ohio.

The Cats lost several linebackers from last years squad. Glenn Martel and John Thompson graduated and Barry Visen left school. Replacing them will be Joe Reed, Rich Benanati and Mike Paternaster.

One area which was weak last season was the specialty teams. "We need improvement in punt coverage," Falivene commented. "Last year, teams aged 7 yards a return which was too much. There was inexperience in our coverage and we went out of our lanes," added Falivene.

UVM opens its season at home on September 14 against state rival Norwich. The game will be very important for the Cats. "We would really like to see support from the university community," stated Falivene. "The team needs the feeling that the community is behind them. A win against Norwich is important to get support."

The "Yankee Conference looks very even this year," Falivene commented. "The league is really balanced with no one dominating. Of course, you've got to be concerned about Connecticut and Massachusetts because of their past."

Freshman Recruits

Seven Vermonters and one All-State linebacker from Georgia have informed head football coach, Carl Falivene, that they will attend the University of Vermont this fall.

Included in the seven Vermonters are six All-Staters and one kicking specialist who plans on playing soccer and kicking for the football team.

Casagrande To Coach Lacrosse

by Ken Barnett

Bruce Casagrande, a former All-American Lacrosse mid-fielder from Cortland State College, will assume the position as head coach next year as Vermont Lacrosse enters its second season. His reputation for fine coaching and lacrosse ability will continue to kindle enthusiasm, enhancing the overall program at UVM.

A native of Linderhurst, Long Island, Mr. Casagrande played Varsity Football and Lacrosse for four years and was the leading scorer in Lacrosse for his last three years. He was President of the senior class as well as being active in the community. At Cortland State College, Mr. Casagrande raced the team to the USLCA tournament. Cortland later went on to win the tournament and become the 1973 USLCA national champions.

This summer Mr. Casagrande is coaching lacrosse at a high school. Having recently married, he plans to return to Cortland State briefly to work on a master's degree in Health Education. He will assume full coaching responsibility here at UVM in January.

Bruce Levinsky, an expert in defense tactics, will assist Mr. Casagrande. Bruce graduated from Denison University in 1965 and received an honorable mention in Lacrosse.

Taft Elected Chairman Of Hall Of Fame Committee

Former Essex Jct. High School principal, Chester Taft, was elected chairman of the University of Vermont Athletic Hall of Fame Committee at the annual meeting on May 9. Taft succeeds Dr. H. M. Farmer ('33) who served a one-year term.

Taft, now retired from teaching, is a member of the Vermont House of Representatives. A former standout athlete at UVM, Taft ('33) now heads the committee that reviews many former UVM athletes for possible election into the Athletic Hall of Fame. Seven new inductees, to be honored this fall, were announced on May 23.

Other officers elected at the meeting include the treasurer, N. Edward Bartlett, UVM's Athletic Business Manager and secretary, Dick Whittier ('65), the University's Director of Sports Information.

Serving on the Executive Committee with Taft, Bartlett and Whittier are Bob Adsit, Wally Sargent ('31),

Basketball Recruits To Attend UVM

Two more basketball players have announced their intentions of attending the University of Vermont, it was announced recently by head basketball coach, Peter Salzberg.

Mark Sobolewski of Syracuse; a 6-4, 190 lb. guard-forward, and Joel Green of Flushing, N. Y., a 6-1, 170 lb. guard, will join the Catamount varsity this winter. "Both players have outstanding credentials and should play a vital role in our drive for Yankee Conference respectability and eventually the title," said Salzberg.

Sobolewski, an outstandine student at West Genesee High School in Syracuse, led his club to a 16-4 record last year and scored a career total of 1,028 points. He was named the outstanding player in suburban Syracuse by the Syracuse Hardwood Club. Sobolewski played for Joe Witoski at Genesee High.

Green, an All-Queens first-team selection; as selected by the New York Daily News, averaged 16 points a game at Francis Lewis High School under Herman Teitler.

SCHWARTZ ON SPORTS

Sports at UVM die down over the summer. Except for the prognostications on the coming season's prospects and the announcement of enrollment of promising freshmen athletics, the sporting life will not show life till fall returns with students and football. The most exciting event of the summer might well be the fire in the Hall of Fame room in Patrick.

But in the professional world of sports, the action never dies down as different sports inevitably overlap each other and as playoff seasons grow and grow. Recreationally, the summer allows the fan to play some tennis or find the neighborhood softball game, as well as swim and romp in the sun. What the above statement really suggests is that sports just don't die down, it is continually growing. Sports expansion on the professional level continues as this sample suggests:

1 – Basketball – Jazz hits New Orleans in the form of a team led by Pete Maravich. And somehow, the ABA will remain in business.

2 – Hockey – Two more NHL teams enter this coming season under a new league setup and of course a longer season (it could be 9 months).

3 – Football – The new league invades the old and player malcontent hits new highs.

4 – Tennis – The innovative attempt at team tennis invades 16 U.S. cities and fails to draw substantial crowds.

Add to this, golf, pro-track, soccer, rumors of a new baseball league, and intercontinental expansion, and one sees that this phenomena has no limits.

But as this policy of more teams in more places continues the one thing I especially question is the dilution of talent in the quality of performance.

Team nicknames may become more ingenious (Portland Storm, Philadelphia Bell, etc.), and owners with wads of cash may easily buy new franchises, but the satiation point is never seen. In the NBA, only three teams are making a profit and in team tennis all the owners are supposedly patient enough to lose money for five years and perhaps then make a profit. The main way to make this profit is by raising ticket prices higher and higher to gain the American dollar. I recall my last visit to Madison Square Garden for a hockey game. It was more of a social outing for the rich than a place for the average fan to see a game. When you pay $7 to sit one level below the balcony, you can see how sports is priced out of the market.

Meanwhile, expansion forces unproven rookies to be forced into the big leagues and spreads the available star talent thinner and thinner. Sport may just be the social outing and the quality of performance may be of secondary consideration. Basketball now becomes a wait for the "second season" (the playoffs), perhaps indicating that it is sports expansion that has led to such a thinning of talent making a regular season game a virtual waste of time. The good teams usually win and the losing teams hope that some college superstar will be available (like Bill Walton for 3 million dollars).

As sports expands both on the TV screen, the closed circuit screen, and through more franchises, there are a few of the issues that need to be considered. They have all stemmed from the inevitable expansion of sports that has no ending limits.

Johnson State New Coopera

A new cooperative arrangement between Johnson State College and the University of Vermont providing new career opportunities for Johnson students will take effect in September 1974, according to a joint announcement made by UVM President Edward C. Andrews, Jr., and State Colleges Chancellor William G. Craig.

Through the new agreement students now enrolled in Johnson during their first two years may transfer to the University to enroll in any of three professional areas in the field of Home Economics: (1) clothing, textiles and design; (2) housing consumer economics and home management; (3) human nutrition and foods.

Students at Johnson who are interested in transferring to the University of Vermont should declare their intent during the freshman year at Johnson and the program coordinators at Johnson and UVM will pre-screen each applicant during the sophomore year before an application is submitted to UVM.

The University will make an early admissions decision on each applicant based on academic qualifications and recommendations by program coordinators. Applicants should submit an application for an early admissions decision in December of the year preceding the first fall enrollment at the University of Vermont.

The new arrangement, which was created by Dr. Signe Betsinger, director of the School of Home Economics at UVM, and Dr. Jerome Knapczyk, chairman of the Math and Sciences Division at Johnson, is designed specifically to provide new career options for Johnson students. Johnson State And UVM Announce New Cooperative Arrangement

A new cooperative arrangement between Johnson State College and the University of Vermont providing new career opportunities for Johnson students will take effect in September 1974, according to a joint announcement made by UVM President Edward C. Andrews, Jr., and State Colleges Chancellor William G. Craig.

Through the new agreement students now enrolled in Johnson during their first two years may transfer to the University to enroll in any of three profesional areas in the field of Home Economics: (1) clothing, textiles and design; (2) housing consumer economics and home management; (3) human nutrition and foods.

Students at Johnson who are interested in transferring to the University of Vermont should declare their intent during the freshman year at Johnson and the program coordinators at Johnson and UVM will pre-screen each applicant during the sophomore year before an application is submitted to UVM.

The University will make an early admissions decision on each applicant based on academic qualifications and recommendations by program coordinators. Applicants should submit an application for an early admissions decision in December of the year preceding the first fall enrollment at the University of Vermont.

The new arrangement, which was created by Dr. Signe Betsinger, director of the School of Home Economics at UVM, and Dr. Jerome Knapczyk, chairman of the Math and Sciences Division at Johnson, is designed specifically to provide new career options for Johnson students. In addition, according to Edward M. Eimendorf, acting president of Johnson, it will better utilize existing academic resources at both institutions, and should strengthen lower level science course enrollment at Johnson.

Registration literature is available now for students interested in enrolling in the program next year. Additional information is being distributed to prospective students by the Coordinator of Student Admissions at Johnson State College.

This cooperation between the two institutions was encouraged and strongly supported by Vermont State Colleges Chancellor Craig who stated in his announcement that the program will open up many new career alternatives compatible with present Vermont economic employment opportunities.

UVM Psychologist Participates In Drinking-Driving Conference

A University of Vermont psychologist who has been in the forefront of investigating drinking-driving problems was one of a special team participating in an International Conference on Research Methodology for Drinking-Driving Roadside Surveys held in late May in Paris.

Dr. M. W. Perrine was one of four members of the National Safety Council's Committee on Alcohol and Drugs which conducted the conference under the sponsorship of the Office of Alcohol Countermeasures of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

The others were Prof. Robert F. Borkenstein of Indiana University, who conducted the first major roadside survey in Evanston, Illinois, in 1938; Lowell C. Van Berkom of the Minnesota Department of Highways; and Elbert Higgnin, of the National Safety Council.

Dr. Perrine is a professor of psychology at UVM and director of Project ABETS, which is concerned with the role of alcohol in highway safety, and which includes the Laboratory for Alcohol and Drug Studies, where research is underway on the influences of alcohol and marijuana upon behavior.

He has been engaged in attitude and psychometric research since 1953, perceptual research since 1957, alcohol research since 1967, and marijuana research since 1973; and has been principal or co-principal investigator of over 14 research contracts and grants.

In addition to founding Project ABETS, he was co-founder of Project CRASH, one of the first alcohol safety action projects funded by the U.S. Department of Transportation to demonstrate and evaluate the effectiveness of a systems approach to solving the "drunk-driver problem" through a multi-faceted countermeasure program in the State of Vermont.

In 1972, he directed the Vermont Symposium on Alcohol, Drugs and Driving. He also participated in a previous alcohol-driving symposium in Germany, where he founded and directed the Research Center for Visual Perception and he taught at both Heidelberg University and the Hochschule fur Gestaltung.

The National Safety Council's Committee on Alcohol and Drugs is an international group concerned with the alcohol abuse problems, and which has furthered the use of roadside research surveys to obtain more data on the drinking driver.

A key objective of the Paris conference was to focus on the role which roadside surveys may play in more effective identification and control of the "drinking-driver problem."

McRae Sues Goddard For Racist Practices

Legal counsel for Otis McRae, former staff coordinator in the Non Resident Tuitionter office of Goddard College, has filed an action in the Federal District Court, State of Vermont on his behalf.

The complaint and summons was filed in the United States District Court based upon a "Notice of Right to Sue" granted by the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission office in Boston, pursuant to title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 for employment discrimination.

McRae has charged that contractual obligations of the college were not recognized because of the racist practices of President Gerald S. Withspoon covertly and selectively applied under the guise of a liberal facade to deny him employment, because of his role in defending non-white members of the community such as Professor Thomas Yablonsky and other members of the now defunct Third World Studies Program.

McRae seeks an awarding of appropriate back pay from date of wrongful discharge, seniority and other lost benefits, including family tuition privileges, attorney's fees, costs, interest, and other such relief as may be determined by the Court to be just and proper.

The summons and complaint, was served on Goddard May 13, 1974 and received by Alan Walker, Clerk of the Goddard College Board of Trustees. Defendant Goddard College must respond within twenty days. By then, it's too late.

So, be careful. The Consumer Fraud Division of the Attorney General's Office advises consumers to deal with reputable individuals and concerns. Always ask for references and check the references out before you have any home repair work done. And remember, a reference is not a person for whom work was done one or two years ago. This way you can truly test the quality of the workmanship.

Leaking Roofs: A Fraud

Well, it's summer and those men in their pick-up trucks, many from out-of-state, are back to "seal" your driveways and "waterproof" your leaky roofs. They'll do the job cheap, giving you a special discount. And, they'll give you a fantastic guarantee, anywhere from five years to a lifetime.

The Consumer Fraud Division usually learns of these operations after the next rain — when the roof still leaks — or the sealer runs off the driveway — and after the homeowners can't find anyone to make the repairs.

Media Campaign Versus Consumer Victimization

The Consumer Fraud Division of the Attorney General's Office has initiated a state-wide media campaign to help Vermonters understand some of the regulations contained in the Vermont Consumer Fraud Law.

The focus of the new campaign is 60-second radio announcements which discuss examples of unfair and deceptive business practices and encourage consumers to contact their State's Attorney or the Consumer Fraud Office in Burlington if they feel they have been victimized by such practices. Television and newspaper will also be utilized to alert consumers.

"Vermont has one of the strongest and most comprehensive Consumer Fraud Laws in the country," said Howard R. Goldberg, Chief of the Consumer Fraud Division, "and we want to make all Vermonters aware that there's a place to turn to when they need consumer protection."

One of the most widespread and lucrative consumer frauds in the country involves turning back odometers on cars offered for sale to the public. Turning back an odometer from 60,000 miles to 30,000 miles can mean an extra $200 for the dealer, for just a few minutes work.

In order to stop this practice in Vermont, Attorney General Kimberly Cheney has ordered his Consumer Fraud Division to institute a crackdown on all odometer violations that are brought to the Division's attention.

Howard R. Goldberg, Chief of the Consumer Fraud Division, announced that lawsuits were being filed against three car dealers and that at least three other dealers were being investigated. The defendants named in the three suits are Lake Buick, Inc. of South Burlington, Leo's Motors, Inc. of Manchester Center, and Donald H. Hammond of Charlotte.

The Attorney General's Complaint alleges that Lake Buick has adopted a policy of disconnecting odometers on demonstrators and courtesy cars so that prospective purchasers would think that their "new" cars had never been driven or had hardly been driven at all.

The Complaint against Leo's Motors alleges four separate instances of odometer turnbacks.

Although Donald Hammond is not a registered new or used car dealer, he does advertise and sell used cars. The Complaint against him alleges that he has turned back the odometer on a car he offered for sale.

All three of the Complaints ask for penalties of $10,000 for each odometer turnback as well as the recovery of the Attorney-General's costs of investigation.

Said Cheney, "We hope that auto dealers will begin to appreciate the potential liability that they may face from tampering with an odometer. Simply — it just isn't worth it."

"Dealers should also be advised that the new Consumer Fraud Rules which were recently promulgated by this office require auto dealers to furnish an Odometer-Mileage Statement to every purchaser of a used car. If the dealer knows that the odometer reading on the car is not accurate, he must reveal this information on the odometer statement. The new rules also state that the dealer must give the purchaser the name and address of the previous owner of the car, if the purchaser requests that information. With this information, a purchaser could check the mileage as well as the running condition of the car."

The public can help in this effort to crackdown on odometer tampering by reporting suspected odometer turnbacks to the Consumer Fraud Division in Burlington. If you have purchased a used car with low mileage and then start to experience a lot of trouble — that may be a sign that your odometer has been "tickled." The Division also wants to know the names of dealers who fail to furnish the required Odometer Mileage Statement.

VPIRG Releases Second Drug Price Survey

by Mike La Bella

In Spring 1974 VPIRG released its second comprehensive drug price survey. The results showed evidence that great price fluctuations exist across the state for the same drug when it is purchased at different pharmacies. Selecting fifty of the most commonly used drugs, VPIRG researchers surveyed the state's 102 pharmacies. VPIRG found variations of up to 340% in pharmacies only a few miles apart, and variations of up to 413% across the state on certain drug prices.

Unlike most consumer items, shoppers seldom compare drug prices from one store to another. In 1972 the Vermont legislature passed a law requiring the posting of the prices of the 100 most commonly used drugs. According to the law the list must be clearly written and conspicuously posted in every pharmacy in the state. VPIRG researchers found a number of violations of the law including incorrect price lists and poorly placed posters. The Burlington region had the lowest average prices in the state, and Kinneys of Essex Junction was the lowest priced pharmacy in the state.

The results of the survey are available at Billings Center or at the Burlington VPIRG office on North Prospect Street.

VPIRG Studies Phone Rates And Home Rights

Students from three Vermont colleges are working with the staff of the Vermont Public Interest Research Group on a number of issues in the public interest. VPIRG, formed in 1971 by a group of students responding to a challenge by Ralph Nader, is a student-funded, student-run, consumer action group. Carl Bohen from UVM is working on VPIRG's highway project. Cecilia Elwert also from UVM is the office manager and is researching sex discrimination. Dick Cassidy, of UVM, is studying government operations while Tammy Aronson from Johnson State is directing VPIRG's Mobile Home Owners Rights Outreach. Mike Labella and Sharon Frink are running the Burlington offices and are working on drug prices and woman's rights respectively.

Phone Case

Caroline Nickerson, VPIRG's staff attorney, has petitioned the Public Service Board to reconsider a ruling that limits VPIRG's role in the telephone hearing on a major rate increase. On June 3, the Board ruled that VPIRG, the Vermont Welfare Rights Organization, and the Vermont Low Income Advocacy could not raise questions about the company's relationship to the American Telephone and Telegraph Company which owns 85% of NET.

Two weeks after the VPIRG ruling, the Board decided that NET was not entitled to the requested 23% increase. Immediately following this decision, NET threatened to cut back construction in Vermont and to lay off 200 employees. The Washington Star reported in June, however, that this decision was not made locally but had been made by presidents of ATT in Florida nearly two years ago.

Mobile Home Owners Rights

VPIRG, working in conjunction with the Office of the Attorney General, Consumer Fraud Division, has produced a pamphlet outlining the rights of mobile home owners. The pamphlet spells out the rights and responsibilities of both park owners and park residents and it explains those rights as they relate to leases, rent, entrance fees, selling and subletting a mobile home and evictions.

Barry Steinhardt, from Goddard, researched and produced the pamphlet and Tammy Aronson of Johnson, and Mike La Bella from UVM are coordinating VPIRG's outreach effort. Volunteers are needed to insure that every mobile home owner is explained one's rights.

QUESTION: Is there any danger to swallowing chewing gum, other than it catching in the throat?

An unrelated question I have is that I heard that Listerine mouth wash can be applied to the ear to prevent the build-up of wax. Is this true, and is there danger of possible damage to the ear?

ANSWER: One of the not-so-clever folk tales that mothers pass on the little children is that swallowing chewing gum will make their intestines stick together. There is no evidence to support such a notion.

Normally, when swallowing occurs a lid like device (glottis) functioning as a valve, covers the opening leading to the lungs, preventing food from being aspirated. Gum and other small objects in the mouth are occasionally sucked into the lungs, but not by swallowing. An untimely rapid inspiration, such as might occur during coughing or laughing, causes the aspiration. If the object is large enough, such as a chunk of food, it can get stuck in the larynx (voice box) and cause choking and death from asphyxiation. Smaller objects can find their way into the lungs where they can cause incredibly nasty infections.

If someone aspirates and starts to choke in your presence, you may save his life by reaching into the mouth and pulling out the object if it is large enough to grab, or with assistance turning him upside down and pounding on his back. Beyond either of these expedients you would need the assistance of a person knowledgeable enough to cut an emergency opening into the trachea (windpipe) below the larynx.

If you are going to use mouthwashes, which are worthless from any health point of view, keep them in your mouth. The skin in the canals of the ear is extra-ordinarily sensitive and should not be poked at or messed with unless one is directed to do so by a physician.

Some people do have unusual amount of wax build-up which can block the ear canal and cause a painful situation. For the vast majority of people, ear wax tends to dry up and fall out. There are preparations which soften and liquefy dense, sticky wax allowing it to work free. Some of these can be irritating to the ear. Gentle weekly flushing of the ears using a rubber bulb-like ear syringe also works well.

A physician can instructs you in the use of either of these techniques.

QUESTION: What exactly is unsanitary about a dog? My housemates all think I am sentimental and sort of unclean because my poodle sleeps with me. I have had her for five years and as far as I know she and I have never shared the same infection, illness or parasites. What could I possibly get from her?

Also, it makes my housemates sick if I play with my dog or pet her and then immediately use my hands to eat or prepare food without first washing them. Again, am I contaminating everything I touch with "dog germs" or whatever?

I hope you can answer this as my housemates and I get along fine except for this issue.

ANSWER: Generally speaking, household pets rarely tranmit diseases to adults. However, the issue is a little complex. Dogs and cats who do a lot of wandering are more likely to become contaminated with parasites and other organisms which can infect humans. Little children are especially prone to become so infected. Also, at least one of these infections can be very dangerous for pregnant women and produce abnormalities in the developing fetus. Maternal toxoplasmosis infections are an important cause of congenital abnormalities and the microorganism involved can be transmitted by cats.

There is also a question of esthetics. I sympathize fully with your housemates who are upset about you handling your dog and then handling food that they eat. Anyone who has spent time watching a dog can confirm the fact that in the absence of hands, they tend to use their tongue for all sorts of investigatory and cleaning purposes. While not being squeamish, I have little desire to eat the food that was touched by the hands that touched the dog that licked its genital or anal area.

As far as sleeping with your dog, to each his (or her) own.

QUESTION: My doctor said I had a right ovary fixed onto the uterus. My complaint was severe backaches and some right sided pain making me ill and causing me discomfort. He recommended birth control pills; however, I have no real menstrual problems.

Can you explain this to me? He said that if the pills didn't help, he would recommend a hysterectomy. I am 40 years old.

ANSWER: From your description, it sounds as if your physician believes the pain you are having is related to ovulation (the release of the egg from the ovary). If there are adhesions between the ovary and the uterus, it's conceivable that this could cause considerable pain although in no other way affect menstrual function.

The use of the birth control pill in such a situation would be to prevent ovulation and therefore prevent the pain. The birth control pill is used in a number of medical situation for reasons other than its contraceptive value and this would be one of them. If the birth control pills do not stop the pain, the suggested surgery might well be in order. Pregnancies at age 40 are generally not recommended but if this painful condition existed when you were younger and interested in having children, it is possible that surgery could have been performed which would remove the ovary but would not involve a hysterectomy and therefore would probably not affect your ability to have children.

QUESTION: Last year I had abdominal surgery. Being a woman I wonder whether or not plastic surgery could remove the ugly scar that was left behind?

ANSWER: The removal of a surgical scar of necessity involves cutting and producing another surgical scar. A number of factors determine the appearance of a surgical scar. Incisions that follow natural bends and folds in the skin and run parallel to forces that normally hold skin taut, produce less conspicuous scars. In the abdomen, for instance, an incision going from side to side would yield a much less conspicuous result than one going up and down. Constitutional factors also play an important part and some people just tend to form inconspicuous scars and others form very heavy scars. The size of the sutures (stitches) also make a difference; the smaller the sutures and the closer they are the finer the result. On facial surgery, for instance, many very tiny stitches are taken with extremely fine suture material to insure a neat result.

In abdominal surgery, however, forces in the abdominal wall and technical considerations make it necessary to use heavy materials to lace the belly together adequately and prevent rupture of seams. The type of surgery often must dictate the direction of the incision and cosmetic factors are ignored. Surgical scars tend to become less conspicuous over a long period of time and it is not uncommon for a scar which may still have an ugly appearance after a year to be less ugly several years later. Consultation with a plastic surgeon, who is the one who does fine medical embroidery work, should give you an opinion as to whether or not it is worthwhile revising the scar you have.

QUESTION: I have been diagnosed as having problems with muscle spasms in my back and neck twice in the last six months. With the help of heat and muscle relaxers I have been able to bring the difficulty under control. I am wondering what the real cause is and how to avoid flare-ups in the future. I can see no pattern related to strenuous activity, but often a barely noticeable stiff neck is evident in the morning. I am a 25 year old graduate student.

ANSWER: Spasms of the long muscles of the back and neck can be very painful and at times do occur suddenly for unclear reasons. People who are particularly susceptible to these back pains are often helped by specific exercises during pain free periods. An examination by an experienced general physician or, if necessary, an orthopedist should be able to confirm the benign nature of these spasms and the doctor should be able to instruct you in the proper exercises.

Morning neck pain of the type you describe is often associated with mild arthritis of the neck which, believe it or not, is not uncommon even in young people. The condition is the result of the human head having become rather heavy for the slender bones in your neck (cervical spine). The pain is aggravated by the head being bent in one direction or another for prolonged periods of time. This is especially apt to happen in deep sleep or following an evening of heavy drinking.

The remedy is simple. Take a bulky, but not large towel and fold it in thirds lengthwise. Fasten the towel around your neck with a large safety pin each night before you go to sleep. The towel need not be fastened tightly. The bulk and the added sensory stimulation decreases the probability of putting kinks in your neck.

"Knowledge For Fulfillment"

The Vermont center for the International Meditation Society has announced plans to offer a "Knowledge for Fulfillment" program to Chittenden County adults and students. The society, which has been teaching courses in Transcendental Meditation at UVM and all over Vermont for four years, will use video taped lectures prepared by Maharishi International University. The program begins with a course on the Science of Creative Intelligence, which includes a theoretical study of creativity and the process of learning, and instruction in Transcendental Meditation, the practical technique for experientially verifying the theory and directly increasing the individual level of intelligence.

The program then proceeds to examine traditional disciplines in the light of principles revealed by this study of intelligence. Courses planned include physics courses on relativity and coherent states, math, biology, western philosophy, vedic studies, music, art, law and government, and management sciences.

William Brunelle, Vermont president of the International Meditation Society, gave an introductory talk on Transcendental Meditation and answered questions about Maharishi International

Applications Increase At State And Land-Grant Universities

by National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges

Freshman applications to state and land-grant universities are up this spring but freshman enrollment is expected to decrease slightly this fall.

Responses from 104 institutions holding membership in the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges (NASULGC) concerning applications received by March 1 for admission to next fall's freshman class showed an increase of 3.27 percent over applications received by the same date in 1973. Respondents to the survey conducted by the Association's Office of Research and Information had received 489,759 applications in 1974 compared with 474,271 in 1973. However, data from 105 institutions regarding estimated freshman enrollment for fall, 1974 indicated that enrollment will drop slightly from 312,933 in fall, 1973 to 311,192 in fall, 1974.

Decreases are expected on only 38 campuses among the total 121 four-year campuses providing individual survey responses. Seventy-four campuses said they expect an increase in freshman enrollment, five reported no change in expected enrollment, and four campuses did not have comparable data for both years.

The primary reasons cited for decreases or for very small increases in enrollment were: The growing tendency for many students to enter vocational-technical schools or to begin their higher education at community colleges, which was mentioned by 50 survey respondents; less interest in attending college, listed by 44 campuses and the elimination of the draft, reported as a factor by 36 campuses. Other reasons given by more than ten campuses were: Decrease in the size of the college-age population, limitations on freshman enrollment and increases in student charges.

As of March 1, 63 campuses had an increase in the number of applications they had received compared with the previous year while 52 campuses had a decrease. Four campuses had no change and two were not able to give comparative data.

The reasons for decreases or very slight increases in applications mentioned most often by survey respondents were closely parallel to the reasons given for expected enrollment drops. The growth of community colleges and vocational-technical schools was cited by 49 campuses as affecting applications. Less interest in attending college was the second-ranked reason, mentioned by 45 campuses.

A greater number of qualified freshman applicants will be rejected by state and land-grant universities in 1974 than were rejected in 1973. Twenty-seven institutions reported that they expect to reject a total of 36,943 qualified applicants. In 1973 a total of 35,243 qualified applicants were rejected by 26 institutions.

Enrollment quotas are the primary reason why qualified applicants continue to be rejected at a time when enrollment is generally leveling off. Twenty-three institutions, including several who were not able to provide exact figures on the number to be rejected, listed enrollment quotas as a reason for turning down qualified students. Eight institutions also mentioned quotas in specific programs as a reason for rejections.

Other reasons, mentioned much less frequently, included: Financial restraints, cited by nine institutions; greater retention of current students, mentioned by five institutions and the admission of transfer students, listed by four institutions. As is generally the case, the bulk of the rejections will be made by a handful of institutions. Eight survey respondents accounted for 25,650 of the rejections. These institutions and the number of rejections they expect to make are:

Cornell University – (7,000)
University of Vermont – (4,000)
University of Washington – (3,500)
University of Mass., Amherst – (2,550)
University of New Hampshire – (2,500)
University of Connecticut – (2,100)
Mass. Inst. of Technology – (2,000)
Temple University – (2,000)

The majority of qualified applicants who are rejected by state and land-grant universities are out-of-state residents. Only 14 institutions reported that they plan to reject qualified in-state applicants for a total of 5,903 rejections. However, 23 institutions said they would reject a total of 22,480 qualified out-of-state applicants. The remainder of the expected rejections were not classified by residency.

The fact that freshman enrollment will probably decline slightly at state and land-grant universities this fall does not mean that there will be a corresponding decline in total enrollment in 1974 nor even in the next two or three years.

Enrollment data for state and land-grant universities for the past three years has consistently shown a larger increase in total enrollment than in freshman enrollment. In fall, 1971 total enrollment at NASULGC institutions increased 5.7 percent but enrollment of first-time freshmen was up only .32 per cent. In fall, 1972, freshman enrollment was actually down one per cent while total enrollment increased 2.43 per cent. In fall, 1973, total enrollment increased 2.96 per cent with freshman enrollment moving up only 2.41 per cent.

The 1973-74 NASULGC enrollment report notes that the increasing popularity of two-year institutions is affecting freshman enrollment while making little difference in total enrollment because of the transfer of a large number of students to state and land-grant institutions at the upperclass level.

"Better retention of students, cited by institution after institution as a significant factor accounting for continuing enrollment growth, is also having a decided effect on freshman enrollment growth at a time when enrollment quotas are becoming a fact of life at many large institutions," the report continued.

In-state applications to state and land-grant universities outnumbered out-of-state applications 2.85 to 1, according to data from 79 institutions which were able to provide information by residency classification. These institutions had received a total of 276,947

WRUV: Student Radio At The University Of Vermont

What is WRUV?

WRUV-AM and WRUV-FM are the student-owned and student-operated radio stations at UVM.

WRUV-AM (580 on your dial) is the carrier current station that has been broadcasting to the campus since 1954 from studio facilities in the Pomeroy Hall Annex. Since it is limited to the campus and fraternities, "AM" has the unique ability to program exclusively to the student population. Programming tends to be some of the more popular kinds of music (not "Top 40" and no "screaming" D.J.'s) with your requests always welcome! Since the station is supported by funds from the Student Association, the air time is not turned over to innumerable commercials. There are simply shows that are good, shows that are better than good, with a few spectaculars thrown in for good measure! Subscriptions to ABC news and United Press International keep you up to date with what's happening around the state, nation, and world. If you're a sports fan, "AM" carries all home hockey games, a selected schedule of home basketball games, with all home football games being added to the schedule this fall.

At 90.1 on the dial, WRUV-FM has been broadcasting to the campus and community as a non-commercial educational station since 1965. "FM" has studio facilities on the second floor of Pomeroy Hall. FM's programming is largely progressive music. For a change of pace there is a classical program each weeknight and Sundays, with shows dedicated to jazz, soul, and yes, even barbershop quartets scattered throughout the week's schedule. With only a few exceptions, programming is independent from that of WRUV-AM, and visa versa. Until this summer, "FM" has been broadcasting at a power of 10 watts, but the FCC has granted it a power increase to 350 watts. With a signal reaching into Canada and as far south as Middlebury, some interesting possibilities are now in store. Plans are also in the works to go 'stereo' shortly.

What does all this mean to you?

WRUV-AM and WRUV-FM always have room for more personnel. Announcer, sportscaster, librarian, or engineer, among other possibilities – there's plenty to do if you're hunting for an interesting extra-curricular activity. Membership is open to all students of UVM, regardless of college or major. This year WRUV-AM celebrates its 20th anniversary – help make it a success.

Jobs Available In Europe

Summer jobs are available in Europe for August, September and October. These are the busiest resort and hotel months in Europe. Jobs, work permits and other necessary papers are tallied on a first come, first served, non-profit basis to any interested student. No previous experience is necessary, standard wages are paid, and every job additionally provides free room and board.

A winter job in Europe program is also underway for students interested in working in ski resorts in the Swiss, Austrian or French Alps. These jobs are available from around Christmastime (depending upon when the first snows come) to April. In all cases applications should be submitted immediately to allow time for processing a job and making other necessary arrangements such as room and board.

Brief orientation periods are provided by Student Overseas Services (SOS) for every student. The orientations, which are very popular, are a combination of a fun introduction to Europe and to make certain you get off to your job with all the need-to-know information and with all the questions answered. Students from all over the U.S. give high marks to this system of mixing the business of quickly preparing you for getting the most out of your trip to Europe with the pleasures of everyday European life.

So far this summer more than a thousand students have chosen to pack up and see Europe on this low-cost, earn-as-you-go basis. The expanding experience of working in Europe combined with the opportunity to earn back the trip costs seems to be a practical way for many students to enrich their lives.

However, many students have taken part in the orientations only because of the educational tour experience which is set in an atmosphere of fun and excitement. Still others opt for the famous SOS "Operation Backroads" bicycle tours which careen through the Champagne country of France to Paris (and, incidentally, include a new European 10-speed touring bike).

Interested students may obtain free job application forms and other information by writing to either SOS, 22 Ave. de la Liberte, Luxembourg, Europe; or to SOS, Box 5173, Santa Barbara, California 93108. Processing can be hastened by getting and holding three passport size photos and a letter of recommendation from a teacher or former employer.

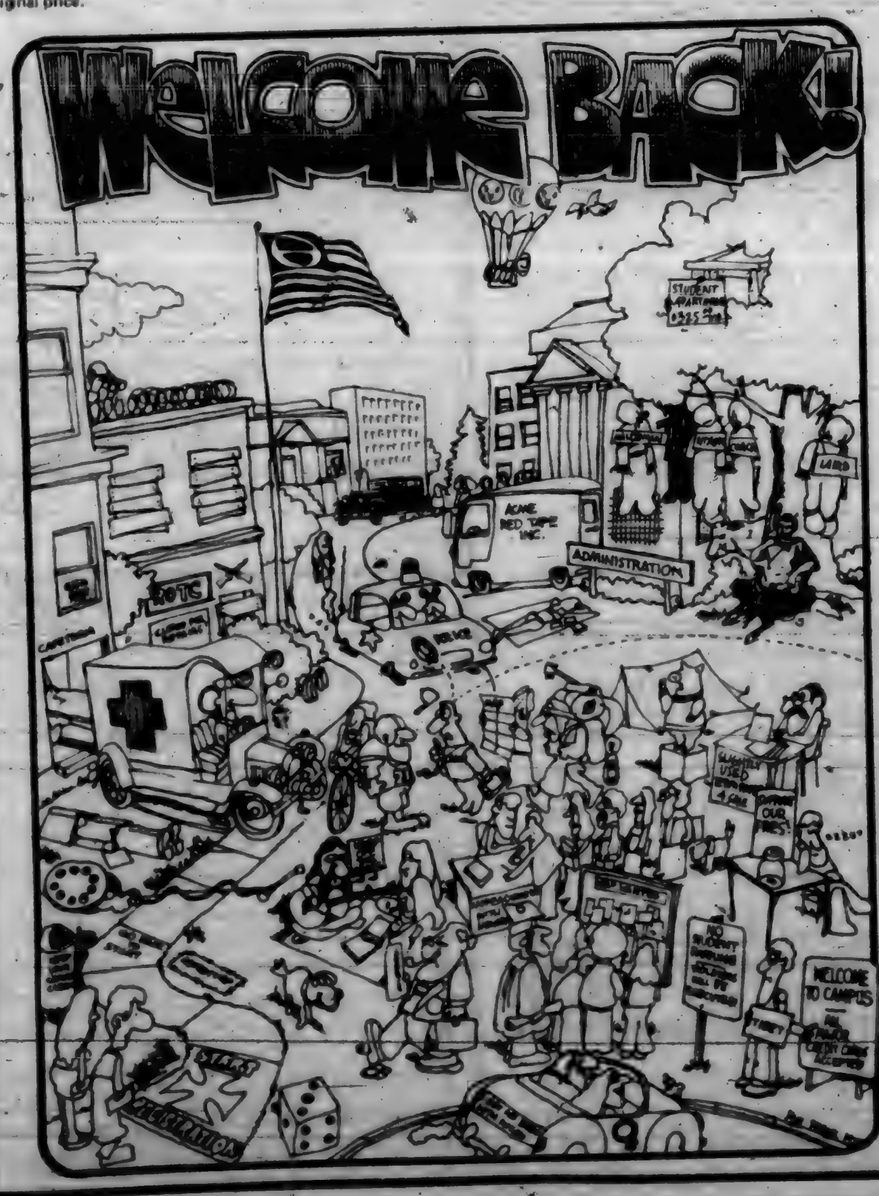
Services

The University Store is a self-service operation with up to nine checkouts to provide you with efficient service. We ask that you leave your notebooks, books and attache cases in the bookdrop at the entrance or in the free coin-return lockers which are provided, before you enter the sales area. This habit will eliminate embarrassment for you and the cashier when you are ready to leave.

Special Orders

With a small deposit we will order any book in print not currently in our stock. We have available the latest copies of BOOKS IN PRINT, PAPERBOUND BOOKS IN PRINT and SUBJECT GUIDE TO BOOKS IN PRINT, if at any time you would like to look up information regarding price, publisher, title or author of any book published in the United States. Our special order service is also often used by fraternities and sororities for banquet favors and graduation gifts.



Book Department

Textbooks

Our most important service is providing you with your "tools of the trade" — the textbooks you will need to complete your course work. We trust that you will come to know that these books which have been selected by the faculty are the carefully chosen tools of your profession which, with proper use, will open new fields of knowledge and understanding. Seeking an education without books is like trying to build a house without a hammer. Tools are vital to any worthwhile endeavor.

Bookrush Procedure

Our textbook department is set up for self-service with the books shelved by course in course number order. You will notice signs which indicate each major area such as English, History or Zoology. Under each of these are grouped the books by course number. Copies of the book list are readily available in the book section and, of course, the store staff is always available to assist you should you experience difficulty.

Shopping baskets are provided to assist you. Please keep your register receipt which the cashier gives you. This is your proof of payment and must be presented with any request for adjustment or refund.

Do not make any sort of marks, including your name, in the books which you purchase until you have attended class and are absolutely sure you have purchased the proper ones.

Textbook Prices

Because the prices for your elementary and high school textbooks were, in many cases, lost in the total tax dollar your parents paid, paying cash for textbooks will be a new experience for you. You will discover, as thousands of college students have discovered before you, that textbooks are expensive. They are expensive because they are costly to write, to publish, to ship and to sell; and because the evergrowing body of knowledge in our atomic and space age gives most textbooks a shortened period of usability. Nevertheless, your textbook investment will represent less than 3% of the total cost of your education, while the knowledge you will gain from their proper use will have a value that cannot be measured in dollars and cents. The prices you will pay are established by the textbook publishers and not the store. Students all over the nation are paying the same price that you are for these books.

Used Books

In order to stretch your textbook dollar we attempt to have available used copies of current texts whenever possible. We purchase these from University students and from used book companies. The University Store buys used books at one-half the current new book price and sells them for three-fourths. This is a standard bookstore policy across the country. Should the same used book be sold back to us a second time the student is still paid one-half the current new book price. Thus he has paid only 25% for the use of a required book. Representatives of used book companies are at the University Store three times each year. They will buy back the books being dropped from course use providing the book has market value. Their prices are current market prices which will average 20 to 25% of the new price. We will buy dropped books for them during the balance of the year at the same rate.

The initial purchase of a text from the University Store carries no re-sale guarantee, for no faculty member is committed to use a text for more than the semester it has been assigned. Therefore, we would urge you to make every effort to obtain your money's worth through studying your texts. Then the ability to sell (those you do not care to add to your library) will be an added dividend.

Non-Textbooks

You will find thousands of books in the University Store you will not be required to buy as textbooks, but which will, nevertheless, become a vital part of your education — if you let them. We readily admit we will encourage, tempt and entice you to discover (if you have not already done so) the wonderful world of books. We believe that every college student should devote considerable time, thought, and at least a portion of his or her allowance in acquiring a carefully-selected personal library. We invite you to begin the selection of your library from the wide choice of great and good books (in both cloth and peper bindings) you will find on our shelves.

Other Merchandise

You will find a great many other items in addition to books at the University Store. Notebooks and pencils, stationary and book-ends, toothpaste and shampoo, art supplies and greeting cards, desk pads and study lamps, pennants and pups, and those indispensable Vermont sweatshirts and jackets.

Efforts Increase To Unionize Professors

By Phillip W. Semas
From the Chronicle of Higher Education

The National Education Association has taken a series of steps to increase dramatically its efforts to unionize college professors.

Meeting here last week, the N.E.A.:

- Increased its 1974-75 budget for organizing professors from $620,000 to more than $1-million. That includes a 150-per-cent increase in funds for organizing efforts financed jointly by the N.E.A. and its state affiliates and more money to train staff members and elected college leaders.
- Added one additional staff member, bringing to 10 the number of campus organizers working out of N.E.A. headquarters in Washington. In addition, the N.E.A. will have 24 organizers financed jointly by the national and state organizations and working out of state offices. More than 30 other staff members are employed by 18 state affiliates to work with professors who are already unionized.
- Created a Special Project in Higher Education to coordinate the organizing effort and to see that N.E.A. services are made more available to its college members. The project, whose director will report directly to N.E.A. Executive Secretary Terry Herndon, will be staffed primarily by the current higher education division.
- Created a Council on Higher Education to represent higher education professors in the N.E.A. governance structure. The council, which would replace two boards that currently represent professors from two-year and four-year colleges, will have special non-voting representatives on the N.E.A.'s top governing bodies.

Task-Force Report

These actions were all recommended by a task force on higher education created by last year's N.E.A. convention in Portland, Ore. The task force was chaired by George Gamsoon, a teacher at Cabrillo Community College in California and a former member of the N.E.A. executive committee.

The task-force report was released at the N.E.A. convention here. Some of the recommendations had been approved by the N.E.A. leadership before the convention began. Others were approved by the 10,000-member Representative Assembly, which the N.E.A. bills as the "world's largest deliberative body."

Although N.E.A. President Helen Wise said in her presidential address that "our efforts to enroll higher education teachers have been productive," the task force expressed considerable concern about the state of the N.E.A.'s campus efforts.

"Now is the time for N.E.A. to move aggressively to organize higher education teachers," the task force said. "Failure to invest the necessary resources now will result in both short-term and long-term losses in numbers, revenue, and power for the united teaching profession."

Although the N.E.A. is the collective-bargaining agent for more professors on more campuses than either of its rivals, the American Federation of Teachers (A.F.L.-C.I.O.) and the American Association of University Professors, it has not done well in recent elections, especially on four-year campuses.

Concerned About A.A.U.P.

"Today, N.E.A. faces a situation in higher education where it must establish its image and its status," the task force said.

Although it noted that the A.F.T. "seeks to capture the loyalty of the more militant college teacher at all levels," the task force seemed most concerned about the threat from the A.A.U.P.

"The A.A.U.P. currently enjoys an important advantage over the N.E.A.," the task force said. "The A.A.U.P. is the historically recognized voice of the college and university faculty members. Too often college teachers in search of an organization to weather today's academic storms gravitate spontaneously to the A.A.U.P., thereby sacrificing power for prestige."

To improve the N.E.A.'s image, the task force recommended a public relations program, which was approved by the N.E.A. leadership and budgeted for $60,000.

The task force also argued that the N.E.A. must do more in higher education, both in organizing and in providing services to college professors.

Noting that N.E.A. conventions voted in 1968 to launch a campus organizing drive and in 1972 to make higher education a "priority," the task force said "progress has been limited by inadequate resources and a lack of coordination."

'Basic Organizing'

The task force distinguished between what it called "basic organizing," N.E.A. commitment to the college sector."

So far, the task force said, cooperative efforts between the state and national organizations have been "deficient" because of "inappropriate and inadequate staffing."

"The N.E.A.," the task force said, "needs to assign staff to basic organizing who have credibility in the eyes of the college teacher. The N.E.A. must take special care to train staff organizers so that they are sensitive to differences between the K-12 (kindergarten to 12th grade) sector and higher education, and equipped to cope with the malaise of hyperprofessionalism."

Braille Door Labels To Aid The Blind

The blind who attend the University of Vermont or visit its campus are being given a helping hand.

Under the direction of Larry Snyder, director of administrative resources, labeling tapes embossed with identifying messages in Braille are being attached to doors and placed in elevators in University buildings.

But Snyder and Altagracia Evangelista, the UVM student who is preparing and affixing the tapes, are running into a problem: Persons see the tapes, don't know what they are, conclude they were stuck on doors as a prank, and remove them.

"If we can solve this problem," Snyder said, "we can move ahead with our program, the goal of which is to mark all restrooms, elevators, and department and administrative offices."

Ms. Evangelista makes the tape signs, using a small tape label machine that automatically converts the letters into Braille symbols. Those signs are easily attached to a hard surface — and equally easily removed.

Regulations Enacted To Deal With Pets

In keeping with University-wide concern for the health and safety of the students, faculty, and to bring the University into compliance with city and town ordinances, the following regulations will be effected with respect to dogs, cats, and other domestic pets.

No animals will be allowed in food service areas which includes residence dining halls and the Billings Center Den. Unless otherwise posted, animals will be allowed in academic and public University buildings only when on leash and in classrooms only with specific permission of the instructor. The owner of such animals will have complete control of the animal at all times. This means that the animal shall not run at large, and will not be tied to trees, buildings, bike racks or any stationary objects while unattended.

Any violation of the above regulations should be reported to the Security Office. Security is responsible for contacting Wes-Rae Kennels, Williston Road, South Burlington, Vermont for proper disposition of animals removed from campus.

John To Direct School Of Natural Resources

Dr. Hugo H. John, associate dean of the College of Forestry, Wildlife and Range Sciences at the University of Idaho, has been named first director of the University of Vermont School of Natural Resources.

In making the announcement, Dr. Edward C. Andrews Jr., University president, said, "Dr. John was chosen from among more than School of Natural Resources."

Dr. John will assume his new position Aug. 1. At that time he will replace Dr. Wallace W. Christensen, who has been acting director of the school as well as chairman of the Department of Forestry. Dr. Christensen will continue in the latter position.

The school was created in June, 1973 during a major reorganization of the University's colleges and schools, and its creation represented an effort by the University to combine all of its natural resource activities.

New England S

The New England Land Grant University presidents approved a report in June recommending that the New England states contract for student spaces in existing veterinary colleges to meet present student demand.

The report, prepared by a Task Force on Veterinary Medicine which included representatives of all six universities, will be sent to the governors of the six states and to the New England Board of Higher Education (NEBHE).

The report also recommends that the states re-evaluate long-term alternatives to a regional veterinary college in New England as proposed in an earlier report from NEBHE.

In their endorsement of the report the university presidents said the Task Force "has offered an immediate solution to the problem of space for qualified New Englanders who wish to become veterinarians, without foreclosing future options in a veterinary medical education program."

The Task Force report submitted at today's meeting said there are possibilities for at least 30 contract admissions in existing veterinary colleges in the fall of 1975 and at least 60 such admissions by the fall of 1980.

An earlier study by NEBHE, which recommended the construction of a New England veterinary college, had set the level of enrollment for their proposed school at 60 per year.

Dr. Ben R. Forsyth, associate dean of the University of Vermont Division of Health Sciences and chairman of the Task Force, said the study had "established the feasibility of the contract approach and the desirability of developing a comprehensive veterinary medicine program that takes advantage of resources in the region and in existing colleges of veterinary medicine outside the region."

Commenting on the differences between the original NEBHE reports and the Task Force recommendations, Forsyth said: "When the NEBHE reports were prepared the contract option did not appear to be feasible. Circumstances have changed in the last year and a half, however. Established veterinary colleges want to expand, but federal funds are not available and state treasuries are strapped."

"Contracts can meet the immediate student demand in New England without foreclosing the long-term possibility of a college of veterinary medicine in New England," he said. "Those contracts would also give the New England Board and state officials an opportunity to re-evaluate the best way to meet our long-term veterinary medicine needs."

Efforts Increase To Unionize Professors

by Phillip W. Semas
From the Chronicle of Higher Education

The National Education Association has taken a series of steps to increase dramatically its efforts to unionize college professors.

Meeting here last week, the N.E.A.:

• Increased its 1974-75 budget for organizing professors from $620,000 to more than $1-million. That includes a 150-per-cent increase in funds for organizing efforts financed jointly by the N.E.A. and its state affiliates and more money to train staff members and elected college leaders.

• Added one additional staff member, bringing to 10 the number of campus organizers working out of N.E.A. headquarters in Washington. In addition, the N.E.A. will have 24 organizers financed jointly by the national and state organizations and working out of state offices. More than 30 other staff members are employed by 18 state affiliates to work with professors who are already unionized.

• Created a Special Project in Higher Education to coordinate the organizing effort and to see that N.E.A. services are made more available to its college members. The project, whose director will report directly to N.E.A. Executive Secretary Terry Herndon, will be staffed primarily by the current higher education division.

• Created a Council on Higher Education to represent higher education professors in the N.E.A. governance structure. The council, which would replace two boards that currently represent professors from two-year and four-year colleges, will have special non-voting representatives on the N.E.A.'s top governing bodies.

Task Force Report

These actions were all recommended by a task force on higher education created by last year's N.E.A. convention in Portland, Ore. The task force was chaired by George Gumerson, a teacher at Cabrillo Community College in California and a former member of the N.E.A. executive committee.

The task-force report was released at the N.E.A. convention here. Some of the recommendations had been approved by the N.E.A. leadership before the convention began. Others were approved by the 10,000-member Representative Assembly, which the N.E.A. bills as the "world's largest deliberative body."

Although N.E.A. President Helen Wise said in her presidential address that "our efforts to enroll higher education teachers have been productive," the task force expressed considerable concern about the state of the N.E.A.'s campus efforts.

"Now is the time for N.E.A. to move aggressively to organize higher education teachers," the task force said. "Failure to invest the necessary resources now will result in both short-term and long-term losses in numbers, revenue, and power for the united teaching profession."

Although the N.E.A. is the collective-bargaining agent for more professors on more campuses than either of its rivals, the American Federation of Teachers (A.F.L.-C.I.O.) and the American Association of University Professors, it has not done well in recent elections, especially on four-year campuses.

Concerned About A.A.U.P.

New England Seeks Veterinary Colleges

The New England Land Grant University presidents approved a report in June recommending that the New England states contract for student spaces in existing veterinary colleges to meet present student demand.

The report, prepared by a Task Force on Veterinary Medicine which included representatives of all six universities, will be sent to the governors of the six states and to the New England Board of Higher Education (NEBHE).

The report also recommends that the states re-evaluate long-term alternatives to a regional veterinary college in New England as proposed in an earlier report from NEBHE.

In their endorsement of the report the university presidents said the Task Force "has offered an immediate solution to the problem of space for qualified New Englanders who wish to become veterinarians, without foreclosing future options in a veterinary medical education program."

The Task Force report submitted at today's meeting said there are possibilities for at least 30 contract admissions in existing veterinary colleges in the fall of 1975 and at least 60 such admissions by the fall of 1980.

An earlier study by NEBHE, which recommended the construction of a New England veterinary college, had set the level of enrollment for their proposed school at 60 per year.

Dr. Ben R. Forsyth, associate dean of the University of Vermont Division of Health Sciences and chairman of the Task Force, said the study had "established the feasibility of the contract approach and the desirability of developing a comprehensive veterinary medicine program that takes advantage of resources in the region and in existing colleges of veterinary medicine outside the region."

Commenting on the differences between the original NEBHE reports and the Task Force recommendations, Forsyth said: "When the NEBHE reports were prepared the contract option did not appear to be feasible. Circumstances have changed in the last year and a half, however. Established veterinary colleges want to expand, but federal funds are not available and state treasuries are strapped."

"Contracts can meet the immediate student demand in New England without foreclosing the long-term possibility of a college of veterinary medicine in New England," he said. "Those contracts would also give the New England Board and state officials an opportunity to re-evaluate the best way to meet our long-term veterinary medicine needs."

The Task Force report contains eight recommendations.

"1. We recommend that the Presidents of the Land-Grant Universities of New England propose to the Governors of the six New England states, other appropriate state officials and legislators, and the New England Board of Higher Education that steps be taken to negotiate joint contracts for up to 60 admissions per year for qualified New England Veterinary Medical students in existing colleges of veterinary medicine."

"2. We recommend that such negotiations be based on the principle that contracts should provide for fair and equitable sharing of expansion costs and annual costs of education."

"3. We recommend that contract arrangements include cooperative programs in research, diagnostic services, clinical training, internships, residencies, veterinary technician training, and continuing education."

"4. We recommend that such contracts include creative arrangements for policy input in curriculum and other educational and service policies with the contracting institutions, affirmative action in equal opportunity for admissions, and fair and reasonable provisions for modification or termination of contracts."

"5. We recommend that the Presidents urge a target date of the fall of 1975 for the admission of at least 30 such qualified New England veterinary medical students under the proposed contracts, and that the full complement of 60 students per year be reached no later than the fall of 1980."

"6. We recommend that the Presidents urge the Governors, other appropriate state officials and legislators, and the New England Board of Higher Education to authorize and undertake studies to determine equitable and flexible arrangements for the allocation of student spaces

Vermont Law School Announces The Election Of New Trustees

The trustees of the Vermont Law School recently announced the election of Judge Sterry R. Waterman of St. Johnsbury and Bernard Lisman, Esq. of Burlington as trustees of the school. Judge Waterman will become president of the board of trustees when the current president, Thomas M. Debevoise, resigns to become dean on June 7, 1974, as previously announced.

Vermont Law School was founded last year in South Royalton, by Anthony N. Doria, who also served as dean during the school's first academic year which ends June 7. The trustees arranged a small ceremony at the Law School at 4:00 p.m. that day to honor Dr. Doria, the founding dean, and to induct the new dean, Mr. Debevoise.

Judge Waterman started his practice of law in St. Johnsbury in 1926 and is a nationally recognized jurist and legal scholar. In addition to his active practice in Vermont, he served as general counsel to the Vermont Unemployment Commission and is a member of the Vermont Uniform State Laws Commission. He became a U.S. Circuit Judge for the Second Circuit in 1955. (The 2nd Circuit covers the States of Connecticut, New York and Vermont).

Judge Waterman has served as a member of the Board of Visitors of the Chicago Law School. He is a Fellow of the American Bar Association, a member of the American and New England Law Institutes, as well as being a past president of the American Judicature Society and the Vermont Bar Association. He has received honorary degrees from Dartmouth College where he was an undergraduate and from George Washington University, his law school, and from the University of Vermont.

Bernard Lisman was Phi Beta Kappa at the University of Vermont and has been in active practice in Burlington since his graduation from Harvard Law School. A former Municipal Court Judge, he was the first president of the Vermont Trial Lawyers Association and is currently a member of the Board of the International Academy of Trial Lawyers. He is also currently Chairman of the Vermont Industrial Aid Board, and, among his many civic activities, remains a member of the board of the Burlington Boys Club of which he is a past president.

The other trustees of the Vermont Law School are Harold Berman, Story Professor of Law at Harvard Law School; Honorable Franklin S. Billings, Jr., Vermont Superior Judge, and Frank G. Mahady, Esq., a practicing attorney in White River Junction.

Gaden Named Dean

Dr. Elmer L. Gaden Jr., who has been called the "father of biochemical engineering," has been recommended to be dean of the University of Vermont College of Engineering, Mathematics and Business Administration.

Dr. Edward C. Andrews Jr., president of the University, said the appointment is subject to confirmation by the Board of Trustees.

Dr. Gaden will replace Dr. Joseph A. Izzo, who has been acting dean since 1971, following the sabbatical leave and subsequent resignation of Dr. Warren O. Essler.

Dr. Gaden has been a member of the faculty of Columbia University since 1949, with teaching responsibilities in chemical engineering, bioengineering and, since 1966, history. He has also been responsible for initiating interdisciplinary undergraduate instruction in "technology and society." From 1960 to 1969 and again from 1971 he has been chairman of Columbia's Department of Chemical Engineering and Applied Chemistry.

Women And Minorities Pose Threat To Faculties

by Malcolm G. Scully
From the Chronicle of Higher Education

Federal efforts to increase the number of women and blacks on university faculties threaten to undermine the quality and morale of those faculties, according to a study sponsored by the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education.

The author of the study – Richard A. Lester, professor of economics and former dean of the faculty at Princeton University – argues that the traditional methods of faculty self-government are crucial to maintaining academic excellence.

Many federal officials responsible for enforcing anti-bias regulations do not seem to understand the procedures and standards used in faculty self-government, Mr. Lester says.

Instead, the officials are attempting to apply "an industry model of authority and personnel management to university faculty operations."

The use of such a model, he says, poses a "threat to the faculty system of collegial decision-making based on professional assessment of merit."

Study of 20 Universities

Mr. Lester bases his conclusions on a study of federally required affirmative-action programs at 20 major universities.

He is especially critical of efforts to develop such programs for tenured positions in those universities.

"Significant deviations from choice of the best available person for a tenure position as judged by mature teacher-scholars under proper procedures is likely to cause faculty members, both tenured and non-tenured, to lose confidence in the integrity of the system of professional determination of promotions and appointments to tenure," he says.

However, Mr. Lester says that abolishing affirmative-action programs at this time "would seem to be premature."

He calls instead for major revisions that would concentrate efforts on increasing the supply of "qualified" women and minority-group faculty members at the initial level of academic employment. He also calls for special programs in fields where the available pool of women and minority-group faculty members is especially small.

To enforce nondiscrimination for faculty appointments beyond the beginning level, Mr. Lester would develop a system of mediation and arbitration to be run by a national or regional board of arbitration, made up of tenured faculty members with sufficient independence, academic reputation, and experience to warrant wide respect.

'Defects' in H.E.W. Program

In his study, Mr. Lester reports a number of "defects" in the current program of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to enforce regulations against bias:

• "Failure to recognize and take into account the fact that demand for tenured faculty is highly individualistic and selective, based on personal achievement of the highest quality as a teacher-scholar and stimulated by competition for excellence of faculty."

• Failure to analyze properly the differences in the supply of women and minority-group faculty members for various academic disciplines and subfields.

• "Pressures for discriminatory hiring to meet inflated goals," resulting in what amounts to "reverse discrimination."

• Inconsistent treatment of universities by different government agencies, and by H.E.W. field offices.

Mr. Lester's report, which views current federal policies as threats to the meritocratic principles of choosing a faculty, is sure to add to the growing controversy over the impact of affirmative action on colleges and universities.

Mary M. Lepper, director of the higher education division of the Office for Civil Rights in H.E.W., said she took strong issue with Mr. Lester's overall premise that affirmative action threatened the quality of colleges and universities.

Increasing the Supply

"Show me some empirical data that quality is being hurt. I don't know of any," Ms. Lepper said.

She said her office would devote over half its resources next year to increasing the supply of women and minority-group faculty members.

Ms. Lepper rejected the concept of applying rigorous standards for affirmative action only at the beginning level.

"It is not enough to look only at the initial hiring of women and minorities," she said. "We have to look, too, at how many of them get tenure, how many get promoted, and how many get salary equity."

Ms. Lepper said many of Mr. Lester's criticisms of the management of the programs of affirmative action were valid, especially criticisms of the different standards applied by the various regional offices.

She said steps were now being taken to correct such deficiencies.

Mr. Lester's report of his study – Antibias Regulation of Universities: Faculty Problems and Their Solutions – will be published later this month by McGraw Hill Book Co.

"7. We recommend that the Presidents suggest that the New England Board of Higher Education re-evaluate the alternatives of a college of veterinary medicine in New England and contracts for student places in existing veterinary colleges as a long-term solution to the region's veterinary medical education needs."

"8. We recommend that the Presidents take appropriate steps to insure a continuing contribution by the Land-Grant Universities to the development of a comprehensive program of veterinary medicine, animal science, and public health services that includes the efficient and economic use of New England's existing and potential educational resources in these areas."

"Veterinary colleges would be attracted by the regional pool of students, and students in the individual states would have a wider selection of veterinary colleges. Pooling our resources makes economic and educational sense."

Almost half of all survey respondents (46) reported changes in applications that were within the range of a five per cent increase or decrease. However, 32 institutions had increases of more than five per cent, with six of these institutions reporting increases greater than 26 percent. At the other end of the scale only 17 institutions had decreases of better than five per cent.

Approximately two-thirds of the survey respondents (63) expected their enrollment changes to be within the range of five per cent either up or down. The largest single group of respondents (26) estimated that enrollment would increase from one to five percent. Twenty-two institutions reported expected enrollment increases of more than five per cent while 11 estimated that they would have drops in enrollment of more than five per cent.

"Tis a Privilege to Live in Vermont"

Tuition Rises For Both In And Out-Of-Staters

by Randy Jansen

Economic woes are plaguing UVM as inflation continues to rise in the U.S. In an interview with Dr. Wayne Patterson, Executive Vice President, he feels that the economic situation is responsible for the decision to raise tuition rates for both in-state and out-of-state students.

For the 1976 fiscal year, a minimum rise of $95 for Vermont students and $215 for out-of-state students is expected. This is a 10 per cent jump for in-staters and 8.1 per cent for out-of-staters. Rising costs and declining revenues share the blame for the tuition hike.

INSTATE	FISCAL YEAR 75	PROJECTED FISCAL YEAR 76	PROJECTED FISCAL YEAR 77
Tuition	950	1,045	1,175
Room	585	750	825
Board	580	620	680
Library Fee	30	30	50
Athletic Fee	30	30	50
Health Fee	48	64	64
Student Association	21.50	21.50	21.50
Total Instate	2,244.50	2,560.50	2,865.50

OUT OF STATE	FISCAL YEAR 75	PROJECTED FISCAL YEAR 76	PROJECTED FISCAL YEAR 77
Tuition	2,650	2,865	3,210

Student Association	21.50	21.50	21.50
Total Out-of-State	3,944.50	4,380.50	4,900.50

In the figures above for Fiscal Year (FY) 76 the tuition increases are only the minimum increases. Tuition could and probably will increase more. The figures for Fiscal Year (FY) 77 tuition increases are the maximum increase that can be expected.

State appropiation is a grave concern for the administration, In a meeting with Governor Salmon, college officials were told that state tax revenues are predicted to decline about 7½ million for this year as the result of the poor skiing season, the plight of the Vermont farmer and a host of other conditions. Dr. Patterson fears that state appropriations for UVM will not be enough to offset inflation costs.

If the Vermont legislation decides to shave money off some programs in the general budget, UVM could become a good target. Such an occurrence would create havoc in the financial problems of UVM, as education traditionally has a low priority in the Vermont legislature.

Approximately 25 per cent of UVM's resources come from Vermont state appropiations. As mentioned above, a substantial increase in

President Ford To Visit UVM; Senator Aiken To Be Honored

by Margo Howland

President Gerald Ford is scheduled to host a testimonial dinner for Vermont's Senator George Aiken at UVM's Patrick Gymnasium on October 7. Aiken is retiring this year after a long and distinguished career in the Senate.

The $50 a plate dinner was to have been held in Barre's Memorial Auditorium, the traditional site of fund raising dinners for the Republican Party. Last year, then Vice-President Ford agreed to be the guest speaker at the dinner. Upon becoming President, Ford indicated that he wouldn't be able to attend.

Two weeks ago, however, Ford decided to accept the invitation. Immediately speculation arose that the dinner might have to be moved to a larger facility.

So, Representative Richard Snelling, R-Shelburne, Finance Chairman of the Vermont Republican State Committee, inquired in a letter on August 30, whether Patrick Gymnasium would be available and, if so, under what condition. A similar request was sent to St. Michael's College.

Senator George Aiken

Last week, UVM Executive Vice President Dr. Wayne Patterson responded in a letter to the committee, that the Gym would be available.

There will be a fixed charge per day, and UVM will provide parking facilities, janitorial services, and other necessary requirments.

The Vermont State Republican Committee will make their own security agreements, while the University will have to meet all the requirements of the Secret Service. St. Michael's has also offered their facilities.

UVM President Dr. Edward Andrews said Monday he is "delighted to have the President of the United States visit the UVM campus."

Snelling indicated to the Cynic on Monday that no contracts have been signed yet, but "we think that's where it will be."

Saga Food Service is bidding on the catering of the dinner. If SAGA receives the bid, they will undoubtedly be using student help.

Dinner tickets have not been printed yet, but they will be available from any GOP County Chairman, or From Snelling.

President Ford may not find, however, the campus as quiet as the Republican Party may desire. There are reports that students and members of the community will protest the President's visit because of his recent pardon of former president Richard M. Nixon, a pardon which has stirred the nation into controversy once again.

President Ford has already experienced such protest in cities he has appeared in since his announcment last weekend.

Converse Hall To Undergo Renovations For $1.1 Million

by Bruce Madden

Converse Hall will undergo major renovations. The estimated cost is $1.1 million, most of which will come from federal HUD funds.

The 155 students will be displaced next semester. Keith Miser, UVM's Director of Residence Halls, does not anticipate any problem in relocating students, despite the acute housing shortage UVM now faces.

Mr. Miser stated that the number of students who fail to return for the second semester is just about equal to the number of students who are in Converse who will be displaced.

The renovation will take one semester and the entire summer to complete. It was decided to close it for the second semester because the housing situation would not be as acute as during the first semester.

Financially, the residence hall system will still be able to run in the black, even with the lost income of the 155 students in Converse.

Funding for the renovation comes chiefly from an HUD inter-subsidy loan which was initially supposed to be for a new infirmary. When the infirmary was voted to be moved to East Avenue, and the Converse renovation came to the forefront, the loan was switched from the infirmary to the Converse renovation. $986,000 will be granted from the loan and the rest of the $1.1 million will be made up of other smaller loans. The interest on the loan will be paid by the Federal government, while the university will pay off the principal over an extended loan. The Living/Learning Center and W-D-W were also constructed under the same type of loan.

Under the plans for renovation, Converse will have mostly single rooms. Singles are most in demand on campus. They will also bring in the greatest amount of income for the residence hall systems.

Final plans and designs will be finalized by a committee of students and planners. The design now includes use of the attic for lounges and public spaces. Additionally, the basement will be better utilized in order to include larger mailroom, lounges, and, possibly, student rooms.

Final plans must be ready for the trustees' approval at their meeting this month.

More Than 300 Students Victimized By Overcrowding

by George Georgeakis

Over 300 students are victims of overcrowding this semester, Dr. Keith Miser, director of housing at UVM, explained four reasons why this problem has occurred again this year.

Because of the rising cost of living many students moved back on campus. "Almost all the freshmen from last year stayed on campus and this has never happened before."

Unfortunately and unexpectedly, Mary Fletcher hospital would not rent Burgess Hall where 189 students lived previously.

Also, a negligable number of students (4-6) cancelled their room contracts, while only 150 were expected to cancel.

To cope with these problems, housing has filled two floors (about 100 women) at MacAuley Hall, owned by and located at Trinity College.

To accomodate the women residing at MacAuley Hall, the program has been made flexible so that the women may eat at Trinity or UVM. Also, special activities have been organized involving those women and students from other UVM dormitories.

As of Sept. 2nd, all the lounges were filled and every room possible was tripled. During the past week, enough cancellations and "no shows" will allow thirty women and thirty men to be moved into other rooms.

Dr. Miser explained that students were selected randomly to live in lounges and tripled rooms. In selecting those to be shifted from these rooms into normal living areas, he follows what he calls a "priority system." Basically, the students living in the most crowded and least desirable rooms will be moved first. About one half of the 320 people in the overflow will remain in such assignments.

After six weeks (October 4), students housed four to a lounge and three to a room which normally house two, will receive a refund," Dr. Miser stated. This does not apply to three or two to a lounge.

Last year a survey was conducted on overcrowding in relation to grades, and it was found that "there was no significant difference."

Dr. Miser finds the students "very cooperative and with good attitudes toward helping each other."

S.A. President Works For New, Viable Alternative To Pedestrian Underpass

by Barbara Frankel

Student Association President Peter MacAusland's plans for this year include continued reevaluation of the pedestrian tunnel scheduled to be erected on Main Street. His other top priority issues range from spending more S.A. funds on student activities to sponsoring a campus-wide voter registration drive.

Pedestrian Tunnel

The pedestrian tunnel, a chief concern of MacAusland's since its original proposal, continues to worry the S.A. President. MacAusland's main objection is the amount of money projected for construction of the tunnel. He hopes that this proposed sum may decrease soon.

Last year, MacAusland contacted several city officials in order to express his concern with the plans. At that time, he was told that if he suggested a feasible alternative, it would be considered.

MacAusland has devised a temporary alternative solution. He hopes to utilize student crossing guards to alleviate the traffic congestion. The SA president commented, however, that "this may not necessarily solve the problems in the long run."

The biggest problem, as MacAusland sees it, is not handling traffic, but synchronizing students crossing at the intersection. The traffic lights are not used, he stated, probably because their timing inconveniences students.

Plans for the S.A.

MacAusland's plans for the Student Association are varied and still developing. Recently, S.A. officials discovered a $40,000 surplus of funds. They reinvested this money into a ninety-day bond which matured on September 6.

At this time, MacAusland feels, "As far as I'm concerned, the money's up for grabs." He would like to see it used for student activities, not as capital in a savings account. MacAusland suggested several uses for the money, including increased funding of the S.A. Concert Bureau, extra money to new S.A. organizations, and the purchase of two to three thousand dollars worth of bicycles for student use.

MacAusland and his associates have been working also on improving Billings Center. Through the use of a mason from Barre, they plan to restore the fireplace in the main lobby of Billings to working order. This will cost approximately $900, which is allotted in the Billings Center Furniture Repair Fund.

The S.A. will sponsor a voter registration drive this fall. MacAusland commented that "A student spends a lot of time in Burlington and has a right to vote and have a say in Burlington affairs."

Additionally, MacAusland has tentative plans for a computerized communications system which would offer daily listings of ride information, athletic events, off-campus housing and a campus-wide lost and found.

MacAusland hopes to decrease the lengthy rhetoric in the S.A. Senate by "pre-discussing issues so we can present detailed information to the senators without super long discussions." He feels the "meetings will go quicker and be livelier."

Other plans for the Student Association include an organizational fair on September 18. MacAusland hopes this will show students where their money goes. S.A. senatorial elections will be held on October 1.

Approximately $1750 of the fund's money was utilized this summer to carpet the second floor balcony and to buy new chairs. MacAusland hopes to purchase bean-bag chairs and a television set for the North Den. The television set would be paid for by the Billings Center Governing Board.

Women's Movement Maintains Low Profile At UVM

by Scott Cahoon

Women are the largest of the long series of groups who have felt oppressed and deprived of their rights by American society. Since the suffragette movement of the 1920's, women, as a group, have maintained a low profile, taken for granted both by men and by themselves.

The women's liberation movement, as if no longer wishes to be named, is maintaining something of a low profile at UVM also. The (what shall I call it?) feminist movement here is presently represented by the Women's Caucus which, despite extensive coverage in the Cynic, remains a mystery to many people on campus.

Made up of students, faculty and administrators, the Women's Caucus has not yet applied for recognition by the S.A. Senate, although one of its sub-groups, the Student Affairs and Student Counseling Committee, has done so. According to President Julie Delaricheliere, the Caucus hopes to be a broad-based "umbrella organization," covering many aspects of the women's movement.

The primary goals of the Caucus at this point in time are the establishment of two centers: one to deal with problems peculiar to women, the other to provide day-care for children. Other goals include an increase in the number of women faculty members, investigations of the financial aid system and athletic department scholarships, and the raising of funds to bring women speakers to campus.

"There's not a lot of jargon thrown around at Women's Caucus meetings," says Melanie Choukas, a student associated with the caucus. "It's just a good practical way to get things done. Most of the members don't think of themselves as women's libbers or feminists."

To be sure, the caucus is not your common everyday group of radical hotheads who light bombs at the slightest hint of chauvinist piggishness. "We want the University to help us," says Ms. Delaricheliere, "so we're not going to alienate anyone."

According to Ms. Choukas, the caucus also fosters a psychological sense of unity. "Women as a group are much more effective in pressuring the administration," she says. "The group solidarity encourages women, builds their confidence, and breaks down the suspicion they have traditionally held for each other."

Suspicion? "Yes. Women are encouraged in society to compete with each other to try and get the best man."

The women's center is seen as another step towards the goal of unity among women. Right now members of the caucus envision the center as being a place where women can get (non-sexist) advice about careers, academic affairs and other personal problems. Also included will be a library of literature relating to women. The center will grow, Ms. Delaricheliere says, as women's problems on campus become more well-defined.

Some (mostly men) while supporting the women's movement in general, have criticized the idea of a women's center because of its equal-but-separate character. Certainly women must have equal rights, but does this mean they have to cut

St. Anselm's

St. Anselm's is a building which brings together many different people for various reasons. Although it is the Episcopal Chapel, it also houses the Protestant Associates in Ministry and the Prayer Corner of the Campus Crusade. It has been and will be the meeting place for many programs: films, discussions, lectures, parties, fellowship, meditation, and various activities.

However, most important of all is that St. Anselm's is a place where different people can come together in many different ways and share those things which are important to them. Most of us have places to play sports, to watch t.v., to fool around. But many of us long for a place to be serious, to be quiet and alone, to be quiet and with others, to pray, to talk about things that have been bugging us for a while.

Starting this Tuesday night, September 24, GOD–TALK. The first series of three discussions will be on Prayer and Meditation. There will be three parts to the discussion: 1. Prayer– what I was taught and what I do (Sept. 24); 2. Prayer in various religious traditions (Oct. 1); 3. Prayer as a Christian discipline in my present life (Oct 8). Time is 7:30 p.m. at St. Anselm's. Chaplain Appleyard will lead the discussion.

Episcopal Chaplain Jon Appleyard personally invites you to come up to the chapel, "I need your ideas and thoughts for programs. I am wide open to your suggestions. Please feel free to drop in. I am there most of the morning, Tuesday through Friday."

Schedule

Schedule for services: St. Anselm's Episcopal Chapel on the Redstone Campus. Holy Eucharist: Sunday 9 a.m. and Tuesday 10 p.m.. Morning prayer: Monday through Friday 7:15 a.m. (on Tuesday and Thursday Discussion follows).

Extravaganza

UVM's football season will be kicked off this week with a Greek extravaganza starting Friday night. The University Band and cheerleaders will be leading a pep rally, complete with bonfire, out by the fieldhouse. There will also be an all-Greek camp-out in the vicinity of Post Field. Along with the fire-up, there will be a barbeque Saturday around 10 a.m. Everyone is welcome, and urged to cheer UVM to victory over Norwich at Centennial Field.

Anti-Ford?

A meeting for all those interested in organizing an "appropriate" reception for President Gerald Ford's October 7 visit to UVM's Patrick Gymnasium will be held Thursday, September 12 at 4 p.m. in the Billings Center Round Room. Special invitations are extended to those who strongly oppose a pardon for former president Nixon and not blanket amnesty for war resisters.

What is the tower of clay spheres that appeared on the UVM Green during the summer? It's "Totem," a sculpture created by Dave Dobson. He made the spheres without a pottery wheel. They are hollow inside and contain steel supports. Dobson, who has just completed two years of teaching pottery in the Experimental Program, said he may be "putting up others – here and elsewhere."

IRA Schedules Fall Plans

The Inter Residential Association, better known as the I.R.A. will hold elections for hall representatives on Wed., Sept. 18th. Any hall residents who want to represent their dorm on the I.R.A. council should have their names to the resident advisor by noon, Mon. Sept. 16th. The I.R.A. meets weekly to hear complaints and constructive ideas concerning all aspects of resident hall living, and decides upon policies and allocations of financial resources. All students living in resident halls have already paid a three dollar fee to I.R.A. Two dollars go to specific dorm-sponsored activities and one dollar goes to the I.R.A. council treasury for campus-wide programs and facilities. Each resident of UVM's resident halls is, therefore, a member of I.R.A.

Besides being an excellent way of keeping abreast of what's happening and participating in I.R.A. related matters, serving as a representative is an education in itself, learning the different aspects of programming and policy making. Interested students should get their names to their resident advisor early and start campaigning! For further information call Candy Peck at 3305.

Remember: IRA Elections September 18th!

Amateur student photographers on campuses throughout the United States can now win up to $1,500 in Nikon photography equipment, first prize in the second annual Nikon/Nutshell Student Photo Contest announced today by Nikon Inc.

In all, students will be competing for over 186 prizes totaling $8,750 in value in this year's photo contest, sponsored jointly by Nikon and Nutshell magazine. Nutshell is a network of local/national educational publications currently being distributed free to 1,050,000 new college students.

"This is an increase in both the number and total value of prizes awarded in our initial contest in 1973-74," Myron Charnes, director of public relations for Nikon, stated in announcing the competition. "Last year students at 74 different colleges and universities won 156 prizes worth $7,600. Because of this initial success, we have expanded this year's contest.

Barbara Kelly, University of Kansas, and Philip J. F. Hopkins, San Diego State University, won first prize in the black and white and color divisions respectively. Other top winners represented Michigan State, Western Kentucky and Ohio Universities and the University of Colorado Medical Center in Denver.

Charnes announced also that the theme of this year's contest is College Life.

"Winning photos will be those that capture and communicate effectively and creatively a story or stories

As in last year's contest, according to Charnes, there is no entry fee and students may use any type camera in the competition.

First place winners in each of the two contest categories (black & white and color) will receive $1,500 in Nikon equipment. Two runnersup will each win $1,000 in equipment. Selected winning entries will also be published nationally.

The contest, which runs through January 24, 1975, is open to only amateur photographers.

Copies of the entry brochure containing complete details and official entry forms are available from local participating Nikon dealers or by writing: Nikon/Nutshell Student Photo Contest, P.O. Box 9058, Knoxville, Tn. 37920, and various locations on campus.

Ski Areas Plan Show

Last year, the UVM Ski Club sponsored an extremely successful ski show. Ski areas such as Smuggler's Notch, Mad River Glen, Sugarbush, Bolton Valley, and others provided entertaining movies and displays.

Ski shops, including the Swiss Chalet, Valuga, Alpine Ski Haus, Moriarities, and Eastern Mountain Sports (EMS) supplied valuable information concerning downhill skiing, cross country skiing, and camping.

This year's show hopefully can outdo last year's success. However, we do need volunteers to work on and to support the events.

If you are interested, please call Rob Kornfeld at 862-6119 or come to the ski meeting on Tuesday, September 17 at 8 p.m. in Wright Dining Hall.

A meeting of ski club members will take place within a few weeks.

'No Parking'

Due to the new drive in front of the theatre, a section of University Place has been designated as "no parking" by the City of Burlington during the period from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. The additional room is needed so that traffic won't be impeded by the flow of cars entering and exiting from the drive.

First Gay Dance Of The Fall

The first gay dance this fall, open to the gay community in Burlington, will be held this Saturday, September 14, at 73 Church Street from 9 p.m. on. All gay men and women are heartily welcomed. Gay dances are usually held once a month, and plans are being considered to hold a gay dance on campus later this fall.

Every Thursday evening from 7–10 counselling for gay men and women by their peers is available at the Vermont Women's Health Center, presently in Colchester, but moving within the next week or so to a downtown location next to the State Theatre on Bank Street. Those interested may contact the Women's Switchboard number for women's groups. Men interested in joining a bi- and gay men's rap group may phone 658-3339 for further information.

Although there are no gay bars, as such, in town, gays frequently meet at a "mixed" bar downtown, The Hi-Hat, on Main Street.
